Congressional Record.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 25, 1920.

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1920.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Ball	Kendrick	New	Smoot
Calder	Knox	Norris	Spencer
Capper	Lodge	Nugent	Swanson
Chamberlain	McCormick	Overman	Thomas
Comer	McCumber	Page	Underwood
Curtis	McLean	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fernald	McNary	Ransdell
Gay	Moses	Sheppard

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are absent on official business.

Mr. SPENCER. I announce that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] are engaged in a committee hearing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The roll of absentees will be called.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. STERLING, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. WALSH of Montana answered to their names when called.

Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. FALL, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. HENDERSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are absent on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. WATSON, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. GLASS, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. DIAL, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. HARDING, and Mr. SMITH of Arizona entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When the Senate took a recess yesterday we had under consideration the amendment on page 44, beginning with line 13, the item relative to Leon Springs Military Reservation in Texas.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from New York yield to me, that I may withdraw a motion to reconsider?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GASTONIA, N. C.

Mr. OVERMAN. A few days ago I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 4332) to exchange the present Federal building and site at Gastonia, N. C., for a new site and building passed the Senate, and I asked that the bill be recalled from the House of Representatives. I now ask leave to withdraw the motion to reconsider, so that the bill may go forward to the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

FINANCIAL POLICY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 17th instant, information relative to what steps the Federal Reserve Board purposes to take or to recommend to the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to meet the existing inflation of currency and credits and consequent high prices, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4163) to incorporate the Roosevelt Memorial Association.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5416. An act to authorize corporations organized in the District of Columbia to change their names;

H. R. 8067. An act to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia, to define the duties of the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8535. An act to provide for the redistribution of general taxes and special assessments due and payable on real estate in the District of Columbia in cases of subdivision or sales of land therein;

H. R. 9036. An act to repeal and annul certain parts of the charter and lease granted and made to the Washington Market Co. by act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington Market Company," approved May 20, 1870;

H. R. 10004. An act to authorize the widening of Georgia Avenue between Fairmont Street and Gresham Place NW.;

H. R. 11329. An act to provide for the sale by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of certain land in the District of Columbia acquired for a school site, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12887. An act establishing the liability of hotel proprietors and innkeepers in the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions of the Near East Relief Philadelphia Committee, of Pennsylvania, in favor of the United States taking a mandate for Armenia, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the city council and Chamber of Commerce of Sheboygan, Mich., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McLEAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 4436) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 632) thereon.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11030) for the relief of the Woodford Bank & Trust Co., of Versailles, Ky., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 633) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4324) for the relief of William C. Brown, reported it without amendment.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WALSH of Montana:

A bill (S. 4440) providing for the allotment of lands within the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4441) to authorize the purchase of site, preparation of plans and specifications, and construction of building for use as a foreign branch station for the post office at New York, N. Y.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 4442) for the relief of Perley Morse & Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 4443) for the relief of Morgan Miller; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 4444) for the relief of Claude L. Seiler; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 4445) to provide for the transfer of the steamship Martha Washington to Cosulich Societa Triestina di Navigazione, an Italian corporation of Trieste, and directing the United States Shipping Board to make delivery of the said steamship and to determine, award, and pay just compensation for use of the said steamship; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. WALSH of Montana:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 204) to appropriate out of the funds of the Flathead Tribe of Indians the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to bring test suits in the United States court, district of Montana, to determine the right of the Government to issue patents in fee to members of the Flathead Tribe, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 205) to appropriate out of the funds of the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to bring test suits in the United States court, district of Montana, to determine the right of the Government to issue patents in fee to members of the Blackfeet Tribe, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WARREN (for Mr. PHIPPS) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,500 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of a motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicle for use of the superintendent and employees in connection with the general park work at the Rocky Mountain National Park, Colo., etc., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also (for Mr. PHIPPS) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor cycles for use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work at the Rocky Mountain National Park, Colo., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $487,500 for foremen draftsmen, architectural draftsmen, and apprentice draftsmen, etc., in the Supervising Architect's Office, Treasury Department, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,200 to pay Dennis M. Kerr for extra and expert services rendered the Committee on Pensions during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and $1,200 to pay Robert W. Farrar for indexing and extra services as clerk to the Committee on Pensions, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. DIAL. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 5726) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. LODGE. I submit the conference report on House bill 11960, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill. It has been formerly before the Senate, and, as the Senate is aware, one amendment the House voted down. It has now been adjusted so as to meet the objection of the House, and it is a unanimous report adopted by the conferees.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 10, and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, and 14, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$480,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$900,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"For the purchase of an embassy building and grounds at Santiago, Chile, and for making necessary minor repairs and alterations in the building to put it into proper condition, $130,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, is hereby made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for the objects and purposes designated by said act of appropriation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"FEES FOR PASSPORTS AND VISÉS.

"SECTION 1. From and after the 1st day of July, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application for a passport and $9 for each passport issued to a citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the right of the Secretary of State by regulation to authorize the retention by State officials of the fee of $1 for executing an application for a passport: And provided further, That no fee shall be collected for passports issued to officers or employees of the United States proceeding abroad in the discharge of their official duties, or to members of their immediate families, or to seamen, or to widows, children, parents, brothers, and sisters of American soldiers, sailors, or marines, buried abroad whose journey is undertaken for the purpose and with the intent of visiting the graves of such soldiers, sailors, or marines, which facts shall be made a part of the application for the passport.

"SEC. 2. From and after the 1st day of July, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application of an alien for a visé and $9 for each visé of the passport of an alien: Provided, That no fee shall be collected from any officer of any foreign Government or members of his immediate family, its armed forces, or of any State, district, or municipality thereof, traveling to or through the United States, or of any soldiers coming within the terms of the public resolution approved October 19, 1918 (40 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1014).

"SEC. 3. The validity of a passport or visé shall be limited to two years, unless the Secretary of State shall by regulation limit the validity of such passport or visé to a shorter period.

"SEC. 4. Whenever the appropriate officer within the United States of any foreign country refuses to visé a passport issued by the United States, the Department of State is hereby authorized upon request in writing and the return of the unused passport within six months from the date of issue to refund to the person to whom the passport was issued the fees which have been paid to Federal officials, and the money for that purpose is hereby appropriated and directed to be paid upon the order of the Secretary of State.

"SEC. 5. Section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled 'An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad' (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1228), authorizing the Secretary of State to issue passports to certain persons not citizens of the United States is hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

H. C. LODGE,
W. E. BORAH,
ATLEE POMERENE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STEPHEN G. PORTER,
JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
H. D. FLOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what disposition was made of the amendment in disagreement involving, as I understand, the payment of a certain amount for the issuing of passports.

Mr. LODGE. Nothing was done to change the fees. The fees remain the same. There was objection in the House. The objection was to the clause giving a consul the right to refuse a visé if on observation he thought the applicants were obnoxious to our immigration laws. The House objected to that provision. There was one other small point, the filing of a certificate as well as a visé. It is now a unanimous report. What the House objected to has been eliminated.

The report was agreed to.

GIFT OF J. PIERPONT MORGAN (H. DOC. NO. 793).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit for your consideration a report from the Secretary of State announcing that Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, of New York City, offers to the Government of the United States, as a gift to the Nation for use by the Ambassador of the United States in London as an official residence, the house property situated in that city known as Nos. 13 and 14 Prince's Gate, Hyde Park.

The attention of the Congress is invited to Mr. Morgan's statement that the house is now vacant and that consequently he would be glad to learn as soon as possible whether the Government of the United States will be disposed to accept his offer.

WOODROW WILSON.

(Inclosure: Report of the Secretary of State.)

THE WHITE HOUSE,
May 25, 1920.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 8067. An act to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia, to define the duties of the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8535. An act to provide for the redistribution of general taxes and special assessments due and payable on real estate in the District of Columbia in cases of subdivision or sales of land thereon;

H. R. 10004. An act to authorize the widening of Georgia Avenue between Fairmont Street and Gresham Place NW.;

H. R. 11329. An act to provide for the sale by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of certain land in the District of Columbia acquired for a school site, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12887. An act establishing the liability of hotel proprietors and innkeepers in the District of Columbia.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia:

H. R. 5416. An act to authorize corporations organized in the District of Columbia to change their names; and

H. R. 9036. An act to repeal and annul certain parts of the charter and lease granted and made to the Washington Market Co. by act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington Market Company," approved May 20, 1870.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 44, where the committee report to strike out the proviso beginning after the numerals "$50,000," in line 13, in the following words:

Provided, That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $88,880 for the acquisition of land as an addition to the Leon Springs Military Reservation in Texas, heretofore authorized, and now in use as a target range for Camp Travis, Tex.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, when the Senate had this amendment and somewhat similar amendments under consideration yesterday there were very few Senators present. So, perhaps, I am justified in very briefly describing the motives of the Committee on Military Affairs in striking out this language as it appears in the House bill and in taking the action which it has in respect to the other similar items in the bill.

Prior to the recent war it was not considered the proper function of the Committee on Military Affairs to handle appropriations looking toward permanent investments in land for the Government, whether that land was going to be used by the War Department or by some other department. Appropriations looking toward the purchase of land for the War Department and for all other departments were always handled by the Committee on Appropriations.

During the war, in the confusion and hurry, when a great mass of military legislation had to be put through with little delay and with still less consideration, the War Department, of course, was compelled to ask the Military Affairs Committee to combine all kinds of items together in one bill. So we found ourselves handling appropriations for the purchase of land for the War Department. That has also been going on since the war, incident to the great effort to straighten out the tangles in connection with land matters, for, of course, the war left us in a state of chaos with respect to these questions. The Military Affairs Committee during the last year, or certainly since the armistice, has endeavored to help out along this line; but the confusion caused by such a practice here in the Senate and in the Congress at large is most regrettable, for, while the Military Affairs Committee is handling appropriations for the purchase of land for the War Department the Appropriations Committee is doing the same thing, and is also handling appropriations for the purchase of land or the perfection of title to land for other departments. The result is that neither committee knows what the other is doing.

There has been grave complaint not only of the duplication of effort but of the confused condition which has resulted. As we stand here to-day there is no committee whose chairman or members can tell their colleagues in the Senate just what the proper program for the retention of these lands should be, how much should be purchased in the future, and how much that we now have on hand should be sold. So in the consideration of the pending bill the Senate Military Affairs Committee decided that we would do our best to have the old practice restored, namely, that only the Committee on Appropriations should handle items of this sort. We are convinced that unless we go back to that very healthy custom we shall never get the land question straightened out.

The Government is interested, Mr. President, in literally scores of pieces of land all over the country which it had acquired or had partly acquired during the war.

The Military Affairs Committee feels that it has gone as far as it should, and that in the interest of simplicity and a proper understanding by the Senate and the House of Representatives these problems should be handled by the committee that always did handle them before the war. So the Military Affairs Committee, believing that to be the proper practice, struck out of the House bill the land-purchase appropriations which had been adopted by the House, and in doing so urged Senators and Members of the House who were interested in them to take the particular items up with the Appropriations Committee and ascertain if that committee would be willing to consider them in connection with the sundry civil appropriation bill, where they belong.

Some of these projects are desirable; it may be said that one or two of them, perhaps, constitute emergencies, in that if the Government should act quickly it may save money. The great majority of them, in my humble judgment, may be postponed indefinitely for further consideration until we determine just how much of an establishment of a military character or a naval character, or in connection with any other Governmental activity, we are going to have. None of the projects which the Military Affairs Committee struck out of the pending bill was deemed by a majority of the committee to be of such an emergent character as to warrant the committee in forcing them upon the attention of the Senate from our committee. We believe that the particular items which we struck out should go to the Appropriations Committee, and that if that committee did not immediately act upon them, either in the affirmative or in the negative, the Government in the meantime would, at least, be able to get along, and that incidentally the taxpayer would have a chance to catch his breath.

The Senate late upon yesterday afternoon, with only a few Senators present, overturned the judgment of the committee with respect to the purchase of Selfridge Field. That is a close question; many people think that item should be retained; others think it is not an emergency matter or, at least, not a matter of immediate emergency. Of course, the Senate is master of the situation, and can at any time refuse to follow the lead of the committee.

The question now before the Senate is the purchase of land at Leon Springs, in Texas, to complete a project which the War Department has had in mind. I think some options are involved. It may be wise to make the purchase now or it may be perfectly possible to postpone it for a while, but the hope of the Military Affairs Committee is that all these matters may be considered together. They can not all be considered together and as part of one great program unless they are all considered by one committee; and the one committee to do it is the Appropriations Committee.

That is the whole situation. If the Senate does not desire to go back to its old custom, which has prevailed with such advantage to the country, of course, it need not do so.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I agree thoroughly with what the Senator from New York has said, but I wish to call attention to the fact that unless the Government acts in this particular matter, and unless we embody in the pending bill a provision for the purchase of the additional land at the Leon Springs Military Reservation, the Government will be involved in a large financial loss.

A target range has been constructed and completed at a cost of $70,000 on the land which it is proposed to buy. Unless this land is purchased by June 30 the option will expire and the land can not be purchased at all at the present price. A target range is a fundamental military necessity in the vicinity of Fort Sam Houston, which is one of the largest military posts in the country, and its position with reference to the Mexican border gives it added importance.

Furthermore, the Government will be under obligations to put the land in the shape in which it was when it was taken over, and this will cost as much as the present price of the land. So the Government will lose not only what it will cost to construct another target range—the War Department having stated that it will now cost $120,000 to construct a similar range in some other locality near San Antonio and near Fort Sam Houston—but it will lose the amount that it will expend in restoring the land to the condition in which it was when it was taken over.

In addition to that, when it takes up the proposition of buying other lands for a target range, the Government will have to pay a larger price than that for which it can secure the land on which the range is now located. Failure to complete the purchase of the land on which this target range is now situated, therefore, will involve the Government in a loss of from $130,000 to $150,000.

It is only for such reasons that I have insisted that an exception be made in this instance to the committee's policy and that the action of the House in providing for this purchase in the Army appropriation bill be concurred in.

Therefore, with all due respect to the committee, of which I am a member, I trust that the Senate will disagree to the amendment reported by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, nothing illustrates better the evil of a number of different agencies of this body recommending the appropriation of money than the instance cited by the Senator from New York. We find numerous committees of this body all of which assume to exercise and do exercise powers of recommending appropriations, and thus to a very large degree controlling public expenditures. It is a waste of breath and print paper to talk about a budget system when the spirit in this body is such that it will not rebuke on every opportune occasion the practice of making appropriations in this way. It certainly is as good an illustration of an unwise method of appropriating money as could be cited. These different items which ought not to be permitted in this bill can at the appropriate time go to the Committee on Appropriations; that committee can consider, in connection with other items of like character, the propriety or impropriety of making such appropriations; but at this time to incorporate them in a general bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, is a departure from sound business principles, whatever may have been the practice prevailing in this body in the past.

It is just such procedure as this, Mr. President, that has brought congressional methods of doing business into disrepute; it is such methods that have caused the very healthy demand for a reform in the method of appropriating money and have led to the urgent desire for a budget system under which estimates shall be submitted by the responsible heads of the departments or by the head of some one department acting for all of the executive departments; but it is the duty of this body, as well as of the other House, by parliamentary methods to limit the powers of their committees to make appropriations. When that is done it will be impossible for such slipshod methods to prevail as now obtain and for such improper items to creep into a bill as are now opposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. President, if these items are permitted to remain with the same propriety, we could insist on the bonus bill being incorporated in this appropriation bill for the Military Establishment. Any Senator could, under the present practice, unless restrained by a sense of propriety, rise in his place here and annex the whole of that bill by way of amendment to this bill, and, if a majority of the Senators so voted, we would be helpless to prevent it.

In that connection, what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] said yesterday morning in regard to the bonus is very pertinent. In addition to his remarks, I wish to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a telegram received by me, together with some comments, to illustrate the impropriety of and the bad business methods involved in inserting such appropriations as that.

The telegram is dated Chicago, May 20, 1920, and is addressed to me. It reads as follows:

LaGrange, Ill., Post 41, American Legion, demands your support to pass bonus bill recommended by our national headquarters. Particularly favor Morgan bill. Reply advising your stand on bill. Your attitude closely watched in this district.

I will now proceed to reply to LaGrange Post.

Mr. President, if the risk undertaken by any service man beyond seas under fire is to be compensated by money, there is not enough minted gold in the treasuries of the civilized Governments of the world to meet it. For one of my family, I would not for all the treasure that could be reached by the appropriations by Congress and the parliaments of the world put them out under the risks involved, if that were the basis on which compensation should be made. If, in a great emergency, my country requires the service of my family, myself, my neighbors, and my constituents, I will vote to the uttermost limit every life required for the service and defense of our country. That is patriotism; and in behalf of both the enlisted men and the drafted one who went into the service prompted by motives of that kind, solely to defend their country as patriots, I protest against the spirit of this telegram and the spirit of the bonus bill in its entirety as a mercenary degradation of an unsullied patriotism.

I reply to this post, therefore, that I am opposed to the bonus bill as a disgraceful deterioration of the patriotism of a great country, and of the thousands and hundreds of thousands of men who went into the service with no such motive.

The men whose good judgment I trust, in whose sincerity I believe, and whose support, either as a private citizen or elsewhere, I value, are those who oppose such a mercenary view of the patriotic sons of this Republic; and therefore I say, with all due respect to the gentlemen sending this telegram to me, that I will not support the bonus, and they can watch my conduct so long and as they see fit.

If the American Legion is inspired by no greater purpose than to loot the American Treasury it is an unworthy organization, and I could wish it were never created. I have met the perverted power of as great an organization as this in my own State and elsewhere. For 20 years I have refused to let the mere officials of the American Federation of Labor dictate to me my course upon public questions, and I will not permit the officers of the American Legion to do so. In the present crisis I will, according to the lights I have, protect the Treasury of my country, the taxpayers thereof, and the public welfare as well. I trust these gentlemen will be satisfied with my explanation. If not, they can adopt such course as they see proper.

In that connection, Mr. President, before I conclude, I have in my hand two pictures taken from the Washington Star of Sunday, May 23, 1920. One is of a young gentleman in coat of fancy cut, with hair approved by the best barbers of the country. He wears riding boots, and below is this inscription:

Edsal Ford at Hot Springs, Va., for the spring months.

He is not a member of the American Legion, honorary or otherwise. He does not possess the qualifications making him eligible thereto.

On the other side is a new photograph of Sergt. Alvin York, from the hill country of Tennessee, a stalwart-looking American. Most of us saw him when he was in Washington, when he returned from the service. He has red blood. He offered his service in a great emergency. I have not heard his voice raised for any bonus. He is not at Hot Springs, Va., clothed in the latest style of wearing apparel, wearing riding boots, but he has citizens' clothes that anyone might wear in the commoner walks of life; and instead of enjoying a vacation during the spring months at Hot Springs, Va., he is now engaged in raising funds for religious work.

Here are two Americans, not of a kind. Look upon this picture—if I may paraphrase a well-known saying—and then upon this, and which one would the prophet say we ought to follow?

Of course I shall be immediately charged with having malevolent designs upon the Ford family. I only use him as a horrible example of what not to be; the other as an example of a 100 per cent American, in peace and in war, with the old-fashioned conscience which discriminates between right and wrong, between duty and neglect.

Therefore, Mr. President, in such matters as these that refer to the Military Establishment, this certainly is a good time to begin to cut off these items and send them where they belong, because eventually they relate to all these and a thousand and one other subjects that I shall comment on, I trust, in due time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the response which the Senator from Illinois made to the telegram just read into the RECORD surprises no one who has watched his course as a Member of this body. The moral courage and fearlessness which has always characterized the Senator here, although frequently misdirected in my judgment, has been a great encouragement to me; and I am delighted that he occupies the same attitude regarding the proposed bonus raid upon the Treasury that I do. The fact stimulates me to a renewed opposition to that and similar measures designed in this time of stress and trial to secure revenues from an exhausted Public Treasury.

Of course, the Senator has received, as I have, a vast number of communications from members of the American Legion and from ex-service men, bitterly protesting against the consideration of the bonus. I quite agree that if the purpose of the legion is to loot the Treasury it would have been better for the soldiers and for the country if it had never been organized; but I indulge the hope that the outlines of its purpose as given to the public when it was organized were sincerely announced and will be religiously observed.

One of the most encouraging evidences supporting my confidence in the ultimate prevalence of this splendid program is a contribution by Richard H. Waldo, president of the City Club of New York Post of the American Legion, American Expeditionary Forces, and business manager of the Stars and Stripes, to the New York Times of last Sunday, whose argument is preceded by the assertion that most of the 5,000,000 ex-service people disapprove of the bonus. I ask permission to have this letter inserted in the RECORD as apropos of the telegram which the Senator has just read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BADNESS OF THE BONUS—AMERICAN LEGION OFFICER'S ARGUMENT THAT MOST OF FIVE MILLION EX-SERVICE PEOPLE DISAPPROVE.

(By Richard H. Waldo, president of the City Club of New York Post of the American Legion, A. E. F., business manager of the Stars and Stripes.)

One of the most amazing things about the American Legion is the position in which its 550,000 members find themselves placed with regard to the bonus. I am constantly meeting friends who say:

"This bonus plan is bad. It will saddle the country with an enormous debt, create an army of pensioners, and do vastly more harm than good. But, of course, you are a legion man and can't see it that way."

The trouble is I am a legion man and can see it that way. And there are thousands of others who feel exactly as I do about it.

The legion is divided; it is not united on the bonus question. The public is just beginning to realize that. For weeks it has been obliged to listen to the appeals of the probonus element until the impression has quite naturally gone forth that the ex-service men, as a body and to a man, are for this $500 or $600 "hand-out" which it is now proposed Congress should vote to every man and woman who served during the war. Nothing could be further from the truth.

THE FIVE MILLION.

There are a whole lot of officers and men in the legion who don't want the bonus—don't want it for themselves and don't believe it is the thing that the majority of ex-service men would want if it were put up to them in the right light. Rabbi Wise has described the bonus legislation as a "disgrace" and an "insult to the youth of America." It would be if the youth of America, the men who did the fighting in the war, were asking for it. But no such thing has happened. The 5,000,000 men and women in whose name certain American Legion leaders are demanding passage of the bonus bill have never been consulted, never been given an opportunity to vote yes or no on the proposition. What the sentiments of these five millions are, therefore, is purely a matter of guesswork.

We do know that a considerable number are dead set against the bonus. In some cases they have gone so far as to register their disapproval, in defiance of the legion's national commander. Right here in New York 41 posts of the legion have voted an emphatic "no" on the bonus plan, while only the other day, when a movement was begun within the legion to get the views of members throughout the country, there was instant response from more than 500 cities to which telegrams were sent.

The legion is facing a crisis and its leaders know it. It has progressed thus far on the theory that it is a military organization in which obedience to officers' commands is placed above all other considerations. But the present seems to be as good an occasion as any to point out that such a system has its drawbacks, and to those of us who believe democracy should be the controlling spirit of the legion and that even a minority deserves a hearing, the time has come to speak out.

SOME INSIDE HISTORY.

A little of the inside history of the American Legion may be worth recalling. Outsiders may not be aware that from the very beginning it was the purpose and desire of the founders of the legion to steer clear of the very thing they now find themselves entangled with. Bonuses and pensions were to be tabooed. I was in France when the preliminary organization meetings were held, and I know whereof I speak. The policy of the legion was to be "hands off," so far as that supposedly bottomless pit, the United States Treasury, was concerned.

This same spirit survived the trip homeward and this same spirit prevailed later at the meetings in St. Louis and Minneapolis, when the legion formally came into being. There was talk of a bonus, but with a clear-cut declaration that no pressure would be used on Congress to have one given. Publicly many of the legion leaders preserved a discreet silence on the bonus subject. Privately they almost unanimously condemned it.

But the legion was young and needed members. There were membership campaigns, and presently it was found that something more attractive than the mere honor of wearing a legion button and paying dues would have to be offered to get the men to come in. There was another organization of veterans in the field, and its glowing promises to secure extra money from the Government were threatening to cut into the legion membership. Faced by this situation and desiring above all things to swell the numbers, the legion leaders gradually weakened. Before long "Join the legion and get a bonus" was being used as a convenient slogan to attract new members into the organization.

That was all there was to it in the beginning. Armed with the "Join the legion and get a bonus" slogan, the recruiting sergeants found it easy to reach a great majority of those who were desirous of getting the extra money. The membership rolls increased. Nevertheless, the total paid-up membership of the legion to-day is less than 12 per cent of the total number of ex-service men and women and considerably less than the total number discharged for disability, notwithstanding that a large part of these have been recruited into the organization.

THE LEADERS' IDEA.

It was a deliberate play for the probonus element among the ex-service men, and it succeeded in getting a considerable slice of them. All the time the leaders who had been elected by the no-bonus element, but who had found it expedient to face about, were letting it be known among their friends that they hoped, as one of them put it, "to kiss the bonus movement to death." It was a case of the end justifying the means, of doing evil that good might come.

Meanwhile antibonus recruiting for membership steadily dropped off, and has now entirely ceased. Many antibonus members will no longer attend meetings, and in more than one post the question has seriously been considered of withdrawing entirely from the organization.

This, briefly, is the process by which members of the American Legion—and, by inference, all ex-service men—have been swung into line behind the bonus agitation. There never has been a referendum on the bonus within the legion, much less among the vast majority of ex-service men and women outside of the legion. Some of us know that a strong sentiment does exist within the legion against the bonus. We believe, further, that there is antibonus sentiment just as strong, if not stronger, among the nearly 4,500,000 ex-service people who thus far have shown no desire to affiliate with the legion.

Why not take a referendum? Why not call a halt on further bonus activities in Congress and see, first of all, just where the 5,000,000 men and women chiefly concerned stand on the question? For some reason the leaders of the legion have never taken kindly to the referendum idea.

LEGION NEEDS MONEY.

It is perhaps not generally known that the finances of the legion are not in the best of shape. There is between $500,000 and $600,000 owing by national headquarters. The bulk of this is owed to the individual leaders and their friends. At the time when the legion was forming, money, of course, was needed, and those who could do so and were sufficiently interested came forward with what was required. This money has yet to be paid back. There have been heavy expenses. The dues of the organization are $2 a year, $1 of which goes to national headquarters. But of this $1, 75 cents goes to defray the cost of publishing the Weekly, the legion's official organ, which is sent to every member. So that national headquarters has the use of only 25 cents per member to meet running expenses and old debts.

Under these conditions prospects for paying back the $500,000 or $600,000 loan are not of the brightest. But they would be considerably improved if the bonus legislation were to go through. Knowing that the antibonus feeling is strong, certain of the legion leaders make no secret of the fact that they expect many members will not touch a penny of their extra pay, but will willingly assign their claims over to national headquarters. One member of the finance committee figures that as much as 5 per cent—approximately $60,000,000—of the total bonus money can be counted upon from these assignments, and the legion permanently financed from the income.

So much for the interest of national headquarters in the pending legislation. Now, as to the ex-soldier. I believe it may safely be said that the chief concern of all healthy ex-service men—and they constitute by far the large majority of veterans—is to see that the wounded and disabled and the dependents of those who were killed in the war get what is coming to them in the way of fair treatment at the hands of Congress and the country generally.

With the ex-service man these people come first. He wants to see that they get a square deal. Everybody knows it is going to be a tremendous job. We are only just beginning to get the machinery running properly. Yet it is now proposed to set up on top of this still other machinery which, as many of us see it, would inevitably come into conflict and cause interference with the work for the wounded. Disorganization would be bound to result all along the line, and the wounded and disabled and dependent of the war would in the end be made to suffer for the benefit of those who had the good fortune to come through unscratched. That is something no healthy ex-service man wants to see happen.

THE 642,000 DISABILITY LIST.

Take the case of the men discharged for disability. There are 642,000 of these—a far greater number than it was ever thought this country was going to have—and to date they can not be said to have received more than a part of that generous treatment which it is the people's intention that all disabled men shall have. Add to these the uncounted number of dependents of the dead who are obliged to live, at the very most, on a pittance of $57.50 a month—with the dollar worth about one-half what it was when that allowance was made.

It should not be forgotten that we have 76,000 mental disability cases, many of them due to shell shock. Of these only a small number are receiving anything like adequate treatment. At the present time 2,000 of them are confined among the criminally insane, there being no other place to put them.

The cost of caring for these people is going to be enormous—far greater than any one dreamed of in the beginning. First estimates placed the figures at $60,000,000. Yet this year we have spent $264,000,000, and for the coming year we are preparing to spend $450,000,000. It is a safe prediction that by the year after next the sum will have jumped to $750,000,000, and that three years hence it will be a round billion dollars. That is what we have got to be prepared for for the next generation. It is worth remembering that this year's bill for pensions prior to the great war is nearly $300,000,000.

TEN BILLION IN TEN YEARS.

It is going to take $10,000,000,000 at the very least in the next 10 years to take care of the wounded, the disabled, and the dependents of the dead.

But—join the legion and get a bonus. The slogan, having reached Washington, has blossomed out in a bill which, if enacted, will add anywhere from $1,200,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 to the already heavy burden. If the pending legislation goes through, it will mean that beginning April 1, 1921, every man or woman who served overseas during the war will receive $1.25 a day, and every man or woman who served on this side will receive $1 a day as extra compensation for his or her services. The maximum which any one can receive for overseas service is $625 and the maximum for home service $500. Payments are to be made quarterly over a period of three years.

It is a monumental scheme proposed by a handful of legion officials who have never taken the trouble to find out whether the majority of the ex-service men whom they profess to represent really favor it. It is nothing more nor less than a service pension—variously styled bonus, adjusted compensation, and beneficial legislation—but a pension nevertheless, the very thing the country thought it had done away with by setting up machinery for war-risk insurance, rehabilitation, and vocational training. Under the proposed bonus law there will be set up additional tax-eating machinery that will be good for three years, and probably more, as the history of such things goes. It will be a vast organization reaching out into every corner of the country and providing the politicians with ideal accommodations for reaching the "soldier vote." The political party that captures it first is not going to surrender the advantage without a struggle.

The political possibilities of the thing are unlimited. Few people realize what the soldier vote means to many an otherwise independent officeholder. A Congressman from the Middle West told me the other day that he was strongly opposed to the bonus bill.

"But," he added almost apologetically, "I was elected last time by only 1,100 plurality and there are 6,000 soldier votes in my district."

There are exceptions, as in the case of Congressman HERBERT PELL, of New York, who frankly admits that when he votes against the bonus bill he will "commit political suicide," but these are few and far between. Unfortunately, the bonus bill—like a good deal of other legislation—is being considered less on its merits than on its vote-getting possibilities.

CASE OF WALTER REED HOSPITAL.

In this connection, the experience of the Walter Reed Hospital might be cited. It is the experience of this institution and others in a similar position to know that a very large percentage of the men who have back pay or bonus money paid to them will not work while that money lasts. The proposal to pay quarterly for three years sums of $500 and $625 to ex-service men certainly will not lessen the condition of money expectation. On the contrary, it is quite certain to prove an unsettling force with thousands of recipients.

To make matters worse there is apparently no provision to prevent claims from being turned into cash in advance. Ex-service men who really do not need the money, but who may be counted on to take it if they can get it, will be doing wonders if they miss the opportunity to assign their claims to their "uncle" for a discount. Another gentleman of unsavory memory may be expected to do thriving business. He is the fifty-fifty pension attorney. Driven out of business under the war-risk insurance act, which put a 10 per cent limit on attorney fees, the fifty-fifty claim adjuster is sure to enjoy a new lease of life if the bonus bill becomes law.

Apparently, also, little consideration is being given to the fact that of the 5,000,000 ex-service men the vast majority were benefited both mentally and economically by their experience. They have come home to find their old jobs—or in many cases better ones—waiting for them, while Congress, by continuing for two years the wartime immigration laws, has helped them still further toward getting adjusted. That they have been benefited in other ways is shown by life insurance figures which give the average healthy ex-service man an added expectation of life of five years.

All this, it might be added, is wholly aside from the fundamental principle involved in the bonus fight—the principle of demanding pay for that which was patriotically given—which to many ex-service men is the first and last reason for declaring against the bonus.

Mr. THOMAS. Apropos of Mr. Waldo's communication, I will read a brief clipping from one of the recent issues of Life, suggesting suitable mottoes for those posts of the legion which are urging the bonus:

Patrick Henry said: "Give me liberty or give me death, with compensation for death and a bonus for liberty."

Nathan Hale said: "I only regret that I have but one life to give to my country, for had I nine lives to give, my widow would receive nine pensions."

Stephen Decatur said: "My country, may she ever be right! But right or wrong, my country, and my bonus."

Abraham Lincoln said: "The last full measure of devotion, at $50 per month."

RATES OF INTEREST.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I have in my hand a communication from the Federal Reserve Board in reply to a letter addressed to the board by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] on the 14th instant. As that letter was printed in the RECORD, I think Gov. Harding's reply should receive similar consideration. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if I understood him to say that the letter of the Senator from Oklahoma had been printed in the RECORD?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And the Senator now asks that the reply of Gov. Harding be incorporated in the RECORD?

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator is correct.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 24, 1920.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of the 14th instant was duly received, but unusual pressure of routine business has prevented an earlier reply.

I notice that you renew the suggestion made in your letter of April 27 that the Federal Reserve Board lower the discount rates of Federal reserve banks as a means of helping to restore Liberty bonds to par, and that you take the view that as the Federal reserve banks pay no interest on deposits and that as they made very large earnings last year on a 4 per cent rate that 3 per cent is a rate high enough to enable them to make all the money they are entitled to make out of the public, and you say that "the Federal reserve banks should not be put in the attitude of profiteering or of setting the example of profiteering to member banks."

Your suggestion that the discount rates of the Federal reserve banks be fixed with reference to their dividend requirements is certainly a novel one, but before entering into a discussion of the propriety of fixing rates from this point of view I wish to say something regarding your intimation that the Federal reserve banks are putting themselves in the attitude of profiteering.

Section 7 of the Federal reserve act provides that "after all necessary expenses of a Federal reserve bank have been paid or provided for, the stockholders shall be entitled to receive an annual dividend of 6 per cent on the paid-in capital stock, which dividend shall be cumulative." As originally enacted this section provided further that after dividend claims had been fully met "all the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax, except that one-half of such net earnings shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 40 per cent of the paid-in capital stock of such bank." The act of March 3, 1919, which passed the Senate only as a result of your watchful care throughout an all-night session near the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress, amended section 7 by providing that "after the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met, the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax except that the whole of such net earnings, including those for the year ending December 31, 1918, shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 100 per cent of the subscribed capital stock of such bank, and that thereafter 10 per cent of such net earnings shall be paid into the surplus."

Section 7 also provides that in case a Federal reserve bank should be "dissolved or go into liquidation any surplus remaining after the payment of all debts, dividend requirements as hereinbefore provided, and the par value of the stock shall be paid to and become the property of the United States." On May 21, 1920, the paid-in capital stock of all the 12 Federal reserve banks aggregated $93,786,000. On this basis of capitalization for the year the member banks can receive dividends at the rate of 6 per cent, amounting to $5,627,160; the remainder of the net earnings, however great, will be paid in larger part directly to the Government as a franchise tax, the balance being carried to the surplus funds of the Federal reserve banks with ultimate reversion to the Government. On May 21, 1920, the consolidated statement of the 12 Federal reserve banks shows bills discounted secured by Government war obligations, $1,446,723,000; all other rediscounts for member banks, $1,053,663,000; bills bought in the open market, $417,368,000; making a total of notes and bills rediscounted of $2,917,754,000. At the same time the reserve deposits of member banks were $1,833,665,000, total reserves held were $2,079,538,000, and Federal reserve notes in actual circulation amounted to $3,085,202,000.

The ability of the Federal reserve banks to extend so large a volume of discount accommodations is due to the use of Federal reserve notes, and this fact ought not to be overlooked. It follows, therefore, that the earnings of the Federal reserve banks are derived in larger part from the circulation of Federal reserve notes, which are obligations of the Government. The Federal Reserve Board is authorized in section 16 of the Federal reserve act to require the Federal reserve banks to pay such rate of interest as the board may establish on the amount of Federal reserve notes outstanding, less the amount of gold or gold certificates held by the Federal reserve agents as collateral security. On May 21, after setting aside the reserve of 35 per cent against net deposit liabilities, the combined statement of the Federal reserve banks shows a reserve against Federal reserve notes outstanding of 47.1 per cent. Even though all excess gold were deposited with the Federal reserve agents, there would be 52.9 per cent of the outstanding note issue, or $1,632,071,858, subject to an interest charge, the imposition of which would very materially reduce the apparent earnings of the Federal reserve banks. The act gives the board discretion in the matter, however, and no charge has been imposed, for the reason that the excess earnings of the Federal reserve banks go to the Government in any event.

It seems to me, Senator, that you are disposed in all your discussions of the money and credit situation to ignore the fundamental law of supply and demand. Let me point out a few statements in your last letter which appear to be inconsistent. You state that you are "certainly opposed to inflation," but you are "strongly in favor of the extension of business, increasing production, and improving distribution by extending credits on a stable low-interest rate." And you say, "The expansion of credit for such purposes is justified, but, of course, the expansion of credit beyond the available resources, even for the most important of purposes, is not justified." You say further that "credits ought to be extended at a low rate to the extent of the capacity of the reserve banks for productive purposes," and you intimate that, as the Federal reserve banks pay no interest on deposits, a 3 per cent rate is high enough. While you do not say in direct terms that Federal reserve banks should stand ready to make loans on Liberty bonds and Victory notes at a 3 per cent rate, your letter admits of this construction, although you do say that you do not advocate the reserve banks "lending beyond their resources at any rates or on any securities." You say, "Assuredly, raising the rates of interest will deflate credits, even the credits of the United States, of which I complain; but I am anxious the Federal Reserve Board shall only deflate those credits that require deflation, and not deflate credits of the Government and of legitimate productive business which ought not to be deflated." You say that "The only deflation of credit justified is the deflation of credits employed in speculative loans on investment securities, on real estate, and on commodities for hoarding by profiteers."

From all this I understand your view to be that the Federal reserve banks should lend at a low stable rate on Government securities and on other eligible paper, barring only "speculative loans on investment securities, on real estate, and on commodities for hoarding by profiteers," and that in your judgment this stable low rate ought to be 3 per cent.

You admit the correctness of the observation made in my letter of the 3rd instant that "there is a world-wide demand for capital, and the demand for bank credit in this country for agricultural, commercial, and industrial purposes is heavier than has ever been known before; investment demands for new construction, for the maintenance and equipment of railroads, and for the financing of our foreign trade are very great." You ask: "Are these just demands to be met by denying the credits, or are they to be repressed by raising the rates?" I can not escape the conclusion, Senator, that were the Federal reserve banks to establish the stable low rate proposed by you they would soon reach the limit of their available resources, beyond which point, you state, the expansion of credit, "even for the most important of purposes, is not justified." It seems to me that the adoption of the policy proposed by you would result in a wild scramble for discount accommodations at the Federal reserve banks with an enforced denial of all credit after the first few days.

The board is insisting that all banks use a discriminating judgment in making loans, giving preference to those which are necessary for the production and distribution of the basic necessities of life, such as clothing, food, and fuel, but in the exercise of this discretion it is necessary to have the restraining influence of a rate. It is idle to preach against excessive borrowings and then to invite borrowings by an artificially low rate less than half the current open-market rate.

You have had a good deal to say about the low rates which prevailed in bygone years in England, France, and Belgium, and I might call your attention also to the low rates which prevailed at the Federal reserve banks during the year 1915 when there was no demand for loans. But we are dealing with the pressing problems of the present; changing conditions must be recognized and dealt with as occasion demands. You no doubt know, although you have never called attention to the fact, that official discount rates are high everywhere, even in countries where inflation has been carried to extremes and which are no longer on a gold basis. The official rate in Italy is 5½ per cent, that of the Bank of France is 6 per cent, and that of the Bank of England is 7 per cent, having recently been raised from 6 per cent.

The Federal Reserve Board does not take the view that discount rates should be arbitrarily fixed by it; it recognizes the fact that there are certain basic conditions which affect the demand for and the supply of credit throughout this country and throughout the world, and that the formal establishment of a discount rate is merely an interpretation of these conditions. You call attention to the fact that the open market rate in London during the war was 3½ per cent. It is now 6¾ to 6⅞ per cent against an official bank rate of 7 per cent. You do not question the wisdom of the management of the Bank of England, which you say is conducted by the wisest merchants in the world, although I have always had an idea that many of these merchants are credit merchants or private bankers, as they would be called in this country. The advances in rates in London are evidently due to natural causes, and there has been no attempt to maintain artificially the low rates to which you refer. Why, then, is it not just as reasonable to concede to the directors of the Federal reserve banks and to the Federal Reserve Board some degree of honesty of purpose and intelligence in making the advances in rates of which you complain so vigorously?

From your own figures, Senator, it is clearly impossible for the Federal reserve banks to carry at any rate which may be fixed the entire volume of the Government war obligations, and if a stable low rate of 3 per cent were to be established no very great volume of additional loans could be made, and instead of there being a stabilization of the bond market there would be chaotic conditions instead.

The obligations of the Government of the United States offer the best opportunity for investment in the world to-day. They are being sold now on a most attractive investment basis, and as speculative tendencies are curbed, as the gains of the profiteers are reduced, as commodity prices decline, and as the business and industry of this country settle down to a more normal peace basis, the market value of these securities will rise very rapidly. This conclusion is justified by the experience of the past. The 6 per cent 20-year bonds of the Government during the Civil War sold at a heavy discount (I think they were down at one time to about 80), but two years from the time of their greatest depression they reached par and were selling at a premium of about 25 per cent in 1869, only 12 years before their maturity. I am satisfied that we will have a similar experience with Liberty bonds, provided there are rigid economies in governmental expenditures from this time forth and inflationary tendencies generally are held in check.

I do not know of anything further that I can say regarding the call money rates in New York. You continue to insist that the powers of the Government should be exercised through the offices of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Comptroller of the Currency to remove the causes which lead to fluctuating rates there, and I have already pointed out to you that the interest rates in New York City are regulated by the laws of the State of New York, and that there is nothing that can be done by the Federal Reserve Board or by the Federal reserve bank of New York, except, perhaps, to decline to make loans on Government bonds to banks which in turn lend on stock-exchange collateral. This would result in even higher rates.

It is interesting to note, however, that the high rates of which you complain reached their peak in November, 1919, before the discount rates of the Federal reserve banks had been advanced, and that since the rates were advanced to their present level on January 23 last call-money rates have ruled, with the exception of one or two temporary flurries, quite steadily around their present level of from 6 to 7 per cent.

Very truly, yours,

W. P. G. HARDING, Governor.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, while I shall not take up the time allotted to the consideration of this bill this morning, I should like to say in this connection that I have asked the Comptroller of the Currency to furnish me with a statement of the rates of interest that are being charged in the different States for the rediscount of the different kinds of paper offered as collateral, also the gold reserve that we have to take care of our outstanding circulation; and as soon as I receive that data I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we must discriminate at this time in the affairs of our country between the credits that are extended to the productive activities of our country and those that do not add to its productiveness. I think the figures will disclose the fact that the very thing I called the attention of the Senate to when a certain amendment was pending here is now transpiring, and I do not think it will be for the good of this country to allow it to continue if the Senate has the power to correct it.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I would really like to understand something more about this amendment or see whether there is any different information regarding it. The statement made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], it seems to me, presents a situation which ought to challenge the careful attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and of the Senate. I am not a member of that committee and I have not given any special consideration to these matters. I concur generally in the views of the chairman of the committee that one appropriations committee should handle these items; but may I inquire of the chairman of the committee whether it is probable that if this provision is stricken out the Appropriations Committee will handle it at this session of Congress?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is entirely within the power of the Appropriations Committee to do it. The sundry civil appropriation bill has not passed the Senate. It has been in the Committee on Appropriations for many days, and at any time this matter can be taken up by that committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But is it not true that at this time any one of these provisions presented to the Senate as an amendment would be objected to, and the point of order would be made against it, and it could not possibly be considered?

Mr. WADSWORTH. On what ground could a point of order be made?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That the amendment had not been presented to the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does that constitute ground for a point of order?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It does, unless the department recommends it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The department has recommended it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the appropriation has been recommended by the department——

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has been estimated for. There is no question about that. The department estimates for literally scores of appropriations. If we granted all the estimates, we would appropriate just $1,000,000,000 in this bill instead of $440,000,000.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It seems to me, Mr. President, that there can be no question about the advisability of this legislation, from the information presented thus far to the Senate. An option has been obtained on this land, and there has been no word from any source that it is not advisable for the Government to carry out the transaction. As I understand it, the sundry civil appropriation bill is in such a stage now that it is hardly reasonable to suppose that the Appropriations Committee want to take up this question and go into it. While I think the chairman of the committee is quite right as a general proposition, yet we have not entirely reached the point to which the Senator has referred, and until we do it seems to me that we ought to take care of the clear necessities of the Government, even though we might be guilty of some infraction of a good idea.

Unless there is some contention that this transaction ought not to be consummated, it does seem to me that we ought to consummate it at this time, inasmuch as the House has put this provision in the bill, and in order to consummate it it is only necessary for the Senate to agree to the action already taken by the House. To strike it out now would make it necessary to go through the circumlocution of referring it back to another committee, and to a committee which, I understand, has practically, if not completely, concluded its labor, and at a time when it is expected that Congress at this session will not be dealing with these matters much longer. I should like to appeal to the Senator who has charge of the bill to withdraw his objections to the House provision and let us not concur in the committee amendment. If there were any argument or dispute regarding the item, I think I should feel differently about it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think there is an argument regarding the item. The Senate probably realizes by this time, from the experience we have had with the mass of papers coming out of the war, that the War Department has indulged in the habit, during the war and immediately after the armistice, of creating the necessity for additional appropriations.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator will pardon me, that statement does not apply to this particular item, because this land was authorized by a bill introduced in Congress and passed through Congress.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For the purchase of this land?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes, sir; and the chairman of the committee received a letter from the War Department calling his attention to the matter some weeks ago. In the multitude of items under his consideration it probably has escaped his recollection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I recollect the incident.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The acquisition of this land was authorized pursuant to a bill introduced by me. It is not one of those cases where the War Department utilized its general war authority and the war emergency to commit the Government to the purchase of land.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President, I did not mean that exactly. I meant that the War Department, before it acquires land, proceeds to spend a lot of money on the land, and then comes to Congress and says it must buy the land. It does that repeatedly. The Senator from Texas remarked that there is a target range standing on some of this land.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The land necessary for the target range is all that is contemplated in the provision which the committee reports to strike out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the Senator sees that all these plans were made before the land was owned. That has happened in dozens of instances.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the War Department was negotiating with the different owners, and there was considerable delay on account of defects of title, and so forth. It was doing what it could to perfect the title when the act of July 11, 1919, which really was not aimed at specific purchases of this kind, passed; but the Comptroller of the Treasury held that this purchase was included in the terms of the act of July 11, 1919.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In any event, Mr. President, it has been the practice of the department not to wait until the negotiations for the purchase of the land are complete, but they go right ahead and put expensive construction upon the land. The Senator from Texas states that it will cost $120,000 to build this target range elsewhere. I can not conceive why $120,000 is necessary to build a target range.

Mr. WARREN. That amount is not necessary, of course.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have seen some target ranges, and I have seen some when they were being constructed.

There is nothing very elaborate about a target range. You dig a row of butts on which you arrange to erect the cloth or paper targets, which can be lifted or lowered down into a trench. At certain intervals these targets are lifted and lowered. The men take shelter behind the trench, lower the targets, mark the shots, raise the targets again, and telephone to the officers who are in charge of the firing, 200, 300, 600, or a thousand yards away. Why $120,000 is necessary for a target range I can not understand. It may be that the situation there is not in perfect condition, but this is only one of dozens where the Government goes ahead and starts a great big program of expenditure in construction on land it does not own, and then comes to Congress and says, "If you do not appropriate the money to complete the purchase of the land, the Government is going to lose all its investment in the construction." It does that over and over again.

During the war there were some instances of that kind which were unavoidable, but here we are nearly two years after the war, and we can not get these things straightened up. Our plea has been to let one committee straighten them out, because we can not tell where we are traveling with this thing. If we pursue this policy, it will never end. If the Congress does not adopt this policy now, it will have just as much trouble doing it next year, because some other case will come up, and it will be put on some other appropriation bill, the emergency will be pleaded, the War Department will send estimates, the General Staff will have elaborate recommendations, and they will say, "The Government has spent so much money on this property, and you must not lose that money; for Heaven's sake appropriate some money and buy the land that lies underneath the buildings." In that way we will never get it straightened out.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield the floor.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I simply wished to point out to the chairman of the committee that there was available for the use of the War Department, at one of the rifle ranges used in the northern part of New Jersey, about 3,000 acres, where the Navy Department has expended considerable money in building a rifle range, one of the most available in the country, within half an hour of the Navy establishment at Brooklyn, and available for the troops in New York, New Jersey, and all that section. The lease was offered to the War Department for $5,000 a year. The butts are all built, the buildings conveniently arranged, built at considerable expense by the Navy Department, and the Secretary of War ordered the camp abolished and the buildings demolished. If there is a necessity for rifle practice for the Army, the permanent organization, it would seem as if it would be cheaper for the War Department to continue this rifle range and lease it at that much lower cost.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in addition to the expense of dismantling this range the War Department states that the expense of restoring the land to the original condition will be equal to or exceed the present purchase price. If I felt we had ample opportunity to present this matter to the Appropriations Committee, I would not insist on it here, but conditions are such that there will not be an opportunity to present it to the Appropriations Committee at this session of Congress. Adjournment is too near. Now, I want to call the attention of the Senate briefly to three facts involved in this proposition which makes it poor business judgment not to buy the land at the present figure. I want to quote again what the department said:

> There has already been constructed on the land in question, at a cost of $70,000, a target range which has been in use by the troops stationed in the vicinity of Fort Sam Houston, Tex. A target range in this vicinity is a vital necessity for the proper training of the troops. The land on which this target range is already erected is held on options which expire on June 30, 1920, and at prices ranging from one-half to one-third the prices now asked for ground in this vicinity. The target range already built on this land could not be rebuilt at the present time for less than $120,000. In addition, if the land is returned to its owners it will be necessary to restore it to its original condition or pay damage claims. It is estimated that this will be equal to or in excess of the present option prices to purchase.

The three facts to which I refer are, first, the increased cost of a new target range; second, the cost of restoring the land to its original state; third, the increased cost of land in that vicinity over the present option price.

In view of these facts, Mr. President, I believe it would be the part of economy, the part of good business judgment, to purchase the land at the price at which it can now be had.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, does it not strike the Senator, in his practical ideas of business, that whoever made that estimate of the cost of reconstruction must have been dreaming? The Senator knows, as I do, about target ranges, and to talk about costing that much to restore the land to its original condition, of course, is preposterous.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Aside from that, conceding that what the Senator says as to the target range is true, when we consider the other elements in this proposition, the fact that the expense of restoration will equal the present price, and the fact that when other land is acquired for a target range, which is a military necessity, it will cost more than the price at which the land can now be had, there would seem to be ample justification for the present purchase.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the Senator say how much land the Government owns at Leon Springs just now?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I can not recall at present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does it not own quite a tract?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It owns a tract of land some 20 miles from San Antonio, but that is a separate proposition from this. The target range has been constructed on this particular land which the department was authorized to buy in a bill introduced by myself, to which I referred a few moments ago.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I recollect that the Government owns quite a piece of land about 20 or 25 miles out of San Antonio. Is not that at Leon Springs?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is near Leon Springs, but this tract of land is not over 8 or 10 miles from Fort Sam Houston, if I recall the matter correctly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The other tract is several thousand acres, is it not?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think so; but it was not suitable for this purpose, as I recall. It was used for some other purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is used for maneuver purposes for troops from San Antonio to Leon Springs in troop maneuvers. I know it is large enough to pasture a large number of Army horses and mules sent out there. It is out in the big country. Of course, they will always say this is fit for a target range, because they have this one already there.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This range has been constructed and is already under operation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to an amendment that has been called to my attention in a letter from a constituent of mine. It seems there are certain explosives stored in Charleston, and he says with reference to it:

> I understand in the next appropriation bill, which is coming up within the next few days, a sufficient amount is provided to take care of the removal of these explosives—

Speaking of the explosives stored near warehouses and factories owned by citizens there—

> but it seems that there is some likelihood of the full appropriation not going through, and I am therefore writing to ask that you please do all you can to see that this appropriation is passed.

I ask the chairman of the committee what provision, if any, there is in the bill for taking care of the conditions described? It seems that these explosives were stored during the period of the war at a certain place near the terminals owned by the Government and near factories and warehouses, and it is the desire to have them removed so as not to jeopardize the terminals owned by the Government, as well as the property of these private concerns.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a question which has never been brought to the Committee on Military Affairs. My understanding is that the Committee on Appropriations has included in one of the standard appropriation bills a provision for the purchase of a site at Ogden, Utah, for the erection of a large storage plant for the purpose of storing high explosives left over from the war.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As this is a matter of very great importance, may I inquire if there is any member of the Appropriations Committee who can give me information with regard to the matter?

Mr. WARREN. There was a bill passed providing that there should be three depots built for the storage of combustible ordnance matériel; one of them at Ogden, Utah, and one of the other was sought to be erected at Sparta, Wis., but on the floor of the Senate it was decided otherwise. The third one is to be, I understand, at Fort Wingate, N. Mex. The proposition of the legislation was to get these storehouses inland, away from the seacoast; and, furthermore, to get them where, if there should be an explosion, we would not be called upon to answer for it, as we had to do at a certain New Jersey point, where lives were lost and millions of dollars' worth of property was destroyed, for which the Government has had to pay. That is all provided for, and the appropriations are made accordingly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, the matter complained of by my constituent is provided for in a pending appropriation bill?

Mr. WARREN. It is authorized by a special law and provided for in an appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So the explosives that have been stored at these different points will be concentrated at the three points named by the Senator?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; as soon as buildings can be constructed to receive them.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I might suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that if there is any point in his State where property is endangered by reason of the storage of explosives, he should apply to the Ordnance Department and request their removal. We had that problem in New Jersey, and there were thirty-five or forty million tons of T. N. T., ammonium nitrate, and other high explosives taken out of the State and removed to places that had been provided at Fort Wingate and other points. It is largely a matter of administration. If the Senator feels that any property is being menaced by the storage of explosives and will take it up with the Ordnance Department, undoubtedly they can facilitate its removal as they did in New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I thank the Senator for that suggestion. According to the contents of this letter not only is there endangered a lot of quite valuable property owned by individuals, but it is in juxtaposition to the Government property as well, which also jeopardizes that property. I shall take it up with the Ordnance Department and see if it can not be expedited pending the completion of the legislation now contemplated.

The READING CLERK. The next committee amendment passed over is on page 61, to insert, lines 1 to 12, inclusive, as follows:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to dispose, by sale, of the cannon-finishing plant known as the Erie Howitzer Plant, at Erie, Pa., and to use not to exceed $950,000 of the proceeds of the sale of said plant for the erection, at Watervliet Arsenal, Watervliet, N. Y., on Government-owned land, of a plant for machining and assembling medium caliber types of field cannon and to remove to Watervliet Arsenal the machinery and equipment now installed or stored at the Erie Howitzer Plant; and that all the proceeds of sale of the Erie Howitzer Plant in excess of $950,000 shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I wish the chairman of the committee would make a statement regarding this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 61 of the bill will be found two amendments offered by the committee, after a good deal of discussion, and on the theory that they should be laid before the Senate for its consideration.

The first one provides for the sale of the howitzer plant at Erie, Pa., and the use of the proceeds of that sale up to the amount of $950,000 for the erection of a building at the Watervliet Arsenal upon land owned by the Government, which will be designed to house the very expensive machinery which the Government now owns and which is now situated in the Erie plant.

Here was the situation as presented to the committee: During the war the Government built, at its own expense, upon land acquired by it, a very modern and up-to-date factory building at Erie, Pa., devoted to the manufacture of howitzers. The machinery put in that building was of the most up-to-date and modern kind, and the whole plant was made most complete. It cost $4,197,000 complete. It started operations as soon as they could finish it, and at the time of the armistice, if my recollection is correct, it had reached its capacity in the way of production. I think that was something like 300 howitzers per month.

The Government does not need that plant to-day. It does not want to maintain a cannon or howitzer factory at Erie, Pa. It does, however, desire to keep the machinery, which is most expensive and very difficult to duplicate in the rush and turmoil of war. In fact, it was the production of the machinery which delayed the production of guns and other munitions more than any other element during our participation in the war. So the War Department now propose that that machinery which stands in the Erie plant shall be transferred to Watervliet, which is the great cannon factory of the Army, and placed in a building there to be erected upon land which the Government already owns. If we do not provide some suitable building in which to place that machinery, it must be left in the Erie plant.

The machinery, as Senators will realize, is exceedingly heavy as well as expensive and valuable. It involves great turning lathes that will handle 6-inch howitzers and do the machining upon that kind of work.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. The amendment provides for the sale of this plant and the use of the proceeds to the extent of $950,000 for the building of another plant. What will be done with the machinery in the plant between the time of the sale and the completion of the building?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Our information is that it can be sent to Watervliet and temporarily stored in such way as not to deteriorate while this new building is being erected. But the erection of the new building will not take long and the machinery will be promptly installed in it and there it will remain permanently.

Mr. LENROOT. Has the Senator any information as to when the building will be completed, if the provision remains in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think in about a year. The building itself is not so difficult to erect, as I understand it. Factory buildings of concrete and steel can be put up rather rapidly. It is a question of moving the machinery and storing it for the moment and getting it into the building for good.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the Senator that the Chief of Ordnance told me yesterday that they would not even have the plans prepared until next spring if this provision was adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They need not sell the Erie plant until next spring. They can sell the Erie plant upon certain terms, possession to be given to the purchaser on a certain date, which would permit the Government to move the machinery out and to have the building at Watervliet well on toward completion.

Mr. LENROOT. If there is temporary storage that can be provided, why should we expend $950,000 now for a permanent building? We have no use for the machinery so far as the present manufacture of additional guns is concerned.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Probably only a little of it would be used in peace time, but I doubt if we have temporary storage which is competent to take care of the machinery indefinitely.

Mr. LENROOT. No; but it would take care of it for another year or two.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then comes the question, Can we sell it to advantage at Erie two or three years from now as well as we can now?

Mr. LENROOT. No; my suggestion is that it be sold now, and we can store the machinery, without appropriating $950,000 for a building that is not necessary at this time. That is my point.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wish to complete the statement as to what was placed before the committee.

The building at Erie cost $4,197,000. It costs now, to maintain it idle, $21,500 a year. The estimates of the selling price of the plant based on a bid which has been received—that is, just of the building itself and not the machinery—are $1,250,000, and the estimated cost of transferring the machinery from Erie to the Government arsenal is $100,000.

The items which compose the $4,197,000 invested at Erie are as follows: For the purchase of land and buildings at the time of the purchase of the plant, $500,000; for additional buildings, $500,000; for the machinery and the mechanical equipment, $3,197,000.

It is found, therefore, that the machinery is by far the largest element in this cost, and it is up to us to see that the $3,197,000 worth of very valuable and important machinery shall be housed at a Government arsenal and kept ready for use rather than leave it in temporary storage, or at Erie in a plant which must be idle and from which the Government can get no return. That is the purpose of the item. The committee thought it was one short step in getting rid of these war-time plants. We shall have to dispose of them some day, and if we can dispose of them at a time when selling prices are very good and keep the machinery in them that we want to keep and put that machinery at an arsenal which the Government already operates and owns, the committee thought it was a good business proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Amend the committee amendment on page 61 by striking out all of line 3 after the word "Pennsylvania" and all of lines 4 to 12, inclusive, and insert "and the proceeds of such sale shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts," so that the paragraph would read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to dispose, by sale, of the cannon-finishing plant known as the Erie Howitzer Plant, at Erie, Pa., and the proceeds of such sale shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Also strike out lines 13 to 25——

Mr. LENROOT. That is another amendment. This amendment provides for the expenditure of $6,400,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator want to discuss the other one? There are two amendments.

Mr. LENROOT. The first amendment of the committee provides for the expenditure of $950,000. I will discuss them together, because both involve exactly the same principle and the same question.

The amendment which I have proposed authorizes the sale of the howitzer plant at Erie, Pa., and, instead of the proceeds being used to the extent of $950,000 for the erection of additional buildings at Watervliet Arsenal, it will put the money into the Treasury of the United States. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has stated, and the Chief of Ordnance has stated to me personally, that there is no difficulty about securing temporary storage for the machines now in that plant which the Government desires to retain. They already have the facilities and it will cost practically nothing to store them. The chairman of the committee has stated that there is no expectation of using these machines to any extent for the manufacture of cannon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Hardly that.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will look at the RECORD, I think he will see that that is what he stated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I said that in large part they would not be used; but some cannon are manufactured in peace times. I do not wish to be misunderstood.

Mr. LENROOT. For the next two or three years the Senator will admit that there will be a very small number of these guns manufactured, for we have a very large quantity now on hand, have we not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think so.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, when one considers the present state of the Treasury, what reason can there be for expending $950,000 for the erection of a building when temporary storage can be provided, and when we know that in the next paragraph the same question is involved, except that instead of expending $950,000 it is proposed to expend $5,500,000 out of the proceeds of the sale of the plants designated therein?

Mr. President, the War Department seems to be of the opinion that the property which was erected for the purpose of carrying on the war belongs to the War Department and not to the Nation; they seem to be of the opinion that if any of these plants are sold the proceeds must be used by the War Department for some purpose. There is no consideration whatever given to the condition of the Treasury; there is very little consideration given to the necessity in the near future of the buildings that are proposed to be erected. The War Department seems to proceed upon the theory that we will not sell these plants, for which we no longer have any use, "unless we, the War Department, can get the proceeds for our own purposes and uses." The Treasury of the United States is not at this time in a condition that will permit the expenditure of a single dollar that is not necessary to be expended.

Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the committee this question: If the machines which the Government desires to retain were now held in temporary storage, and the proposed sales had been made, would the chairman be willing to favor an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States for $6,400,000 for the erection of these buildings?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I should like first to know how much it is going to cost every year to hold them in temporary storage. I know that our committee is staggered at the cost of temporary storage; it is terrific. We are tired of this temporary storage business. We would rather get rid of these goods than to keep them indefinitely in temporary storage. The fire hazard is tremendous; the cost of guarding and keeping the material in condition is tremendous; and the appropriations, as the Senator from Wisconsin knows, that are asked for storage and other items in which the construction division is interested surpass the extent of our imagination. I do not want to see the Government required to provide any more temporary storage. Let us get rid of the material or put it where we shall keep it cheaply.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator from New York is going to proceed upon that theory, and will apply it to everything that is being held in temporary storage, because of the expectation that the Government will house these articles in permanent buildings in the future, instead of this being a $6,000,000 appropriation for that purpose, it would have to be nearer $60,000,000.

Temporary storage does cost money, Mr. President, but what is 5 per cent, which is the rate the Government has to pay for money, on $6,000,000? Does the Senator say that it would cost $300,000 a year to store the machines that are in these plants? It is perfectly absurd and ridiculous to so contend. There can be no economy in providing permanent buildings to the extent of $6,000,000 for the purpose of saving some storage charges.

I do not for a moment insist that these buildings ought not to be erected when the Treasury of the United States is in a condition that will permit their erection; but it seems to me that Senators ought to stop and think about the condition of the Treasury. When no immediate need is to be subserved by the erection of buildings at the very high cost now prevailing, and when it is admitted that storage facilities now exist for the storing of these machines, how can an appropriation of this kind for this purpose possibly be defended?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether or not the machinery is of such character as that it would deteriorate by being kept for any length of time or would become obsolescent; secondly, whether or not the Government needs the machinery in the immediate future; and, thirdly, could the Government make a disposition of the machinery at any reasonable price to private persons?

Mr. LENROOT. My information is that it is expected that a very considerable portion of the machinery in these plants will be sold with the plants; but there are certain machines which the Government can utilize, consisting of machines which have cost the Government a great deal of money, and which the Government does desire to retain; but there is no immediate use for these machines, to any considerable extent, because we already have, in very large surplus quantities, the guns and cannon which these machines are designed to produce.

So far as the machines becoming obsolescent is concerned, of course, as time goes on and improvements are made in ordnance, the machines will become obsolescent; but, as they do become obsolescent, it would cost the Government very much less, if changes were necessary, if the machines were in temporary storage rather than if they were permanently set up in buildings.

There is another phase of the matter, Mr. President, aside from the condition of the Treasury. We are confronted with a great shortage of production and a great shortage of labor in this country. Six million dollars is not a very large amount, but in this crisis of the country we ought not to appropriate any money that will take labor out of production and put it into nonproductive fields, where that is not absolutely necessary. We can not hope for a return to a normal basis in this country until production and consumption are equally balanced with each other; we can not hope to assist in obtaining that balance if we appropriate millions of dollars for the establishment of nonproductive enterprises which are not necessary for the Government's use. So from both standpoints, the standpoint of the condition of the Treasury and the standpoint of construction requiring labor that is not necessary and that will be taken from necessary production, it seems to me very clear that the amendment which I have proposed ought to be adopted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator if he has made any investigation as to the need for another arsenal, to be known as the Aberdeen Ammunition Arsenal? My understanding is that the Government has a number of arsenals. Why should we erect, particularly at this time, in view of the condition of the Treasury, another arsenal? It seems to me if we require more ammunition, that economy would prompt the enlargement of some of the arsenals which the Government now owns.

Furthermore, if the Senator will pardon me, my recollection is that in the discussion of the last Army appropriation bill facts were called to the attention of the Senate showing that a large number of employees in some of the arsenals of the Government were about to be discharged because of the slowing down of the business; and strenuous appeals were made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and others, as I recall, that we should not discharge those employees; that we ought to give them work merely for the purpose of keeping them in those arsenals. Now, this amendment proposes to build another arsenal. Why should we do that when some of the Senators were pleading a while ago for the dismissal of many employees because the Government did not need their services, while other Senators were insisting that they be kept in their positions because they had been there for many years?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am not prepared to say that we do not need another arsenal or, at least, that present arsenals should not be enlarged in the near future. I do believe that if we are to have such a state of preparedness as we ought to have, we should have buildings and machinery equipped and run, perhaps, at a very low rate of production in time of peace, but installed, ready to secure a very largely increased production in time of emergency; but that situation does not confront us now, and it will not confront us this year or next year or the year after. We can well afford to wait for these expenditures until the condition of the Treasury and the condition of the country will warrant our engaging in these nonproductive things that may be necessary, and in my judgment will be necessary in the future, but are not necessary now under present conditions.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has proposed an amendment which will cover into the Treasury the proceeds of the sale of war-time arsenals which are recommended to be abandoned by the department, but the committee has reported in favor of taking these proceeds and increasing the facilities of the plant now conducted by the Government known as the Watervliet Arsenal and of creating elsewhere a new plant to be known as the Aberdeen Ammunition Arsenal. These items aggregate over $6,500,000.

The Senator from Wisconsin makes the point that there is no immediate necessity for providing for these increased facilities because we are now in a time of peace, and yet he does not deny that in time of peace we should prepare for war. I believe that in the old arsenal at Venice there is the inscription:

Happy is the city that thinks of war in time of peace.

So we have to be thinking of war in the time of peace. There are those who dispute the fact that we are now at peace. So far as I am aware, no treaty of peace has been ratified by the Senate, and I hear that there are dozens of small wars being waged throughout the world. A traveler from Russia informed me but yesterday that the United States will inevitably be drawn into the Russian or Siberian field, on account of the extraordinary conditions which exist there, unless we surrender our position in the Orient to another power. There is much disquiet in the Pacific, and there is no reason for us to believe that at any time there may not be an outbreak of hostilities, because, as was evidenced in the late war, the United States will not submit to repeated insults, indignities, and trespass upon well-established rights. So I do not agree with the Senator from Wisconsin when he says that we should not at this time consider as the principal question not the economy but the necessity of having provision made that in case of unexpected or expected hostilities we would be fully prepared to meet them.

Since the Pacific Ocean has loomed so large in Congress—and that is only in the last few years—which dictated the national policy of providing for keeping half the fleet in the Pacific for reasons which I may not go into at this time, I do not feel that I am speaking for a section when I advocate public improvements in the western part of this great country. I attended the meeting of the Military Affairs Committee recently to hear a discussion on this very question of arsenals, and there I learned, just as the Senator has learned, that the officials of the department are eager to employ the proceeds of the sale of dismantled plants for the establishment of new plants, and at the same time they tell you that there is no necessity for making these additions at the present time; in other words, that there are more arsenals in the country to-day than are required by our war necessities, they claim, either now or presently. But the fact developed—and it may give an idea to the Senator from Wisconsin—that there is no Federal industrial arsenal west of the Rocky Mountains; and in view of that fact, I prepared an amendment appropriating a certain sum of money for increasing the facilities of the Benicia Arsenal in California.

The Benicia Arsenal is located on the Bay of San Francisco, on land owned by the Government, 360 acres, most eligibly located at the confluence of two rivers and on the main railroad lines. The establishment has been there since 1860. It is located within 6 miles of the Mare Island Navy Yard, and that navy yard and the Military Establishment of the Pacific coast depend upon these eastern arsenals for their supply of artillery guns, howitzers, projectiles, and of munitions of all kinds. In the event of war on the Pacific, it will at once appear to the Senator that the Military and Naval Establishments will have to call upon the eastern arsenals for their supplies, for the repair of their guns, and for the relining of their cannon.

Col. King, of the Ordnance Department, was present at the hearing before the Military Affairs Committee and I asked him a question in these words, speaking of the conditions in Europe, where it had just been testified that $20,000,000 had been spent upon one arsenal in the heart of France:

Of course, we were in great danger then. The armistice brought our peril to a close, and I suppose it was necessary to spend money with a lavish hand, but do you consider that there is also a menace on the Pacific coast, Col. King? Do you share the fear of the Navy in that respect, and if that is your belief should not there be an expenditure of Government money to prepare?

Col. KING. Well, it is a question. Of course, there is a menace. But it is a question of the advisability of building a large plant there—when we have sufficient plants already to cover the needs.

Senator PHELAN. Well, suppose the enemy should by a very simple process cut off all access from the East by the bridges and the tunnels of the various railway lines, and probably by the obstruction of the Panama Canal by putting a pound of dynamite in the Culebra Cut, it would be very desirable then to have large storage facilities somewhere on the Pacific coast, and also repair plants and relining plants?

Col. RICE. Yes, sir; but if they cut us away from the east we would probably have to give up the Pacific coast.

Senator PHELAN. You would have to surrender?

Col. RICE. We would have to surrender.

The department admits that in case the vigilant enemy should destroy the mountain passes, bridges, and tunnels, which is a matter of no difficulty whatever, and should disable the Panama Canal, the United States would have to surrender the Pacific coast.

In view of that fact it seems to me perfectly apparent that if we are to expend any of the proceeds of the sale of the dismantled and needless war-time plants now in the East, as a matter of national policy some expenditure should be made in providing facilities on the Pacific coast, and this is not because the Pacific coast asks this as a matter of geographical consideration. We ask in legislation that there be distributed in the appointment of public officers among the various sections members of boards and commissions. We do not ask that in any sense of patronage but as a matter of national policy. An arsenal on the Pacific coast is a matter of national defense.

Therefore I am disposed to agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that this money should not be used for increasing the facilities in the East, because admittedly there are facilities sufficient; but I differ with him in this, that the money should be covered into the Treasury for safe-keeping, but that appropriation should be made for giving some facilities to the Military Establishment and to the Naval Establishment upon the Pacific coast, in view of the fact that supplies from the East may be cut off in an emergency, which would render our Army and our Navy helpless in defense of the common country.

I have prepared an amendment, therefore, and my remarks are merely preliminary to its introduction, that one and a half million dollars may be appropriated for the maintenance, support, and development of the manufacturing industries and facilities of the Benicia Arsenal, California.

I say there is no manufacturing or industrial arsenal west of the Rocky Mountains. The Benicia Arsenal, or barracks, so called, now used for storage in a small way of military property and a small repair plant for small arms, is there, an established Government institution, without adequate funds for necessary expansion. I think $50,000 a year has been the whole extent of the Government's interest in it in the past, where the Government owns 360 acres of the best located land on the Bay of San Francisco, and it seems to me the door is now open to the department and to Congress to take advantage of the situation, which will greatly strengthen our military arm and our fleet now in the Pacific, seeking these facilities. I submit to the Senator from Wisconsin the wisdom, therefore, not of covering all of this money into the Treasury, the proceeds of the sale of old and dismantled plants, but reserving some of it, as by my amendment, for the establishment of a much-needed arsenal on the Pacific coast.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Why does the Senator think that because we sell Government property we should take the proceeds of the sale necessarily and use them for some other purpose? If an addition to the facilities at the arsenal that the Senator speaks of is necessary, why should we not appropriate for it outright, as we ought to do if it is necessary?

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator may have observed that I have not suggested in my amendment that this particular money be appropriated; therefore I will support his amendment, that the proceeds of the sale of these dismantled plants be covered into the Treasury, and I will let my amendment stand on its own merit.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if, as a matter of fact, his amendment, in merely authorizing the Secretary of War to sell these plants, does not leave in the bill the authority which the Secretary of War has now?

Mr. LENROOT. The only reason, I will say in reply, is that I assume that the committee, in making this authorization in the first amendment, had some purpose in making it, because such authorization is not contained in the second amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The authorization is linked with and in the same sentence with the authorization to use some of the proceeds.

Mr. LENROOT. And the same is true of the second amendment. Why were different modes of treatment used with reference to the two amendments?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The second I have not discussed. I have been trying to confine the discussion to the first one, because the second has some elements in it which are quite different. The second one reads:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to establish an arsenal to be known as the Aberdeen ammunition arsenal on land owned by the United States, situate in the county of Harford, State of Maryland, and within the tract now designated as the Aberdeen Proving Ground Reservation.

The language was drafted, as the Senator knows, in the War Department, and that was to be the establishment of a new institution. I suppose they thought it best to introduce the subject by such an authorization for the establishment of an institution. Then it goes on to describe where it is to be situated, what it is to consist of, and then to fix the total cost, exclusive of material and machinery now owned by the Government, not to exceed five and a half millions, to be paid from the net proceeds derived from the disposition, by sale or otherwise, of these other war-time powder plants. So the effect is the same in both amendments.

Mr. LENROOT. That may be true, if there is no question about the authorization in the first instance. But I assumed the committee had some purpose in making the authorization.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the authorization is repeated, as it were, in order to link it with the authorization for the use of the proceeds.

Mr. LENROOT. I have retained the authorization, and I think if that is adopted it would tend to hasten the sale, I am very frank to say to the Senator, rather than if the entire amendment were eliminated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator's amendment is agreed to, it merely authorizes the Secretary of War to do a thing which he has the right to do anyway. Of course, the real object, it seems to me, that the Senator should seek is to strike out the whole paragraph, for that is what we are really voting on.

Mr. LENROOT. I am in thorough sympathy with the sale of these plants which are not necessary, but I do not think the Secretary of War, in the exercise of an alleged discretion on his part, where he admits that the plants are not necessary, should say, "I will not sell these plants unless I can get the proceeds for my department." That is the effect of the position taken by the War Department, as the Senator well knows, and Congress ought to prevent any such action upon the part of any department of the Government. They admit these plants are not necessary, and they admit they ought to be sold, but they say, "We will not sell them unless we can have the money." Whether they get the money or not should be for Congress to say in specific appropriations, and not for the War Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are a good many things the War Department has done of which I do not approve. I think, however, the Senator rather stretches his description in this particular case. The department has been quite frank with us in this matter. I ask the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who asked some question of the Senator from Wisconsin, as I want to read into the RECORD the statement which was presented to the committee by the officer authorized to make it on behalf of the Ordnance Department and with the approval of the Secretary of War:

> The provision which we are asking for, Mr. Chairman, is for authority to dispose by sale of the cannon finishing plant, known as the Erie howitzer plant, at Erie, Pa., and to use not to exceed $950,000 of the proceeds of the sale of this plant to erect at Watervliet Arsenal, Watervliet, N. Y., on Government-owned land, a plant for machining and assembling medium-caliber types of field cannon, and to move the machinery and equipment now installed or stored at the Erie howitzer plant to Watervliet Arsenal.
> During the war it was necessary to construct plants for the manufacture of 155-millimeter howitzers, and upon an analysis of the facilities after the armistice it was found necessary to retain some facilities to protect the interests of the Government in case of future necessity. The retention of the Erie plant was approved by the Secretary of War on April 8, 1918. It has a capacity of 200 howitzers per month, and we have since transferred to that plant the machinery for the manufacture of 4.7-inch guns from Madison, Wis.
> It has been the policy of the Ordnance Department to concentrate its facilities so far as possible in the arsenals. There is no floor space at the present time available for this machinery and equipment which the department has decided it is necessary to retain. Up to this time there has not been sufficient land at Watervliet Arsenal upon which to erect a building for this equipment, but with the procurement of additional land under a recent appropriation bill it is now possible to erect such a building.
> The department has had several offers for the Erie howitzer plant, and it received one for a million dollars. I think that the plant itself is worth probably a million and a quarter. In case this building is put up at Watervliet Arsenal and the equipment moved to Watervliet Arsenal, it is estimated that from $150,000 to $300,000 would revert to the Treasury from the proceeds of the sale, and it is estimated that the cost of maintaining, guarding, and protecting the plant at Watervliet Arsenal would be $14,450 less per annum than the cost of similar work at Erie.

Then, in another place he states that the offer of a million dollars for the Erie howitzer plant was accompanied by a certified check for $50,000. The department did not accept that offer, I may say to the Senator from Wisconsin. They were actually negotiating for the sale of this plant. They were not trying to hold it. They thought they could get more than a million. They thought they could get a million two hundred and fifty thousand. The department has not taken the attitude that "we will not sell this plant unless you permit us to use the money elsewhere." The department negotiated for the sale of this plant before they ever made this proposition to the Congress at all. Since they started the negotiations for the sale of the plant Congress has extended the area of the Watervliet Arsenal.

Now, the Ordnance Department and the War Department say to the Congress, "Why not sell this plant and use the proceeds for taking care of this machinery, installing it, keeping it ready for use, and, if necessary, using a little of it from time to time for peace-time production at Watervliet, where we already have an organization, no new overhead of any kind, a great arsenal going there for many, many years?"

Mr. OVERMAN. Is this a proposal to permit some officer of the Government to use the proceeds of the sale of Government property without an appropriation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a proposal to use the proceeds of the sale to build another Government building, to sell one Government building and erect another.

Mr. OVERMAN. By whom?

Mr. WADSWORTH. By the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. By what officers of the Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The War Department.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not against the policy of the Government to allow some officer to handle the proceeds derived from some sale instead of turning it back into the Treasury and having Congress appropriate it? That is against the whole policy of the Government. Here is a sale involving a million dollars. Where does the money go? Into the hands of the Secretary of War? If so, does he give a bond? The policy of the Government is to put the money into the Treasury and then have the Appropriations Committee, or some other committee, provide how the money shall be spent, and to appropriate the money out of the Treasury for some particular purpose. This is against the whole policy of the Government.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Has not the Senator forgotten the Overman Act? Could they not do it under the authority of that act?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; they could not take any money that was not appropriated. They can not take a cent of money that is not appropriated by direct apppropriation from the Treasury.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but they could transfer money appropriated for one purpose to another to a limited extent.

Mr. OVERMAN. But this does not propose to appropriate the money out of the Treasury. It proposes to transfer the money from the sale of property to some other officer of the Government, who has not given bond and who knows nothing about the keeping of accounts of the Government. Who is going to keep the accounts? It ought to be done directly by the Treasury Department. That has been the policy of the Government for a hundred years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think the Senator would contend that the Secretary of War or his authorized assistants are irresponsible. The Senator asked if he had given a bond.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I am not saying that they are irresponsible. There is a business way of appropriating money and spending it. The Constitution provides how money shall be spent. It shall be spent through appropriations out of the Treasury, and the officials of the Treasury keep in touch with appropriations all the time. That, I say, has always been the policy of the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am perfectly well aware that that has been the general policy, and I think a healthy one, as a general rule. This is a proposal that a certain portion, a limited amount, of this money shall be used in a certain way, and under this amendment Congress provides what it shall be for, where the property shall be situated, and how much it shall cost. So it is a complete authorization by the Congress, made with eyes wide open.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I would like to have the Senator explain what reason there is for doing it in this way. If the committee thought $950,000 was necessary, why was not the sale authorized and the money allowed to go into the Treasury, and then an appropriation made in the bill in the usual way?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the situation was this, as I tried to explain at the beginning: The War Department felt that were that property to be sold before some definite, assured disposition of the machinery could be made in advance, there might be a fall-down between those two transactions which would leave the department in an embarrassed position, unable, perhaps, if the Congress refused to make the appropriation later on because of some change in the situation, to take care of this situation in an economical way.

Mr. LENROOT. But, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Just a few moments ago did not the chairman of the committee say in reply to me that I was mistaken in making that very assertion, that the War Department were negotiating for the sale of this property, and the Senator denied my statement that they were refusing to let go of the property unless they had the money for their own use?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator is going to quote me, he must do it accurately.

Mr. LENROOT. I did so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He did not. I said that the War Department made this proposal to us after it found that it was possible to take care of the machinery as a result of the enlargement of the Watervliet area.

Mr. LENROOT. But did not the Senator say that I was mistaken in the statement that they were refusing to sell the property unless they could have the proceeds for their own use?

Mr. WADSWORTH. As a general statement I think that is inaccurate. They have not adopted the policy of refusing to sell Government property unless they could have the proceeds. I cited the instance of their attempt at negotiations to sell the property before they ever asked permission to have the proceeds. They did not ask permission to have the proceeds until after they saw that they could use the proceeds in their judgment to the advantage of the Government.

Mr. LENROOT. But now the Senator admits that unless they can do this they are not willing to go on with the sale.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the inference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have never said any such thing. They make this proposal to us. Not a word has come to us in any way to the effect that they do not want to sell it unless it can be done in this way. They merely make this proposal, which they regard as a business proposal in the interest of the Government. I give them credit for being perfectly sincere about it. Apparently the Senator from Wisconsin does not.

It is for the Senate to decide whether it thinks this is a good business proposal for the Government; but I do say, and I am not called upon to defend the Secretary of War or the War Department, that so far as the Erie plant is concerned, they have never taken the attitude that they would not sell it unless they could use the proceeds. I think it is unfair for the Senator from Wisconsin to attribute that motive to them in view of the history of the transaction.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator stated just a moment ago that they did not want to let go of this very plant unless the other one was provided. I certainly am not misquoting the Senator on that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have made that just as clear as I can. I am not going to discuss it further.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I intended to explain to the Senate the next amendment, which is a quite different proposition.

Mr. KING. I shall be very glad to wait, then.

Mr. WADSWORTH. During the war the War Department built three large powder plants, one near Nashville, Tenn., called the Old Hickory plant, one at Tullytown, Pa., and one at Amatol, N. J. They were enormous undertakings. Much of the construction is temporary. I think they had scarcely reached any large production by the time of the armistice. They cost a very large sum of money. They can not be used to any advantage by the Government from now on. Mind you, these are the inheritance of the war and no one need blame the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee or the Committee on Military Affairs itself for any of these things.

The plant at Nashville, Tenn., a smokeless-powder plant, cost $90,000,000. The plant at Tullytown, Pa., cost $7,000,000. The plant at Amatol, N. J., cost $17,000,000. Something ought to be done with them. There is some little equipment and machinery at them which is of a modern and permanent character and which could be used, but the buildings are of the usual frame construction, covering acres and acres of ground, an enormous undertaking run up, as it were, with matches and glue, pure war-time construction. There is something like $120,000,000 in these three plants. They have to be gotten rid of.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does the Government own any land upon which these flimsy structures were erected, or is it leased?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It owns nearly all the land under them; in fact, I think it owns it all. If it will interest the Senator from Utah and the other Senators present, I just wish to read something about this which has been submitted to us.

The Old Hickory plant, with the exception of a limited storage area and the land, the department thinks can be salvaged for $9,120,000. It costs to-day $400,000 a year just to keep it there idle, doing nothing, to guard it and protect it and take care of it.

The Tullytown Arsenal they estimate can be salvaged for $556,000. It costs $45,000 a year to take care of that in its idle condition. The longer we keep them, of course, the more they cost to keep. The estimated salvage value of the Amatol Arsenal is $1,320,000, and it costs $75,000 a year to take care of that. These are great big ghostly cities of the dead. They are pathetic and ghastly to look at.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] reminds me that they served their purpose, but it might be well to amend that remark by saying that they would have served their purpose had the war gone on for another six months.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I think, in view of the fact that we made such tremendous preparations, it had its effect on the final result of the war. I know that these activities in my State near Amatol produced a high explosive consisting of T. N. T. and nitrate of soda, I think. They melted a high explosive the formula of which was procured from the Austrians by the English, who loaned the formula to us, and over 1,000,000 shells, I understand, were shipped from the arsenals at Amatol and Morgan in one month. Undoubtedly that had some influence on the final result.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is proposed to sell these plants. Of course, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] will admit with me, the Secretary of War has the right to sell them now; at least, I understand he has. There is some material in them, however, that is pretty valuable that the Government wants to keep—some of this powder-making machinery. They estimate that that can be sold to the net advantage of the Government for $11,006,000. They urge that it be done mighty quickly, because it will deteriorate in value inevitably; and in addition to that it is not at all sure that prices for the kind of material of which they are composed will stay at their present level, and even if they did not deteriorate materially, the value of the salvage itself would go down.

The proposal is to take of that $11,006,000 $500,000 and put up a powder arsenal, an arsenal which will also machine the medium and light caliber shells, at Aberdeen, at which place the Government already owns complete and well-equipped ordnance proving grounds and near which place, just a short distance away, the Government already owns complete and permanet gas-shell building plant. The proposal is to use that new arsenal to manufacture powders on the restricted scale—and I may say that a $5,500,000 arsenal would not be able to meet war-time demands by any means; it is merely peace-time demands—to use it for experimental and research purposes in connection with the manufacture of these powders, and also to manufacture and experiment with gas shells and other kinds of artillery projectiles of smaller caliber.

If that is done, the Picatinny Powder Arsenal, in New Jersey, which the Government owns and has operated for several years, will no longer be used as a powder-manufacturing arsenal and it will be reverted to an ordnance storage depot, which it used to be several years ago, before it was transformed into a powder factory.

The storage space at Picatinny is worth $550,000, and the annual estimated maintenance saving will, according to the department, be $520,000. They say:

> If the proposed legislation is enacted, the War Department proposes to salvage the manufacturing areas and the major portion of the housing and service areas immediately and later, when the present need has passed, to salvage the storage areas of the three plants.
> If the proposed legislation is not approved, it will be necessary to retain Amatol Arsenal in serviceable condition, to retain a considerable portion of Tullytown Arsenal in serviceable condition, or establish such facilities at Picatinny, and either to retain at least one smokeless powder line at Old Hickory in serviceable condition or to renovate the smokeless powder plant at Picatinny Arsenal. One powder line at Old Hickory is so large (100,000 pounds of powder per day) as to render its operation very expensive except at full capacity. The smokeless powder line at Picatinny is considerably out of repair and of very old design and antiquated equipment, and would require considerable expenditure to make it efficient.
> The proposed ammunition arsenal will be located on the Aberdeen proving grounds reservation, adjacent to the Edgewood Arsenal on Gun Powder Neck. The acquisition of additional land will not be required unless in a small way in connection with the water supply, as sufficient land is now available on the reservation for the existing establishments and for the proposed ammunition arsenal.
> The Ordnance Department has at present no establishment which can be termed an ammunition arsenal. Frankford Arsenal has a small capacity for shell and fuses, Picatinny Arsenal a small capacity for powder, explosives, and shell loading, and Chicago Arsenal space where shell-making machinery is stored but not installed. Picatinny Arsenal has fundamental deficiencies which militate against its use as an ammunition arsenal.

We lay this before the Senate merely as a business proposition. Apparently it is the purpose of the War Department, especially the Ordnance Department, to concentrate these things into a few places, to get rid of the scattered institutions which are exceedingly hard to get rid of unless at the same time you have a program laid down which will enable you to take care of some of the facilities and machinery at these great war-time plants which the Government ought to keep and wants to keep.

So the Senate committee decided to lay the matter before the Senate, just as the Erie howitzer plant matter was laid before the Senate. If we do not sell these plants pretty soon, we will not get 2 cents on the dollar for them. If we sell them promptly and lay down a program for taking care of the things in these plants that we do not want to sell, that we want to move somewhere else and concentrate, we can get something like 10 cents on the dollar.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Did the investigations before the committee establish the fact that the plant in Pennsylvania and the one in New Jersey, to which the Senator has just referred, would not be available for the performance of the work which was to be accomplished by the new plant to be established at Aberdeen? In other words, why could not the Government utilize one of the existing powder factories instead of constructing another at the Aberdeen grounds?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Picatinny Powder Plant is a comparatively small concern which is equipped merely to make smokeless powder. According to the department, it is not feasible to enlarge it. There are questions of water supply and other considerations which make it difficult to do so on an economical basis. The department wants to take the powder-making function away from Picatinny, combine it with the shell-making function, carry on two functions at one place, on land already owned by the Government, and use Picatinny as an ordnance storage depot, as it was used four years ago, and save thereby $520,000 a year.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the proposition seems to me to be a practical business one. We find the Ordnance Department maintaining three large, temporary, expensive manufacturing plants, great balloon structures that have to be guarded and repaired, the roofs of which have to be taken care of, because there is stored under them extensive machinery that otherwise will rust. The question is, Shall we continue to appropriate money to care for the maintenance of three useless plants? That is the proposition, and there should be no argument on that. They should be abandoned; the buildings should be demolished; the machinery should be salvaged; and if we do not give authority to do it this year, it means that we shall carry the matter over to next year and the same appropriation will come up.

The question of using a part of the proceeds from the result of salvaging in erecting a necessary shell-casing manufacturing plant is also one of policy. We have got to keep up the preparedness program to a certain extent; but if we can recover $11,000,000 or $12,000,000, it seems to me to be a wise business proposition to get rid of the expensive maintenance costs of these useless plants.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. KING. The explanation which the Senator from New Jersey makes, supplementing the statement made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], would seem to justify the recommendations of the committee that these three plants be disposed of. I am not yet satisfied, however, from the explanations that I have heard, that there is any necessity for the construction of another plant at Aberdeen. My information is that we had so many plants constructed during the war, and some before the war, for the manufacture of powder and ordnance and all forms of war equipment that there is no necessity now for constructing any additional plants; but the plan suggested by the committee now contemplates the demolition of three plants and the construction of another plant, with the utilization of a portion of the machinery in the three in the construction of the fourth.

I certainly am in favor, with the explanation which I have heard, of a peremptory order for the sale of the three plants; but I have some doubt as to whether we should permit the War Department to make the sale. I have not any particular confidence in the business ability of the War Department to handle these matters. They have not exhibited any very great sagacity or business ability or that common sense that ought to characterize organizations in the handling of the funds which are wrung from the people by taxation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If I may ask the Senator a question, who would he have salvage these buildings?

Mr. KING. I am not so sure as to whether we are justified in creating a new organization for the purpose, because the more organizations we have apparently the greater difficulties we encounter and the more lost motion and the more waste and extravagance. I frankly repeat that the conduct and record of the War Department, in the disposal of the hundreds of millions of dollars of property that were on hand at the close of the war, have not been such as to warrant any particular encomium. It has been slow and tardy and wasteful in its handling of the vast amount of war material which was on hand at the close of the war.

It seems to me, however, that these buildings ought to be disposed of, unless it is the one in New Jersey. Perhaps that ought to be retained for the purpose of manufacturing powder, although the explanation made by the Senator from New York is not convincing that we need another powder factory.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think, so far as the condemnation of the administration which has been made by the Senator from Utah is concerned, I shall not disagree with him. He may qualify as an expert as to that.

However, to get down to the practical side of this question, unless we let the War Department do the work, what agency of the Government is going to do it? The question is right up to this Congress, What are we going to do with these great, useless plants? The only people who know how to salvage the machinery are the Ordnance Department; and I must say that, so far as the Ordnance Department is concerned, I think they are efficient, and that they will do the work efficiently and less expensively probably than would any other agency of the Government.

Now, as to the question of another plant to manufacture cartridge casings or for loading cartridges and making ammunition, it is necessary that the Aberdeen Proving Grounds test the guns which are produced, and it is necessary to prove the ammunition. Therefore, in the effort to concentrate in one central place, it would seem practicable that they utilize this machinery for that purpose.

So far as Picatinny is concerned, Picatinny, I understand, is a smokeless-powder arsenal. It has been a permanent establishment for many years, but I do not think it is equipped for making ammunition. I think it is simply a smokeless-powder manufacturing arsenal. In their effort to concentrate at Aberdeen, the Ordnance Department have asked that a part of the proceeds derived from the sale of certain plants and material may be made available in order that they may use this machinery for the necessary purposes of the Army.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit another inquiry?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator appreciates that any construction of plants now, in view of the shortage of labor and the high prices of all commodities, will involve a very great expense upon the Government. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether or not the exigencies of the situation require the construction of a new plant at this time? Why may not these three plants be salvaged, the Government deriving the very best price possible from them, and then when the necessity arises for the construction of another plant let the department appeal to Congress to secure the appropriation?

I agree entirely with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I believe that it is a very unwise policy to permit executive agencies to make disposition of property, whether real or personal, and then turn around and, without an appropriation by Congress or without making an accounting to Congress of the funds derived, expend them for some other purpose. That policy I believe makes for extravagance and waste. I think that when property belonging to the Government is sold the proceeds ought to be covered into the Treasury of the United States; there ought to be a full accounting made to the Government, and then if the same department must have funds for some legitimate purpose let them make the proper representations to the legislative branch of the Government and obtain the needed appropriation therefor.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator will remember that the definite policy fixed by Congress before the war and carried out in every instance, according to my recollection, was that in no case should any department of the Government be permitted to use funds which came from the sale of property or other income, but in every case such money was required to be deposited in the Treasury and appropriations regularly made in order to permit its use.

Mr. KING. I recall that, Mr. President, and it would seem that if there could be any justification for a departure from that policy the justification might arise during the exigency of war. If during war times and in hours of supreme crises that policy was adhered to, there can be no reason for a departure from that policy in the halcyon days of peace.

I think that the committee amendment in its present form is unwise; I am not satisfied with it. I agree with the Senator from New York and the Senator from New Jersey that we ought to dispose of those three plants, from the statements which they have made, and if the department will not do that I think a mandatory direction should emanate from Congress that will secure prompt action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment reported by the committee. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; there is objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the question will be reconsidered. The Chair will put the question again. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. WADSWORTH and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN called for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is called for.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, is it possible for me to make a parliamentary inquiry at this point in the midst of a vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair presumes so; the Chair thinks the rule applies only while a roll call is proceeding.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I happened to overhear the Senator from Wisconsin make a remark which would indicate that he thinks we are voting to strike out the whole amendment except the first four lines.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand the question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thought I heard the Senator say that the amendment, if agreed to, would strike out the whole item of $6,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. The pending question relates only to the item of $950,000; the other item will come next.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to have the vote on that separate. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment reported by the committee.

The READING CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 61 it is proposed to strike out, after the word "Pennsylvania," down to and including line 12 and insert "and the proceeds of such sale shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of 'Miscellaneous receipts.'"

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Have we proceeded so far in voting upon this matter that an inquiry of the Senator from Wisconsin or the Senator from New York would be improper? I wish to make an inquiry, because that will guide me in my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may make his inquiry.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether, in his opinion, this amendment is mandatory and requires the sale of the property, or whether, if his amendment prevails, discretion may be exercised by the department, so that it might refuse to sell the property?

Mr. LENROOT. Discretion would still be left with the department, but, inasmuch as the chairman of the committee states that the Secretary now has this authority, I think the Secretary in all fairness would regard it as a direction upon his part to sell.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suggest the absence of a quorum, if that is to be the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harding	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Borah	Henderson	New	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Norris	Smoot
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Spencer
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Page	Stanley
Comer	Kellogg	Phelan	Sterling
Dial	Kendrick	Pittman	Thomas
Edge	Kenyon	Poindexter	Townsend
Fall	Keyes	Pomerene	Trammell
Fernald	King	Ransdell	Wadsworth
France	Lenroot	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Simmons	Warren
Gay	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.	Watson

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, my view of this situation has been stated at some length, and I do not intend to repeat it.

If the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is adopted it will merely result in leaving language in the bill which will authorize the Secretary of War to sell the Erie howitzer plant. As the Senator from Wisconsin says, and I think he says correctly, if that language is left in this bill and nothing else, the Secretary of War may regard it as a direction on the part of the Congress. He may regard himself as in duty bound to sell that plant. Now, are we ready to direct him to do it? Does the Senator from Utah or the Senator from Wisconsin or any other Senator believe that he knows enough about that situation—the disposal of the machinery, the storage of it somewhere else, the moving it about with no program in advance, the prices that can be obtained, and so forth—to direct, in effect, the Secretary of War to sell it, as the Senator from Wisconsin says?

I would prefer, if the Senate does not like this proposal which comes from the War Department and which the committee has laid before the Senate, to strike out the whole thing rather than to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, is the Senator willing to accept an amendment striking out the whole thing?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the Senator knows I am not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. KING. Suppose the entire provision is stricken out. Will the Senator indulge in prophecy and advise the Senate what he thinks the War Department would do with respect to those other three plants—the powder plants—the one which cost $70,000,000, the one costing $17,000,000, and the one costing $7,000,000? Would the Secretary continue to keep them, at the expense to which the Senator has referred, or would he make disposition of them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is referring to the powder plants?

Mr. KING. Those three, yes; the one in Pennsylvania, the one in New Jersey, and the one in Tennessee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is what they say will be necessary if the legislation is not adopted which would give them a chance to put some of this machinery at Aberdeen:

> It will be necessary to retain Amatol Arsenal in serviceable condition, to retain a considerable portion of Tullytown Arsenal in serviceable condition, or establish such facilities at Picatinny, and either to retain at least one smokeless-powder line at Old Hickory in serviceable condition, or to renovate the smokeless-powder plant at Picatinny Arsenal.

That is what they say. That means that they will retain a portion of those great war-time arsenals in serviceable condition, and will try to do what they can with the rest. We propose that they get rid of the whole of them and move the machinery to a central point and put it under one overhead; so I think we are going pretty far when we in effect direct them to sell the whole thing, because, frankly, neither the Senator from Utah nor myself knows enough about it.

Mr. LENROOT. But if the Senator will yield, if my amendment is adopted the only inferential direction would be as to the howitzer plant at Erie. My amendment was to strike out the whole of the section.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I referred to that a moment ago, and I do not think we know enough about that situation to direct, by inference or otherwise, the sale of the Erie howitzer plant. If we had all visited it, gone over it, and gotten some idea about it, it would be different.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand the memorandum which the Senator from New York has read—and I presume it is a memorandum furnished by the War Department—and the statement made by the Senator and the testimony given before the Committee on Military Affairs, the War Department takes the position that it is those three powder factories, one of which cost $70,000,000, another one of which cost $17,000,000, and another one of which cost $7,000,000, which they think they can sell for about $10,000,000. They do not need them. The cost of maintaining them is enormous, perhaps five or six or seven hundred thousand dollars a year; but unless we will permit them to construct another plant at Aberdeen, they will probably keep those plants, because they need some of the machinery which is in each of them, and therefore they will renovate them—to use the expression in the letter—and maintain the three plants, instead of salvaging them and housing such machinery as may be retained.

It seems to me that the record which the War Department itself has presented shows that all of these plants ought to be salvaged; that it is the duty of the War Department to salvage them, regardless of any authorization for the construction of another plant, and that if the War Department does not salvage them it ought to be directed to proceed and make disposition of them at the earliest possible moment, and then Congress may determine whether or not another plant is necessary.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, does the Senator think that the War Department has power to salvage these plants without some authorization of Congress?

Mr. KING. I express no opinion upon that subject; but I have understood from the debate, from the statements made by the Senator from New York, and from the questions if not the reply of the Senator from Wisconsin, that existing law authorizes the disposition of these properties.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not prepared to challenge the accuracy of that statement—it may be so—but the Senator knows that local interests are always aroused when any attempt is made by the Government or any Government agency to salvage or remove or destroy or in any wise interfere with a Government institution. Therefore, without some positive authorization, I think the department would rather shrink from the ordeal of voluntarily doing so because of the storm of local protest and resentment that would be aroused.

There is the difficulty. These plants are scattered over the country in time of war, and when the necessity for economy arises after peace is established each locality possessing some Government agency insists upon retaining it, and, while quite willing to see others dismantled, is clamorous for the retention of its own. It is that conflict of interest, thus aroused, that will embarrass the department and make it, I think, impotent to accomplish anything in the absence of a specific congressional direction, and that is what is designed to be accomplished by this amendment.

On the other hand, the capacity of the plant at Aberdeen needs reinforcement, and the reinforcement can come from the machinery and the appliances which are now in these other places, and which must be maintained, in the sense that they must be taken care of, at a continuing cost of from four to five hundred thousand dollars a year.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee intimated that he did not think either the Senate or the committee had sufficient information to pass upon the question whether the howitzer plant at Erie should be sold at all unless a new building is provided at Watervliet Arsenal. If it be true that neither the committee nor the Senate has sufficient information to pass upon the question at this time, the entire provision should be eliminated. If the committee has not sufficient information to know whether the plant at Erie, Pa., should be sold at all in the interest of the Government, it has not sufficient information to say that a new plant should be constructed at Watervliet, N. Y.

The fact is—and it is no reflection upon the committee in saying it—that the reason why it is attempted to be secured in this way is because there seems to be a theory upon the part of somebody that if they use the proceeds of the sale of Government property it is not the people's money. Why are they not willing to come to Congress and ask for an appropriation in the usual way for a building at Watervliet, and ask for an appropriation out of the Treasury in the usual way for a new arsenal at the Aberdeen Proving Ground? It evidently is because, if this money is to be considered as money belonging to the people in the Treasury of the United States, they fear they would not get the appropriation, but if they can get the Senate and the committee to treat the money as something belonging not to the Government but to the War Department, then the appropriation ought to come very much easier.

Mr. President, I regret that the Committee on Military Affairs takes any such attitude with reference to these appropriations. The Committee on Military Affairs ought to be willing to have every dollar of the proceeds of these sales go into the Treasury and the committee then pass independently upon what new construction is needed and appropriate for it. That is the business-like way of doing it. That is the way it ought to be done. But I am afraid that if that were done the committee itself would not recommend the expenditure of this $6,000,000. I am afraid that it is recommended upon the theory that this is no expense to the people, because it is the proceeds of the sale of Government property.

Mr. President, this is not the way to handle the finances of the Government. Government property should be considered just as much the interest of Congress and the proceeds of the sale of Government property should be considered just as carefully and economically as money raised by taxes, because it all amounts to the same thing in the end, anyway.

Everyone admits that this property ought to be sold and everyone admits that there is no immediate necessity for the use of any of the machines, at least to any considerable extent. It is admitted that the machines can be stored in storage facilities until Congress can have an opportunity, when the condition of the Treasury will warrant it, of passing upon the merits of these two propositions, as to whether this addition should be made at Watervliet Arsenal and as to whether a new arsenal should be constructed at the Aberdeen Proving Ground.

Why not, in view of the present condition of the Treasury and in view of the labor shortage in the country, sell the things which all admit the Government does not longer need, and then leave it to the committee and to Congress at the next session to make such appropriations as the merits of the case will warrant?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I think the inference the Senator from Wisconsin has drawn against the committee is entirely unjust. It is quite true that the committee have neither the time nor the ability, I will say, to look into all of these technical propositions. The Senator has said "sell this machinery." Where will you find a market for gun-making machinery?

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I am only proposing the sale of that which the department says can be sold and which it will sell provided they can use the proceeds, that is all.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. This is the problem. Possibly the committee is not as fully informed as they should be——

Mr. LENROOT. I am not reflecting on the committee.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Possibly we have neglected our duty——

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. But we have done our best——

Mr. LENROOT. I agree.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (continuing). In the hearings to gain all the information that was procurable from the War Department and everywhere else. What is the simple proposition we have to face? We have these great plants manufacturing war materials, with expensive machinery, with expensive electric plants, with expensive fire protection, engines, boilers, machinery.

That property is valuable. It is Government property. The Senator suggests that it be sold or otherwise disposed of, or that the buildings be demolished, and then that they come to Congress for an appropriation to build new buildings and utilize this machinery. Suppose they demolish these buildings or sell part of the machinery, and then they come to Congress, and they have no appropriation, and they have the machinery on their hands. They would have to pay for the storage, which would amount to almost as much, possibly, as the expense of building a new plant. Consequently they try to complete it in one transaction, following the policy of the War Department, building the new building, utilizing it for the needs of the Army, and using the old machinery and salvaging it. It is a perfectly reasonable proposition and perfectly practicable, and I, for one, have some confidence in the Ordnance Department and in their ability. They accomplished great wonders during the war, and if they come to us with a statement and a plan of this kind we believe them, and we have some confidence and faith in them. Possibly it may be unwise, but to draw the inference that the committee have not done their duty and are not doing their duty in entertaining a proposition of this kind, which is a common-sense, practical, business proposition, I think is unfair and unjust to the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not wish to make any reflection upon the members of the committee. I do not believe there is a committee of harder working Members in the Senate, and that is especially true of the chairman of the committee and the Senator from New Jersey. They are not only giving all their time to the question, but also their great ability. The remark I did make was that the chairman of the committee stated that the committee did not have sufficient information as to whether this property should be sold or not independently of this new construction, and I stated then that if that was so, the committee did not have sufficient information as to whether anything of this kind should be done.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May the Senator from New York qualify what he is supposed to have said? The committee felt that it was authorized in directing the sale of this property in the event that the machinery now housed in it would be taken care of elsewhere. The War Department assures us that this machinery is of value, that it ought to be taken care of, that it is now scattered in several different places, and that they want to concentrate it in one or two places.

We said, "All right; we will authorize you to sell these great powder plants, for example, and put the machinery that you want to save out of them in one place." We do not feel well enough informed in regard to it to direct them to sell all these great properties without some assurance that the machinery will eventually be taken care of on an economical basis.

Mr. LENROOT. There is just the difficulty——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no faith in this temporary storage business. I have seen it going on long enough.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does well to inject that remark, but the Senator must be aware and the Senate must be aware that there must be temporary storage for every pound of this machinery if this amendment is adopted. They have to store it temporarily in any event, because they get no money to put up any of these buildings except the proceeds of the sale of these plants, and between the time of their securing the proceeds of the sale of these plants and the construction of these buildings this machinery must be stored temporarily somewhere, and if it must be stored temporarily somewhere for one year it can be temporarily stored for two years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and 10.

Mr. LENROOT. And 10; and the Government can save, in view of the present condition of the Treasury, that amount of money, and keep the machinery in temporary storage, if need be, as long as it has to go there anyway, until we can afford to make the necessary appropriations for these buildings.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the longer you keep a thing in temporary storage the more expensive it becomes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I do not now see him in the Chamber. I will vote and in case he does not come in I shall withdraw my vote, unless I am able to obtain a transfer. I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence, being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is unfortunately very ill and therefore absent, to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I am about to vote, and I therefore am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE. Has the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. EDGE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. NELSON. In my absence the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] transferred his pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] to me. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am paired with that Senator and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]. I wish also to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is absent on official business.

Mr. McLEAN. I have a pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], which I transfer to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Borah	Kellogg	McKellar	Phelan
Capper	Kenyon	McLean	Pomerene
Dial	Keyes	McNary	Sheppard
France	King	Moses	Smoot
Gay	Lenroot	Nelson	Townsend
Harrison	McCormick	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Jones, N. Mex.	McCumber	Nugent

NAYS—31.

Ashurst	Harding	Simmons	Trammell
Ball	Henderson	Smith, Ariz.	Underwood
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Smith, Md.	Wadsworth
Chamberlain	Knox	Smith, S. C.	Walsh, Mont.
Comer	Lodge	Spencer	Warren
Fernald	New	Stanley	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Page	Swanson	Williams

NOT VOTING—38.

Beckham	Fletcher	Kirby	Reed

Elkins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman
Fall	Kendrick	Ransdell

So Mr. LENROOT's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over will be found on page 61, to insert, beginning with line 13, the following:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to establish an arsenal, to be known as the Aberdeen ammunition arsenal, on land owned by the United States, situate in the county of Harford, State of Maryland, and within the tract now designated as the Aberdeen Proving Ground Reservation; to erect such permanent buildings as may be required for the establishment of that arsenal; to acquire by purchase or condemnation such additional lands or interests therein, including riparian rights, easements, and rights of way and other rights as may be necessary to provide an adequate water supply for said arsenal; all at a total cost, exclusive of material and machinery now owned by the Government, of not to exceed $5,500,000, to be paid from the net proceeds derived from the disposition by sale or otherwise of such parts of the Government plants, surplus supplies, and equipment, except land at Tullytown, Pa., Amatol, N. J., and Jacksonville, Tenn., as are not required; the money thus obtained to be immediately available and to continue available until expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not ask for a roll call, but I should not like to have the RECORD show that the amendment was agreed to without objection.

Mr. PHELAN. I call for a division.

Mr. KING. The amendment we are voting on is with respect to the establishment of the Aberdeen arsenal?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the amendment now pending.

Mr. KING. I thought that was involved in the former amendment. I understand the proposition is now to determine whether we shall authorize the expenditure of approximately $5,500,000 for the construction of a new plant.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Out of the proceeds of the old plant.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I understand that in voting "yea" upon the question we support the committee and in voting "nay" we support the contention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], eliminating the discretion given to the Secretary of War and not expending the proceeds of the sale of the old site on a new plant. Am I correct in that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those voting "yea" will vote to sustain the committee. Those voting "nay" will vote against the committee amendment which has just been read.

Mr. LENROOT. A vote "nay" will mean that if these plants are sold the money must be covered into the Treasury and a new appropriation made for the disposition of the proceeds.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall ask for a vote in the Senate upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 7, line 14, after the word "records," the committee report to insert, "and for the employment of clerical help required to furnish to the adjutants general of the several States statements of service of all persons from those States who entered the military service during the war with Germany, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1921, for all expenses, including the employment of clerical and other help in the office of The Adjutant General of the Army, necessary for the completion and preservation of the selective-service records and the completion of the work of furnishing statements of service to adjutants general of States: Provided, That this appropriation shall be disbursed by such officer as may be designated by the Secretary of War for the purpose," so as to make the paragraph read:

The unexpended balance of the $3,500,000, reappropriated in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, approved July 11, 1919, for the completion, preservation, and transportation of the records pertaining to the draft under the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, including the employment of the necessary clerical and other help for duty in the office of The Adjutant General of the Army in connection with the arrangement, operation, and maintenance of the files of those records, and for the employment of clerical help required to furnish to the adjutants general of the several States statements of service of all persons from those States who entered the military service during the war with Germany, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1921, for all expenses, including the employment of clerical and other help in the office of The Adjutant General of the Army, necessary for the completion and preservation of the selective-service records and the completion of the work of furnishing statements of service to adjutants general of States: Provided, That this appropriation shall be disbursed by such officer as may be designated by the Secretary of War for the purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment was passed over at the suggestion of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when this amendment was passed over at my request I made the statement that this very item had been considered by the Appropriations Committee and was provided for, if not in whole, at any rate in part, in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I did not have the testimony before me at that time, but I immediately looked up the hearings which were held before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and the testimony of Maj. Gen. Peter C. Harris, The Adjutant General, will be found on page 166. Before reading his testimony I desire to give a brief history of what was done by the Appropriations Committee in this regard.

For temporary employees in the War Department the House made an appropriation of $2,500,000. Of that amount $1,850,000 was to be expended in The Adjutant General's office, among other things, for the purpose named in this amendment. The Secretary of War appeared before the subcommittee.

Mr. KING. When was that?

Mr. SMOOT. In March last. The Secretary asked that the amount that was allowed by the House of Representatives, namely, $2,500,000, be increased. The Adjutant General appeared before the committee and stated that of the $2,500,000 the amount of $1,850,000 was absolutely necessary for the work that he would be called upon to perform, and that left only $650,000 for temporary employees in all of the other branches of the War Department. The Senate committee in its report to the Senate recommended an increase to $4,000,000, and also increased the amount to be expended by The Adjutant General's office to $2,000,000. The matter went into conference in that way, having been agreed to by the Senate. In the conference the question was discussed and a compromise was reached by increasing the House appropriation from $2,500,000 to $3,000,000. The reason assigned for that increase, and the only reason why the House yielded to the compromise, was because it was necessary to give The Adjutant General the full amount allowed by the House with a view of caring for the purpose provided for in the pending amendment.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read the testimony of The Adjutant General before the Appropriations Committee:

Gen. HARRIS. In the hearing before the House Appropriations Committee I read a statement as to the needs of The Adjutant General's Office.

The CHAIRMAN. We have that.

Gen. HARRIS. I understand you have that here, and I will not reread it. You will find it in volume 2, page 1750, of the House hearings. That statement was prepared with the greatest of care, and the estimate is based on the experience of the last few months. I have been hoping each month that the work of The Adjutant General's Office would be reduced, but I regret to say that it is not reduced. The volume of work is about the same as it was six months ago. Possibly the number of cases coming in may be a little fewer, but the cases seem more difficult, and within the last week I have had to ask for volunteers in one of my divisions to keep the work current, and several hundred clerks have volunteered to work at night for that purpose. The work in The Adjutant General's Office is current, except the records of the demobilized army. I have an accumulation of about four days' work in that division, or we are four days behind in that particular division.

Senator SMOOT. General, how much money have you to spend for the present fiscal year?

STATEMENTS OF SERVICE TO ADJUTANTS GENERAL OF STATES.

Gen. HARRIS. During the present fiscal year, aside from the special appropriations for the draft record, and for furnishing statements of service to the adjutants general of the States—

That is what the item in this bill is for; and I wish now to call attention to the statement The Adjutant General made:

I have $3,302,811. That is from three different appropriations.

Senator SMOOT. Are you going to spend all that amount?

Gen. HARRIS. Yes; every nickel of it.

Senator SMOOT. You will not have any surplus?

Gen. HARRIS. There will not be any surplus from that appropriation. There will be an unexpended balance from appropriations for furnishing statements of service to the adjutants general of the States.

Senator SMOOT. How much is that balance?

Gen. HARRIS. It will depend on the number of clerks that I take on from now until the end of the fiscal year.

Senator SMOOT. What is your estimate?

Gen. HARRIS. I estimate that there will probably be a balance of $700,000 or $800,000.

Senator SMOOT. That is, on July 1?

Gen. HARRIS. On July 1, but it will not be an available balance. It will be a balance that would have to be reappropriated to complete the statement of services for the adjutants general of the States.

At a hearing before the House committee in January I explained to them that it would be necessary to employ 1,100 clerks, in addition to those I have, to complete the statements of service for adjutants general of the States during this fiscal year.

Senator OVERMAN. To complete what?

Gen. HARRIS. Statements of service for the adjutant general of the States. Under a special appropriation of Congress I am preparing a statement of the service of each officer and enlisted man who served during the World War, and that is to be furnished to the adjutants general of the States.

The CHAIRMAN. We have required the department to do what was done years after the Civil War, furnish a complete record to the States.

Gen. HARRIS. I explained to the committee that in order to complete the work it would be necessary to employ 1,100 additional clerks. The chairman of the committee (Mr. GOOD) called attention to the objection to employing these clerks, stating that there were not that number available in the city of Washington, and that it would be necessary to call upon the Civil Service Commission and bring them into the city from outside. Mr. GOOD, the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, said it would be very much better for me not to attempt to complete that work during this fiscal year, but to do what I could with the clerks that I now have and that could be obtained from other departments, and to depend upon Congress to reappropriate the unexpended balance. It will require substantially all of the unexpended balance to complete that work, and the work can be done within the appropriation.

I am not going to read any more of the testimony, but it is all along the same line.

What I was complaining of the other day was that this very subject matter was before the Committees on Appropriations of the two Houses. The House only appropriated $2,500,000, and the conference report provided for an appropriation of $3,000,000 for the purpose, amongst others, of doing the very work which is involved in the amendment now before the Senate. I did say that I deprecated the practice prevalent in many of the departments of the Government of going to one committee having a subject matter in charge, and if they found they could not secure the inclusion of the item which they desired in the bill in charge of that committee, then going to some other committee having to do with other appropriations and undertaking to have such item inserted in another bill.

The Senator from New York says that he has received word from Gen. Harris that he did not ask for this appropriation of the Appropriations Committee. That is as I understood him, and I will ask him if that is correct?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I have not made such an assertion. I do not know whether Gen. Harris asked the Appropriations Committee for this reappropriation or not; I merely know that the Appropriations Committee did not make it.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that we gave $500,000 more than the House provided, and that the additional amount was based on the necessity, as shown by the testimony of Gen. Harris, for carrying on the very work provided for in the pending amendment. I also know that the subject matter was considered by the Appropriations Committee and that the House reluctantly yielded to the Senate contention that the appropriation should be more than $2,500,000. The Appropriations Committee of the Senate decided that it was well enough to go on with that work within reason, although the House committee, as Gen. Harris states in his testimony, refused to have the work proceed, because it would require the bringing into the District of Columbia at once of 1,100 additional clerks. Gen. Harris testified that Representative GOOD, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, had this very matter under consideration, and the House decided that nothing should be appropriated for the purpose indicated, but the Senate appropriations Committee decided to make at least a partial appropriation so that the work could proceed. So the item was increased by the Senate and came out of conference with $500,000 more than the House had provided.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the senior Senator from Utah yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, the Appropriations Committee had made a full examination of this subject, and upon representations made by Gen. Harris, they added an additional amount to the House appropriation. It went into conference, and there emerged from conference a provision which gave a large addition to the amount which originally had been appropriated by the House. Now, he comes before another committee and seeks an additional appropriation covering the same item which had received the attention of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and if the Senator will examine the bill he will find on page 7 that the House adopted a provision stopping at the word "records," in line 14. The remainder of the original provision went out on a point of order in the House, although it had been reported to that body from the Military Appropriation Committee of the House. It was intended to be complete, but a portion of the provision, as I have said, went out on a point of order, as I understand. I have not looked the matter up in detail, but I am quite sure that that is how it happened.

All the Senate have got to decide is, Do they want to give The Adjutant General from $700,000 to $800,000 more money to perform the work for which the Appropriations Committees of the House and the Senate agreed they should have, which amount was appropriated?

Mr. President, if the Senate desire to go further in this matter than agreed upon at that time, then they will agree to the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate. That is all there is to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of my colleague as to the number of employees in The Adjutant General's office now, and whether or not there has been any perceptible diminution? I made some investigation several months ago, and representations were made to me that the number of employees there was grossly excessive; that recommendations had been made to The Adjutant General by which he could reduce the number of employees several hundred and save more than a million dollars for clerk hire alone; that he desired to take such action, but was overruled by some of his superior officers, and it was determined to perpetuate in position and in place hundreds of unnecessary employees.

Mr. SMOOT. I referred to that matter in my remarks here at the time I was discussing the number of employees in the District of Columbia, and my information is exactly the same as that of my colleague in that regard. I wish, however, to exonerate The Adjutant General of any effort on his part to retain the extra number of employees.

In the testimony before the committee, however, The Adjutant General makes this statement:

I have been hoping each month that the work of The Adjutant General's Office would be reduced, but I regret to say that it is not reduced. The volume of work is about the same as it was six months ago. Possibly the number of cases coming in may be a little fewer, but the cases seem more difficult, and within the last week I have had to ask for volunteers in one of my divisions to keep the work current, and several hundred clerks have volunteered to work at night for that purpose.

Mr. President, if we appropriate this money, we will not only appropriate the unexpended balance of between seven hundred and eight hundred thousand dollars but we will give them the five hundred thousand dollars, or a portion of it, and they want more employees in the District of Columbia. In my opinion it is far better not to have any more employees come into the District of Columbia. In the sundry civil bill the committee agreed to an amendment that I offered in the Appropriations Committee paying the transportation of the employees that are to be separated from the service between now and July 1 of this year for the very purpose of taking care of the thousands of employees in the District of Columbia to-day that ought not to be here. There is no work here for them to do, and they ought to go home. I know that they have not saved sufficient money to pay their way home, because, as a general thing, they live up to every dollar received, no matter whether it is fourteen hundred or sixteen hundred or two thousand dollars per year. Many do not save a single cent, and I want the Government now to pay their transportation home, so that it can not be claimed that employees have been thrown out on the street with no chance whatever of getting home. I believe that the Senate will agree to that amendment, and I have not any doubt but that the House will agree to it, from all that I have heard from the House Members; and just as soon as July 1 passes no employee of this Government can claim that the Government of the United States has undertaken to drive out upon the street employees that have no work to do in the departments. We want to pay all unnecessary employees their transportation home, and I want to say that it will be better for them to go now; it will be better for the Government; and it will be better for all concerned.

Only this morning there came into my office an employee of one of the branches of the War Department, telling me of a division there that has over 30 employees where an average of a hundred letters a week is not received. I have referred to another division, in another department of the Government, in which conditions are worse than that.

Before the war we had between thirty and forty thousand employees in the District of Columbia.

We have been fighting for a decrease ever since the armistice was signed, and we have gotten down now to about 100,000. Now, we are asked here to authorize the appointment of 1,100 more employees in The Adjutant General's office.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean 1,100 more than The Adjutant General has to-day?

Mr. SMOOT. I do; from the testimony given by The Adjutant General.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator point out that testimony?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

At a hearing before the House committee in January I explained to them that it would be necessary to employ 1,100 clerks in addition to those I have.

That is what The Adjutant General said.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I have the rest of the context?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. I will read the whole of it again:

Gen. HARRIS. I estimate that there will probably be a balance of $700,000 or $800,000.

That amount is what the Military Affairs Committee now is trying to make available.

Senator SMOOT. That is, on July 1?

Gen. HARRIS. On July 1, but it will not be an available balance. It will be a balance that would have to be reappropriated to complete the statement of services for the adjutants general of the States.

At a hearing before the House committee in January I explained to them that it would be necessary to employ 1,100 clerks, in addition to those I have, to complete the statements of service for adjutants general of the States during this fiscal year.

That is what Gen. Harris said.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator understand that it would be necessary for him to employ 1,100 clerks in addition to those that he now has working on the draft records?

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the general says.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is there not a time limitation placed upon it? Will the Senator read it again?

Mr. SMOOT. During this fiscal year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If it was to be completed during this fiscal year.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, that is in part what we are making the appropriation for.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; we are appropriating for the next fiscal year.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, so far as this amendment is concerned, but——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what he states. In other words, if the Senator will allow me, The Adjutant General said: "If I am expected to finish the work on the selective-draft records this fiscal year"—and he said this in last January, did he not?

Mr. SMOOT. No; in March.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In March—"I will have to put 1,100 more employees to work."

Mr. SMOOT. His testimony was given in March.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and he stated that that would be necessary if he was to finish this work this year.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did he complete it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. He did not. He did not put the 1,100 more clerks at work. He explained that, I think, to Mr. Good, and he was advised by Mr. Good not to do that, and so the work is not completed; but it does not mean that he is going now, under this appropriation which we propose, to increase his force by 1,100. He is going on with his present force, and he is going to finish the work in the next fiscal year.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me tell the Senator what will happen. If this amendment is agreed to, there will be made available for the next fiscal year—not this fiscal year, but the next fiscal year—$800,000 for the coming fiscal year, and that will lapse and go back into the Treasury on the 30th day of June of this year. That is $800,000. Then there is, say, $500,000 more that the Appropriations Committee provided, making $1,300,000. I want to say that that is nearly enough to take care of 1,100 employees, though not quite, for a full year, and I will say that if the money is appropriated every cent of it will be spent. I can not recall to mind any case where there has been an appropriation for temporary employees in the District of Columbia but that it has been spent. No balance is allowed to go back into the Treasury of the United States. We have appropriated money here, and the temporary employees have been carried upon the rolls from month to month with nothing to do, and they will not be separated from the employment of the Government until June 30 of this year, and then if appropriated for in the legislative appropriation bill every one of them will be carried right on.

What a splendid thing it would be if we had some agency under the direct charge of Congress that we could send into every department and find out whether the employees are doing work or whether they are loafing. Then we could pay the men and the women that do the work as good wages as ever were paid outside of the Government service by any employer in the world, and as far as I am personally concerned I want to care for the employees that do the work, and I want to pay them well. If we will only make a house cleaning, and take out of the departments the thousands of employees that are not necessary, every one of the employees of the Government that remains in the service can be paid better wages, and we will have better work than we are getting to-day.

I do not want to say anything more on this matter. If the Senate wants to appropriate this money, and wants to expend an additional $700,000 or $800,000 during the coming year for the purpose named, it will vote for the amendment. If it does not want to do it, it will vote against it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not think any other Senator has been as earnest and zealous as the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] in pointing out to us the inefficiency in these departments, in showing the amount of work that is accomplished, and the number of clerks that are employed for that purpose, and in calling our attention again and again to the fact that we have divisions or bureaus down here that are spending millions every year, and in some places where there are only two or three letters written in a month.

The Senator is a member of the Commitee on Appropriations, and through that committee go most of the appropriation bills that are to pay for this extra labor, for people that are doing absolutely nothing. I can not understand why the Appropriations Committee does not limit the amount to be expended and the number of clerks that may be employed, and, where it finds a bureau that is doing no work, and is keeping from 50 to 75 persons month after month absolutely idle, why the committee does not find some way to get rid of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator has brought that matter to the attention of the Senate, and I think I shall take the time right now to answer him in part.

The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, appropriating the money for the employees of the different departments of our Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, has become a law, and other appropriation bills where lump sums are appropriated, outside of the great sundry civil bill, which will be before the Senate in a very little while, have become law.

The Appropriations Committee, in appropriating direct for the class and number of clerks, can keep some track of them; but the curse of wholesale extravagance comes through lump-sum appropriations. I want to say to the Senator now that the estimates that have been made for running the Government for the next fiscal year amounted to about $5,200,000,000, and the Appropriation Committees of the House and the Senate have cut those estimates down at least $1,500,000,000. Why, if the heads of the departments had all that they ask for, they would bankrupt this Government, and there is not a Government on earth wealthy enough to give them what they would ask.

I want to be perfectly frank, and say that it is a physical impossibility for members of the Appropriations Committee to make an investigation of every estimate; but if Congress had an agency of some kind so that when the Book of Estimates first came to Congress an investigation would be made immediately of all estimates for appropriations outside of those that are provided by statutory roll, it would save the Government of the United States hundreds of millions of dollars.

I have not any doubt, Mr. President, but that a budget bill will be passed at this session of Congress, and under that system I think there will be a partial relief. Perhaps I should not say partial, but a great relief, and yet I have not any doubt but that when that budget system is in full force, two or three years from now, when we see the advantages which come from it, and through the organization created by it, which will give the authority to investigate these different departments, and the estimates made by the President, we will also create some agency, under the direct control of Congress, to make further investigations of any report which may be made asking for money out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think the Senator has given me the information that I want. The Senator now says that the trouble lies in the fact——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will wait; I am not through yet.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me get to this one point. The Senator says the trouble lies in the fact that we are making lump-sum appropriations, but it is in the power of the Committee on Appropriations to report against any and all of these lump-sum appropriations, and also to provide how many clerks may be had in any single bureau, and what I am trying to find out is why the committee does not do that.

Mr. SMOOT. That was just what I was coming to in further answer to the Senator.

Mr. President, when the responsibility falls upon a Senator to decide as to whether he is going to give a certain appropriation or not, particularly after the heads of all of the divisions of the department come before the committee and state positively that unless the appropriation asked for is given they can not function, and that they can not do the work required of them, I want to say to you it is quite a responsibility for a man to take the view that it shall not be given, without a further chance of an investigation, so if a mistake is made it is generally on the side of safety.

Yet that is what we have done this year more than any other year since I have been on the Appropriations Committee. I do not know how far to cut. I am fearful, Mr. President, that we have not cut all that we ought to, and perhaps there are some instances in which we have cut a little too much. But if we only had the physical strength or if we only had the time to investigate every request for an appropriation, the very thing to which the Senator refers could be obviated. But we have not that time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me again, I think the Senator instanced a case in one of the departments in which there were 30 or 40——

Mr. SMOOT. Thirty-one employees.

Mr. McCUMBER. Thirty-one employees who had written three letters a week, I think, averaged that.

Mr. SMOOT. The whole of them averaged three letters a day.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator knows of that fact; and has that been taken care of by the Committee on Appropriations by a refusal to allow any further appropriations for that particular bureau?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that bureau was appropriated for. The House cut the estimates over a million dollars, and when the bill came over to the Senate the Senate made a further cut of $500,000; and I am in hopes they will get along with less than the amount finally granted.

I will say to the Senator that when I started to call the attention of the Senate to the number of employees in the War Risk Bureau they had about 15,000 employees, and when I made the statement on this floor that the bureau could do better work with 10,000 than they were doing with 15,000 some Senators thought I was exaggerating. I am going to make another statement to-day: I say to-day that I could take 5,000 first-class employees, and, if they would do the work which every employee of the Government ought to do, the work in that bureau would be done better than it is being done with the present 9,900 employees.

Mr. President, I do not know that it is worth while to take any more time on this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator another question? If the Senator could take 5,000 men in the War Risk Bureau and do the work, the Senator being a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and a very influential member, why is it that there is no provision in the appropriation bill reducing it, declaring that the number of employees shall not exceed 5,000? I had information only as late as yesterday that that whole bureau is a hive of idleness, and all the information I have agrees entirely with what the Senator states. I can not imagine, then, what our Committee on Appropriations are doing in voting in and bringing before the Senate appropriations to carry upon the rolls the thousands and thousands who are practically idle all the time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am quite sure that bureau, with the appropriation it has, can not carry all of these divisions which are in idleness. When June 30 comes there is going to be quite a change; there is not any doubt about that.

We have a statute now, Mr. President, designed to prevent the departments from making deficiencies, but it is perfectly useless. It never will be enforced unless Congress takes some further action. But if we had a real, live antideficiency law, with penalties attached for any officer of the Government creating a deficiency, that would save the Government of the United States untold hundreds of thousands of dollars.

I want to say that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee has warned the heads of these departments time and time again this year that we did not want any deficiency hereafter. We will have them, however. There is no doubt in my mind about that.

With the appropriations which have been made for the next fiscal year I am quite sure that there will not be as many employees in the District of Columbia as we have now. I do not know that we will ever get back to normal conditions. I doubt whether it is possible to do so. I want to see the day come when there will be a feeling of rest and a feeling of contentment from one end of this country to the other, as used to be the case, but I assure the Senate of this one thing, that there is not going to be very much contentment among the taxpayers of this country until they are convinced that Congress will pay some attention to how the money which is collected by taxes is to be spent, and when that time comes, Mr. President, I think it will be better for us all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss, in reply to the Senator from Utah, those matters which he covered in his general observations about the condition of the civil service of the Government, but I do intend to confine my discussion entirely to the amendment which is before the Senate, and to refute, if I can, the assertion of the Senator from Utah that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill takes care of this matter of the selective-draft records, for I am positive that it does not, and I think I can demonstrate my proposition.

In the office of The Adjutant General, exclusive of this selective-draft record work, a considerable number of civilian employees are employed. The Adjutant General rendered an estimate, through the appropriate authorities, to the Appropriations Committee, which ordinarily takes care of the appropriations to pay for the civilian employees of the War Department and all other departments. That estimate was for $2,094,970. It did not include an estimate for the clerk hire in connection with the selective-draft records, and so forth.

The Adjutant General, in discussing with the officials of the War Department the question of whether or not he should estimate for the selective-draft record clerks, was reminded that there was an unexpended balance of the appropriation under which that selective-draft record work was done, amounting to between seven and eight hundred thousand dollars, and it was assumed, in the making up of The Adjutant General's estimate, that that seven or eight hundred thousand dollars remaining unexpended from the appropriation of last year for the specific purpose of taking care of the draft records would be reappropriated by the Committee on Military Affairs, presumably. So there was not included in the estimate of The Adjutant General's office a provision for payment for these civilian employees.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator state why it should have been made available by the Military Affairs Committee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Because this appropriation came from the Military Affairs Committee last year. That may be right or wrong as a matter of policy, but I am describing what has actually occurred. The question of the Senator from Utah does not go to the facts in this case; it only goes to certain theories. The fact is they did not estimate for the selective-draft clerks. That is the fact. They may have been mistaken in assuming that the selective-draft clerks should be paid out of the appropriation carried in the Army appropriation bill, as they were paid last year. I think myself that their appropriation should be carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, but they are not carried in that appropriation bill, and I will demonstrate that in a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say that the matter was not considered by the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was; and it was completely misunderstood by the Appropriations Committee, because the Appropriations Committee believed that the two-million-dollar estimate included the pay of the selective-draft clerks, and it did not.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the Senator the estimates there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I have them right before me.

Mr. SMOOT. I mean our estimates.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment, Mr. President, and I think I can demonstrate that the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. SMOOT. I know——

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator has occupied about three-quarters of an hour of the time of the Senate, and I think I can occupy about 10 minutes in trying to demonstrate this.

It is perfectly true that the Senate conferees persuaded the House conferees to increase by $500,000 the amount of money to pay for temporary employees in the departments. That item will be found on page 78 of the printed bill as it was reported from the Committee on Appropriations. The House committee appropriated $2,500,000 for temporary employees. The Senate committee proposed to raise that amount to $4,000,000. That amount was again reduced to $3,000,000 in conference, making an increase of $500,000 over the House appropriation. The Senator from Utah says that the extra $500,000 would take care of The Adjutant General, but he forgets that there is a proviso printed on the following page, which states:

Provided further, That $1,850,000 of the foregoing sum of $3,000,000 shall be allotted to the office of The Adjutant General.

The $1,850,000 is less than the estimate of The Adjutant General, which did not include the selective-draft clerks in any way. So that he will actually need the $1,850,000, which is less than he estimated for his clerks other than the selective-draft records. The legislative appropriation bill failed to reappropriate $700,000 or $800,000 remaining in the selective-draft appropriation. So he is held out entirely unless the Army appropriation bill reappropriates that sum.

Mr. SMOOT. I have the estimate here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. His estimate is $2,094,000, but it does not include selective-draft clerks. As contrasted with the estimate of $2,094,000, which he wants for other purposes of his office, the Appropriations Committee gave him $1,850,000, $250,000 less than he wanted for that work, but did not give him anything for the selective-draft clerks, and they were not included in the estimate of $2,094,000 because he assumed that the Committee on Appropriations understood that he was asking for a reappropriation out of the unexpended balance of this year to take care of his selective-draft clerks. That is the situation, and I have a letter——

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment. I have a letter from The Adjutant General, dated May 24, only yesterday, and I am going to read it to demonstrate now whether he is right or wrong:

My Dear Senator—

It is addressed to myself——

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that he is wrong when he thinks the Senate Appropriations Committee did not know anything about the $800,000 that he wanted to be made available. He called the attention of the committee to that item, as I have already stated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, the Senate Committee on Appropriations remembered his discussion of that item, and, according to the Senator from Utah, it added $500,000 to the appropriation made for all civilian temporary clerks.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator ought to be perfectly fair and state that out of the $2,500,000 appropriated for the War Department for all of these purposes, there was assigned in the House $1,850,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To The Adjutant General?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And that is all he gets.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. But the question arose as to why The Adjutant General's office should, out of the whole appropriation of $2,500,000, receive all but $650,000, and the Senate committee, as well as the House, decided that that would be sufficient to do all the work required. They knew about this $700,000 or $800,000, as testified to by The Adjutant General, and that legislation would be necessary to make that available for the coming fiscal year. I have already said that, but the committee decided they would not make it available for 1921, and that they felt that $1,850,000 is all that The Adjutant General ought to spend for temporary employees for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will read his letter——

Mr. SMOOT. I know what the committee did.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I made reference to what the committee did because the Senator from Utah himself earlier in the afternoon stated that the $500,000 was added to the total appropriation for temporary employees to take care of The Adjutant General.

Mr. SMOOT. If it had not been added a part of it would have been taken off of the $1,850,000 appropriated for The Adjutant General's office.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it was not added to what should go to The Adjutant General's office. The bill specifically goes on and says The Adjutant General shall have $1,850,000. That is what he has.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator does not want to misstate what we did.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had hoped to be able to make a continuous statement. I did not interrupt the Senator. He is succeeding in hashing my statement up into little bits.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not interrupt the Senator further.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not mean to be discourteous, but the thing should be explained with some degree of continuity. I want to read the letter of The Adjutant General. The Adjutant General has not tried to deceive anyone. He has been perfectly frank about it. He had this same discussion with Mr. KAHN in the House, chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs. The House Committee on Military Affairs went into the whole thing. They saw also, just as the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate saw, that if this appropriation was not made the work of the selective-draft records would stop.

This letter is dated May 24, addressed to myself, and reads:

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your telephonic request for information concerning the alleged duplication of appropriations for the clerical employees of this office if the unexpended balance of the $3,500,000 appropriation is reappropriated, I beg leave to invite your attention to a letter on the subject addressed to Mr. KAHN by me on the 21st of April, and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 22d of April (pp. 5990–5991). The statements contained in that letter were in answer to allegations made on the floor of the House similar to those made on the floor of the Senate on Saturday. This subject is so intricate that I do not think any explanation would be complete if the letter were condensed. Consequently I respectfully refer you to the entire letter.

The letter is here before me, and before I finish I will refer to certain portions of it.

In addition to the statements contained in the letter referred to permit me to invite your attention to the following extract from a letter from the Secretary of War to you on this subject, dated April 26, 1920, and quoted by me in the hearing before your committee on May 7:

"There seems to be an impression in some quarters that the estimates for employees made by The Adjutant General for the Committee on Appropriations included the force necessary for the work. In this connection permit me to invite your attention to the letter of The Adjutant General to Hon. JULIUS KAHN, and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 22d of April (pp. 5990–5991) on the subject" (p. 242).

I also quote for your ready reference statements made by me at the hearing mentioned showing that I had previously explained to Mr. KAHN that the appropriation asked for in the Army appropriation bill was not a duplication of any appropriation carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill:

"Gen. HARRIS. * * * In a letter to which the Secretary referred I endeavored to explain to Mr. KAHN that this money, if it were reappropriated, would not be a duplication" (p. 242 of the hearings).

* * * * * * *

"Having so many different appropriations, apparently the members of the Appropriations Committee of the House misunderstood me and thought that the appropriation they had provided covered this case; but it did not, and I shall need every dollar of this amount in order to complete the statements of service."

He refers, then, to the reappropriated amount.

"The money appropriated by Congress was about $245,000 less than my estimate, and I shall require all of that.

That is, for purposes other than the selective draft.

The money appropriated by Congress was about $245,000 less than my estimate, and I shall require all of that. I mean the amount appropriated under the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was $245,000 less than my estimate, and I shall need all of that for work other than the preparation of statements of service for the adjutants general of the States" (p. 243).

In my hearings before the Senate subcommittee on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, page 166 of the hearings, the following statements were made, reference being had to the unexpended balance of the $3,500,000 appropriation:

"Gen. HARRIS. I estimate that there will probably be a balance of $700,000 or $800,000.

"Mr. SMOOT. That is, on July 1?

"Gen. HARRIS. On July 1; but it will not be an available balance. It will be a balance that would have to be reappropriated to complete the statement of services for the adjutants general of the States."

This balance is not reappropriated in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill for the fiscal year 1921. As stated in my letter to Mr. KAHN, it will be impossible to complete the work of furnishing the statements of service for the adjutants general of the States unless the unexpended balance of the $3,500,000 is reappropriated, because the $1,850,000 carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill is less than the sum necessary to conduct the current business of the office, and, of course, none of the last-mentioned sum would be available for any other purpose, such as furnishing statements of service to adjutants general of the States.

Very truly, yours,

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

Now, referring for a moment to the letter which The Adjutant General addressed to Mr. KAHN, in which he goes into great detail, explaining how this misunderstanding arose, and how these funds are administered, and how it is necessary for him to have this $700,000 or $800,000 reappropriated or else the selective-draft work will stop, I find that——

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to interrupt the continuity of the Senator's remarks——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. But possibly I can shed some light on that, as I understand the Senator is now going back to the misunderstanding on the desire to reappropriate money.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I regret that a colloquy should come up on this matter since I happen to be interested in the subject matter in both committees. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is absolutely right in his claim that appropriations of this kind ought to go in the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I agree with that, too; but they are not there.

Mr. WARREN. He is absolutely right that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and the Senator from Utah himself, in particular, have striven to cut these amounts down from time to time, and with such success that in the legislative bill the Senate added, I think, something less than 2 per cent—certainly it was not as much as 2 per cent of increase—and in a bill that I hope to get up very soon we have added in committee less than 3 per cent to the amount fixed by the House. The House itself has exercised great care to cut down to the lowest limit. In this particular matter I am giving my remembrance and the two Senators can see from their different standpoints just what we should do with it.

In a deficiency bill this matter came before a subcommittee of which the Senator from Utah was not a member. Preceding that, both the Secretary of War and The Adjutant General of the Army had been before the subcommittee to explain that unless there should be some agreement to reappropriate some of this money which was appropriated for these records they would have to employ a thousand or more extra clerks in order to get the work done before the end of the present fiscal year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is right.

Mr. WARREN. The Secretary of War was anxious that they should not increase the number, and The Adjutant General felt the same, and they told me that they thought they had an arrangement with the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, Mr. GOOD, that if they would undertake to carry it along without hiring more clerks there would be incorporated in the next deficiency bill a provision to reappropriate this money, so that the work might be continued and probably finished during the fiscal year 1921. When the item came up again it was not put in on the House side. If the Senate the deficiency bill did include that amount and reappropriated it. It was one of the things in conference that constituted almost the last difference to be composed. It was composed not by a reappropriation of the full amount but by a reappropriation of, I think, $600,000, though it may have been $400,000, and also by the appropriation of $170,000 direct, so that they could carry on the work in the way they were doing and it might be continued until the end of the year and until the matter might be taken up in later bills.

When The Adjutant General came before the committee which was considering the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, he evidently must have been relying upon this amount being carried on some other bill, for he did not, in his evidence before the committee, represent—as he should have done, I think—the exact situation. It is true that that amount of money was appropriated for a certain line of work, and I presume it is true—it ought to be true—that so much of it as is not reappropriated goes back into the Treasury on the 1st of July. There was that understanding with another subcommittee relating to the reappropriation or the probable reappropriation of the sum referred to. Therefore The Adjutant Geneal did not put on the extra clerks, and hence the call for a reappropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the recollection of the Senator from Wyoming is correct.

Mr. WARREN. I thought the Senator ought to have that explanation before going into the matter any further.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am very glad the Senator from Wyoming interrupted me to make the explanation.

I shall not read all of the letter which The Adjutant General addressed to Mr. KAHN; but merely to bring the discussion to a conclusion, so far as I am concerned, I will say that the letter sets forth the estimate which The Adjutant General submitted. The estimate is for $2,094,970. It is divided into three items:

Class A. Existing Military Establishment, 417 clerks, $444,100.

That is for the temporary clerks.

Class B. Demobilized Army—work connected with furnishing reports to the War Risk Bureau, Auditor for the War Department, Director of Finance, and other current work connected with the demobilized Army, 1,290 clerks, $1,572,000.

That has nothing to do with selective-draft work at all.

The next item is for 119 subclerical employees, at $78,870—those are laborers of one kind or another, I assume—the total being $2,094,970.

After stating that estimate, The Adjutant General continues his letter:

This shows clearly that my estimate of $2,094,970 did not include funds for work connected with the selective-service records and the furnishing of statements of service to the adjutants general of the several States.

With reference to the preparation of statements of service for the adjutants general of States, I stated (p. 1752):

"* * * In order to complete this work before July 1, 1920, it will be necessary to increase our force by about 1,100 clerks."

That is the incident to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] referred awhile ago. He never increased them, because he was told that that would not be advisable; that the work could continue through the next fiscal year; that it was inadvisable to bring new clerks to Washington when he could get them out of the departments here.

He continues:

The chairman of your committee suggested at a hearing on January 2 that it would be far more economical and better in every way for Congress to make the unexpended balance of that appropriation available during the next fiscal year. I informed the Secretary of War of the suggestion and he heartily agreed with the chairman of the committee, and the Secretary directed me to confine my efforts in the future to increasing my force by the employment of only such clerks as may be released from other bureaus of the War Department or other departments in this city.

Having discontinued my efforts to complete the work during the fiscal year at the suggestion of the chairman of the Appropriation Committee, it did not occur to me that that committee would offer any objection to the reappropriation of the unexpended balance of the $3,500,000 appropriated for this specific work and the work connected with the draft records. As to whether this reappropriation should be made by the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Military Affairs, it would be presumptuous on the part of a layman to express an opinion. The original appropriation was carried in the Army appropriation act, and for that reason I made my request for the reappropriation of this money to the Committee on Military Affairs.

In the discussions on the floor of the House a member of the Appropriations Committee quoted the following from my statement before the subcommittee on the legislative, executive, and judicial bill:

"The estimates for the office—

This is rather important, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Wyoming to it—were revised by a War Department board convened for the purpose of considering the financial needs of the various bureaus of the department. That board allotted to this office $1,345,000 for the additional roll on the assumption that $750,000 of the $3,500,000 appropriated for the care and custody of the selective-service records and for the furnishing of statements of service to the adjutants general of States would be made available for the payment of salaries of the additional roll during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. This sum will not be available for that purpose. But for this erroneous assumption it is presumed that the $2,094,970 needed by the office would have been approved by the board, as the sum of $1,345,000 tentatively allotted and the $750,000 before referred to is $2,094,970—

the amount necessary to properly conduct the business of the office."

The purpose of that statement of mine was to show the committee why the estimate of the Secretary of War as to the needs of The Adjutant General's office for the next fiscal year was less than my own estimate. The War Department board referred to called upon me for a statement showing the amount that I would spend for the employment of clerks from the special appropriation, $3,500,000. From my reply that I would require $2,750,000 for that purpose the board erroneously assumed that there would be an unexpended balance of this appropriation of $750,000. This $750,000 was required for the payment of delayed claims from draft boards; employment of mechanics and laborers in the unpacking and setting up the filing cases; for the purchase of new filing cases and equipment; for the employment of engineers, firemen, watchmen, messengers, and other nonclerical help; and for repairs and alterations to the building containing the selective-service records.

The experience of the preceding year, and particularly the last three months, convinces me that the $1,850,000 carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the use of this office will be insufficient to properly conduct the work connected with the existing Military Establishment (previously designated class A work) and the work of reporting from the records of the demobilized Army (designated class B); and consequently there will be no money from this appropriation available for the care and custody of the selective-service records and the furnishing of statements of service to the adjutants general (designated class C work). Unless the unexpended balance of the $3,500,000 is reappropriated and made available it will be impossible to complete the work last mentioned.

Trusting that this explanation will convince you that I did not deceive intentionally or unintentionally either the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Appropriations, I am,

Very truly, yours,

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all that The Adjutant General has said in that letter is true from his viewpoint, but he has yet to realize that the Appropriations Committees of the House and the Senate decided that the departments of the Government are not going to be given every cent for which they ask. Of course, that is not as yet fully realized by The Adjutant General.

I know that the estimate was for $2,094,970. I have the Book of Estimates; I can name every item for which estimated, and I know that that estimate did not include the $700,000 to which he referred in his testimony which he wanted made available for the coming fiscal year. Not only that, but the Committee on Appropriations of the House also understood his wishes in this regard. Now, he says that because the Appropriations Committees only gave $1,850,000 he can not run the ordinary affairs of his office without considering the draft service. I wish to say to The Adjutant General now that if he can not run the affairs of his office with $1,850,000 for next year he will not receive that much for the following year.

The Adjutant General's office was cut below their estimates, I believe, less than any other department of the Government. The two committees decided that The Adjutant General's office should have $1,850,000 to do the work required of it for the coming fiscal year, including the draft-service work. According to its provisions as the House passed the appropriation, as I have heretofore said, The Adjutant General's office took the whole of the appropriation with the exception of $650,000. In other words, all the other branches of the War Department for temporary employees were to receive $650,000, and the remainder, amounting to $1,850,000, was to be given to The Adjutant General's office.

The conferees on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill did not reduce the amount which the House gave The Adjutant General of $1,850,000; they said, "We will let you have that full amount of money to do the work that is required of your department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921." We gave, however, an increase to the other branches of the department amounting to $500,000. If the increase of $500,000 had been divided as suggested by the Senator from New York, the amount for The Adjutant General's office would have been less than $1,850,000.

That is the situation as it was, and there is no misunderstanding at all on the part of the House and Senate conferees on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. We gave them every dollar that we intended to give them.

The Senator from North Dakota has asked the question, Why do we not get rid of these extra employees? We can not get rid of them now if we are going to give $750,000 more than was put in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill to pay temporary employees.

I am not finding fault because the original appropriation was recommended by the Military Affairs Committee, for during the war we did anything which seemed necessary and it did not make a particle of difference what bill happened to be under consideration, if an item were necessary, we made the appropriation on the bill which chanced to be the most convenient; but I wish to say that this year the war is not on, and all of the temporary employees ought to have been taken care of in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. That is what the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses expected to do. They expected the War Department to be operated with the amount which we appropriated, namely, $3,000,000.

Mr. President, there is no need of my taking any more of the time of the Senate. I have explained the situation as it is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there may be some Senators who are confused as to what the issue is. I will say that we are about to vote on the committee amendment, and I hope the committee amendment will be approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is absent because of illness, to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have agreed to pair with that Senator during his absence for the afternoon, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BECKHAM. I understand that my pair, if present, would vote "yea." With that understanding, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I understand that if present he would vote as I am about to vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. CALDER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] on official business.

I wish also to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—43.

Ball	Harding	Moses	Spencer
Beckham	Harrison	New	Sterling
Brandegee	Henderson	Nugent	Thomas

Gerry	Kirby	Shields

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that I shall request a vote in the Senate on the committee amendment on the lower half of page 61, which was rejected this afternoon on a division.

Now, Mr. President, not as a committee amendment, but as one which emanates from the department, although not in the form desired by the department, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and shall ask an opportunity to explain its necessity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 75, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

EMERGENCY COMMISSIONED PERSONNEL.

That the President is authorized to retain temporarily in service, under their present commissions, or to discharge and recommission temporarily in lower grades, such emergency officers as he may deem necessary; but the total number of officers on active duty, exclusive of retired officers and disabled emergency officers undergoing treatment for physical reconstruction, shall at no time exceed 17,000. Any emergency officer may be discharged when his services are no longer required, and all such officers shall be discharged not later than December 31, 1920. All officers of the Regular Army holding commissions granted for the period of the existing emergency, in whatever grade, shall be discharged therefrom not later than June 30, 1920.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senate will doubtless remember that about last August the Congress enacted the so-called 18,000-officer bill. That bill authorized the Secretary of War to retain in the military service emergency and Regular officers whose aggregate number should not exceed 18,000, exclusive of emergency officers who had been wounded or disabled during the war and were undergoing physical reconstruction in the hospitals. That bill also provided that the Secretary of War could retain those officers of the Regular Army in advanced rank whenever he saw fit to do so in the interest of proper administration of the service. That bill provided that this authorization should terminate on July 1, 1920.

When July 1, 1920, comes, if no other action is taken by the Congress, the emergency officers, exclusive of those wounded emergency officers now in the hospitals, must all be discharged, and all the Regular officers who still retain advanced rank—and their number is about 20 per cent of the total of the Regular officers in the Army—will be reduced to their regular rank.

The Senate and the House have each passd an Army reorganization bill. The House bill provides that the Regular Army may have 17,800 officers, and the Senate bill provides that the Regular Army may have 16,993 officers. Both bills provide that the new Regular Army officers who must be taken into the Regular Army, and who will be very largely taken from these emergency officers, shall have their commissions dated from July 1, 1920.

But, Mr. President, between the time of the passage of the Army reorganization bill and July 1—and there is now high hope of its passage before June 5—it is going to be absolutely impossible for the War Department to reorganize the Regular Army in the revolutionary manner provided for in this bill which is now in conference, to get all these officers examined by a board of general officers, who must comb them through and decide how many of them are fit to come into the Regular service, how many in each grade, and where they are going to be assigned. It is going to be utterly impossible to do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me finish my sentence. It is going to be utterly impossible to do that by July 1 next. It will take several months to do it. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does that include officers who have already been discharged? Will a colonel who came from France be eligible for reinstatement in his old grade under the amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under the reorganization bill pending, of course. This has nothing to do with that. But it is going to take at least six months, the conferees believe, for the Army to get reconstituted under the new law, to get all these men commissioned after they have been examined by the examining boards.

This amendment I offer is for the purpose of permitting the Secretary of War to continue to retain the emergency officers now being retained for six months, up to December 31, 1920, but not to retain the Regular officers in the higher ranks. On July 1 next they must go back to their regular rank. If this is not done, or if something like it is not done, there will be a hopeless hiatus between July 1 next and the final completion of the reorganization of the Army under the new reorganization act.

This request emanated from the Secretary of War. The War Department requested that the Regular officers who now hold advanced temporary rank may be retained in that advanced temporary rank.

I had to pass on this question myself, Mr. President. It is not a committee amendment. It has come to me very suddenly. I suggest, however, in this amendment that the Regular officers now holding advanced temporary rank be not permitted to continue to hold those ranks. It is a practice which has injured the morale of the Regular service very severely. It has caused ill feeling and discontent, which every Senator has heard about. They have been expected to surrender their advanced temporary rank on July 1, and they had better do it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not follow the amendment very carefully. Do I understand that this provision for retaining these emergency temporary officers shall be only until the reorganization of the Army is effected?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Only until the reorganization is effected, and in no case later than December 31, 1920. That is the effect of it. I regret very much to have to offer an amendment of this sort, because I know it is puzzling to the Senate. It is legislation on an appropriation bill; but this bill is the only one to which it can be attached as a legislative rider, and if it is not done we will have an utterly impossible situation immediately following July 1 next.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Under this amendment, to what extent would emergency officers outrank Regular officers and really take their places during this temporary period?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In a very few instances. There are no emergency brigadier generals, of course, and no emergency major generals. There are a few emergency colonels in the Ordnance Department, I think. There are some, as the Senator knows, in the Judge Advocate General's Department, and there are some in the General Staff, if I recollect correctly. I discussed that with Regular officers, who say, "You will do more good to the Regulars if you get rid of this advanced temporary rank for all of us than anything you can do. We do not mind for a few weeks or a few months being nominally outranked by an emergency officer." They have said to me, "We are men enough to stand a little thing like that for a little while"; and it will save money to the Government, incidentally, as the Senator knows.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have just one more amendment. It is contained in a letter addressed to me by the Secretary of War, which I ask that the Secretary may read to the Senate. It gives the whole reason for the proposed amendment and contains the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 22, 1920.

MY DEAR SENATOR WADSWORTH: Because of the unique and tragic position of the city of Verdun in the World War and the imperishable glory won by the great army which successfully defended it to the last, several of the European Governments are conferring upon the city valor medals and distinguished service emblems of one sort and another. It has been suggested that the French people would regard it as a graceful and generous tribute from America if the congressional medal of honor might be so conferred. Of course, our statutes do not authorize that use of the congressional medal of honor, but I venture to suggest the inclusion of a line in the Army appropriation bill, now under consideration, which will give the President this authority. For your consideration I suggest the following language:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, in the name of the Congress and people of the United States, to present to the city of Verdun, France, the congressional medal of honor as a mark of America's appreciation of the valor of its defenders."

I am writing Mr. KAHN that I have made this suggestion and bespeaking his sympathy for the provision should the Senate incorporate it and return it for consideration as an amendment to the House of Representatives.

Cordially, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr.,
United States Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which is contained in the Secretary's letter. The letter describes very adequately the reasons for this request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. Add after the amendment just agreed to, on page 75:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, in the name of the Congress and people of the United States, to present to the city of Verdun, France, the congressional medal of honor as a mark of America's appreciation of the valor of its defenders.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman if it would not be more distinctive and carry more honor if it were a special medal of honor, rather than to have it awarded as one among many medals of honor which, by the law, are restricted to certain people, officers and men, and for certain services? I think it ought to mean even more than what is proposed. The congressional medal of honor, as the Senator knows, can be bestowed only upon enlisted men and officers who are recommended sufficiently for extraordinary gallantry in action. Undoubtedly the people of Verdun, and the people of all France, have exhibited all kinds of gallantry; but this particular medal, which is for particular services, I think is rather insufficient. I am not going to object, of course, if the Senator sees fit to offer it in that shape. I think, however, that it ought to be a specially designed medal of honor given to that city as a distinctive medal from the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is in line with the custom pursued in several foreign countries. It seems to be the practice there, and in some instances I think it is a very handsome practice, to confer a soldier's medal upon a community. In the French Army the flag of a regiment is very often decorated, just as an individual soldier would be decorated, with an individual medal, and the whole regiment is the proud possessor of that decoration. The croix de guerre can be given to a town. Several of the foreign Governments pursue that practice, and according to information coming from the Secretary of War several of the allied countries are conferring some of their decorations on the city of Verdun, and they are the same decorations which they confer upon individuals. It is suggested, and I have no doubt that the American ambassador to France forwarded the suggestion to this country, that we authorize the President to confer the congressional medal of honor upon the city of Verdun.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, those medals to which the Senator refers are of a different nature. Whatever the Congress may determine is all right, and I do not propose to object to this if the Senator thinks it can not be bettered, but it is a very extraordinary thing, and no medals of just that kind have been distributed by any country to my knowledge.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it is a very handsome thing to do, and I think the simpler these things are the better.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 39, after line 24, insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury, for the use of the Public Health Service, the military reservation of Whipple Barracks, Ariz., now occupied by said service for hospital purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 11, line 5, after the word "required," strike out the comma and the figures "$4,000,000" and insert a semicolon and the following:

For beginning the construction of buildings for the Signal Corps at Camp Alfred Vail, N. J., to be immediately available and remain available until expended, $5,500,000: Provided, That section 1136, Revised Statutes, and the provisions contained in the sundry civil appropriation act of June 25, 1910, and the Army appropriation act of May 12, 1917, prescribing limitations as to the cost of certain structures, shall not apply to structures to be constructed under this appropriation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, this provides for a building plan of permanent construction for the Signal Corps of a research laboratory and school for enlisted specialists at Camp Vail, Little Silver, N. J. This was brought to the attention of the committee by the Signal Corps during the hearings, but owing to the fact that the Secretary of War had not approved of it and it had not been estimated for and had not been approved by the General Staff, the committee passed the amendment over.

Since that time the approval of the Secretary of War and the approval of the General Staff have been secured, and the estimate of $1,500,000, which this amendment carries, has been estimated for by the Treasury Department.

Camp Alfred Vail is the base station of the Signal Corps. Everyone knows the service which was rendered by that branch of the Army during the war. At the present time there are over 1,000 enlisted men there and 40 officers, and the camp is unfit, practically, for the purposes for which it has been created. The Government owns 450 acres in fee simple, for which they paid $125,000. They have expended in temporary buildings $1,000,000. There are four wooden hangars with concrete floors; there are numerous wooden buildings used for radio laboratory work, but there are no facilities for heat, no water, and no gas. The officers' families have to board in the adjacent towns. The enlisted men are in these temporary shacks without heat or light, there being only one small stove at the end of these dormitories.

This school is already overburdened, but they have driven out of Leavenworth the tactical school for signal officers, and they have to care at this station for an increased number of officers and men by reason of the transfer of that school from Leavenworth to Camp Vail. They have a plan for permanent construction, the cuartel plan, providing for the establishment of permanent buildings and permanent quarters for officers, and this appropriation is to take care of enlisted men.

I am just as much in favor of economy as anyone else in the Senate, but this is one of the most important branches of the service and it has been the most neglected.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that this is the only place now left where this instruction will be given?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is the only place. I consider the research laboratory in this school for enlisted specialists, where a man who graduates from it is immediately taken by any telegraph or telephone company as an expert, as the most important one of our vocational schools in any of the branches of the Army. When we realize that it was this corps that devised the multiple system, I think it is called multiple-X, where 6 messages are sent on one wire in opposite directions, 12 messages at one time, we realize the commercial value of its scientific achievement. It was here that Gen. Squiers developed his wired wireless and carried on his experiments for that purpose, where insulated conductors were proven unnecessary for telephone and telegraph submarine cables.

Of course we all realize that the bill carries a very large appropriation, but I feel that this corps is so important that I have urged the War Department to present this estimate in order that it might go on the bill. The Signal Corps is one of the most important branches of the Army. They are carrying on research work that will undoubtedly produce inventions which will revolutionize the transmission of cable messages. I feel that, so far as this branch of the Army is concerned, we should be in advance and not behind other Governments in our experiments.

When we consider what we have done through this Signal Corps, I feel that the necessary appropriations should be made for a permanent laboratory and the permanent housing of these men at this important Army base. That is the reason why, after the committee has reported the bill, I have felt it my duty, an important duty, to present the amendment. I hope that the Senate will approve of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it is with the greatest regret and hesitation that I feel impelled to oppose the adoption of the amendment, knowing, as I do, the interest, and legitimate interest, which the Senator from New Jersey takes in it.

The Senate may be interested to know something of this situation. At Fort Leavenworth the War Department for some time has been carrying on a Signal Corps tactical training school. At Camp Alfred Vail, in New Jersey, which, as I recollect it, is a war-time camp, built during the war, they are conducting in a small way a training school for the men and doing some research work, but at Leavenworth the tactical use of the Signal Corps troops and the functioning of the Signal Corps organizations is taught in what might be termed the higher school.

The War Department issued an order transferring the Signal Corps school of Leavenworth to Camp Alfred Vail, N. J., and notified the personnel, naturally, that they would have to move soon. It then turned out that there are not enough accommodations at Camp Alfred Vail, it being a temporary camp, composed very largely of shacks.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will say that they have been carrying on this research work in these enlisted schools during the entire war and the accommodations have never been satisfactory, and that last winter the enlisted men nearly froze, notwithstanding the fact that they are now overburdening that place with additional troops from Leavenworth.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true, and now they order more men there. When the Signal Corps officers came before the Committee on Military Affairs they described this situation rather briefly, but enough to call our attention to it. We asked if there was any estimate from the War Department regarding the project for the permanent building of a Signal Corps school or post at Camp Alfred Vail. It turned out at that time that there was no estimate, or if there was it was not ready to be presented to Congress. In fact, the reply came back from the War Department that the estimate was not ready. The committee went ahead and finished the bill and reported it to the Senate. Yesterday or last Saturday the estimate arrived from the Secretary of War.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I suggest that it was no fault of the Signal Corps? The Signal Corps sent it to the General Staff some weeks ago and the delay was on the part of the General Staff.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not blaming the Signal Corps in the slightest degree. They are the victims of an impossible situation. But only yesterday or two days ago this estimate arrived, after the committee had finished its work and reported the bill after lengthy hearings and after the Senate has had the bill under consideration a day or two.

This estimate carries an appropriation of $1,500,000. It is for permanent construction—officers' quarters, administration buildings, I assume, and other things. It is to be the beginning of the building up of a permanent Army post. Not a member of the committee or a Member of the Senate has the slightest information from the War Department as to how large this post is going to be eventually, what plan is to be adhered to, what plan we are going to build to, how many men are going to be quartered there in time of peace, and the general nature of the institution which it is proposed to build has never been explained to the committee in any way whatsoever.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the testimony explains to a certain degree the plan that the Signal Corps have in mind. It was stated that plans could not be prepared until legislation was enacted for the purpose. I read from the hearings:

> Capt. ALBRO. The Signal Corps desires to submit, and will submit, to the Secretary of War, as its idea of this plant for Camp Vail, the cuartel style of construction, a quadrangle, 500 feet on the side on the inside. This construction at Camp Vail, when completed, will represent, heating plant and all, an outlay of approximately $6,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is just the beginning. I do not object to $6,000,000 eventually, but I should like to see the plan sketched and laid before a committee of the Senate so that we can tell what this institution is to be. This business of sending to the Senate an estimate on a thing like this, involving permanent construction of a new Army post, after the committee has finished its work, is absolutely indefensible. It is not fair. The Senator from New Jersey is not to blame, nor is the Signal Corps.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment if the chairman of the committee feels that as a matter of policy it is not necessary for the Signal Corps to have a permanent establishment, that it is not necessary for the Government to carry on research radio work, this very important work, that it is not necessary for officers who are carrying on that work as a branch of the Government to be housed as comfortably as those at Leavenworth and West Point and elsewhere.

It is not a question as to what the procedure has been or what the ethics have been. The question is whether as a war policy it is wise to have the Signal Corps properly housed and properly equipped. If the Senator feels that it is not important, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not say that I do not think it is important, but if we are going to let things be done in this way for Camp Alfred Vail, why not put $3,000,000 in the bill in the same way for Camp Bennings? There a new Army post is authorized, owned, and operated, and is going to be maintained. They are living in temporary buildings down there. There is another one at Camp Knox. There is another one at Camp Humphreys down the river. There is another one at Camp Bragg, and there is another at Camp Eustis, and so it goes all around the country. Those have been designated by order of the Secretary of War as permanent posts.

Some day, of course, temporary construction will have to be supplanted by more permanent construction, and the estimates for all that permanent construction should be submitted to the appropriate committees of Congress to give them opportunity to see what these plants are, what we are going to build to, and what the reasons are.

I say it is unfair to the Senate at large and to the Committee on Military Affairs to send an estimate here for $1,500,000 for permanent construction at a camp that no member of the committee has seen, about whose size for the future we have no idea, about the nature of the construction at which we have no idea and have no information. It is unfair to send estimates here and ask that millions be voted from the Treasury on such a request as that. So I am compelled to oppose the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Possibly there has been some error in the method in which this amendment has been presented, but I feel that it is so important that this research work, this radio and telegraphic work, should go on, that I have offered the amendment. That is the important question, whether the Army is going to continue instruction work, whether they are going to give Gen. Squiers, who has already contributed to scientific invention of immense value of millions and millions of dollars beyond this appropriation, incomplete equipment, and make these officers suffer during another winter which may be as inclement as the last one, or whether we are going to do for them what we do for other officers at other posts.

As I understand it, we can not have the plans drawn until we have the legislation. This limits the appropriation to $1,500,000. Possibly if the committee has time, and I think we ought to take the time, they should go to these various posts and to these various war plants and investigate them. Possibly the committee could have made investigations and could have gone further, but I feel, and I am sincere in this, that we are making a grave mistake unless we give the Signal Corps enough money to provide the proper facilities and the proper housing for the men.

I ask for a vote on the amendment.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment, notice of which was duly given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 75, after line 12, insert the following section:

SEC. 2. (a) That when used in this section—

(1) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, corporation, and association;

(2) The term "aeroplane" includes aeroplanes, aeroplane motors, and accessories and parts thereof; and

(3) The term "purchase price" means the price or amount paid or to be paid for an aeroplane as packed for shipment to the United States, or in the case of an aeroplane imported for sale after entry, means the amount declared by the importer to be the price for which he intends to offer such aeroplane for sale.

(b) For the period of three years from the date of the passage of this act, any aeroplane imported into any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, shall be appraised at the port of entry to determine whether the purchase price thereof is less than the cost of production, as prescribed in paragraph L of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913.

(c) If such purchase price is found to be less than such cost of production there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties, if any, otherwise provided by law on such imported aeroplanes, a special or dumping duty in the amount of the difference between the purchase price and such cost of production.

(d) If any person selling, shipping, consigning, or manufacturing aeroplanes exported to the United States fails or refuses to submit to the inspection of a duly accredited investigating officer of the United States, when so requested to do, any or all of his books, records, or accounts pertaining to the value or classification of such aeroplanes, then the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby empowered and directed, while such failure or refusal continues, to refuse entry into the United States of any aeroplane sold, shipped, consigned, or manufactured by such person.

(e) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make rules and regulations for the determination of the purchase price of aeroplanes imported into the United States and such other rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this section.

(f) Any person who violates any provision of this section or of the rules or regulations made in pursuance thereof, or who by false declaration or otherwise directly or indirectly misrepresents to any officer or employee of the United States the purchase price of any aeroplane imported or to be imported into the United States, or who having imported an aeroplane for sale after entry sells or offers for sale such aeroplane at a price less than that declared by such person at the time of importation to be the price for which he intended to offer such aeroplane for sale, or any person who, being the purchaser, importer, or consignee of any aeroplane imported into the United States fails or refuses to submit to the inspection by a duly accredited investigating officer of the United States of any or all of his books, records, or accounts pertaining to such imported aeroplanes, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment for not exceeding two years, or by both.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I do not care to make any statement concerning the purpose of the amendment unless there is occasion for my doing so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield to me?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I was about to raise a point of order against the proposed amendment that it is new legislation upon an appropriation bill, but I will reserve the point of order until the Senator makes an explanation, if he cares to do so.

Mr. NEW. Then, Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold his point of order, I will make a statement to the Senate giving the reasons for the amendment.

I believe that this is a very vital matter. If I did not so believe I certainly should not present the amendment at this time and to this bill. The pending measure, however, furnishes the only occasion that can be taken advantage of by Congress for the adoption of this very necessary provision. I believe if Senators will listen to my statement they will be interested in the situation that is presented here for their consideration. The facts are these: Some time ago there was formed in England a commercial company which is known as the Aircraft Disposal Co., the president of which is Mr. F. Handley-Page, who is himself an engineer and inventor of one of the best known British machines. That company made a contract with the British Government, under the terms of which they took over all the surplus aircraft, including motors and their parts which were owned by the British Government, consisting of machines of all types. It cost the British Government to make these machines more than £100,000,000 and some estimates place the amount as nearer £200,000,000. We know, however, that their cost exceeded £100,000,000. The Aircraft Disposal Co. paid for those surplus machines £1,000,000 or 1 cent on the dollar.

Mr. President, there was a further provision in the contract to the effect that the Aircraft Disposal Co. was to give to the British Government 50 per cent of whatever profits accrued from the sale of the machines. If that is commercial competition, I am a poor judge of what constitutes commercial competition. The company was to sell those machines not in England but wherever they could elsewhere in the markets of the world. Arrangements have been made to sell those machines in this country, and numbers of them are at this moment on their way to the United States.

I have here a consular report furnished by the State Department, and in proof of what I say I should like to read a paragraph or two from the report, and then, with the permission of the Senate, I should like to put the report in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

Mr. NEW. I now read from the report of Alfred Nutting, clerk of the American consul general at London, England, which states:

With reference to the writer's report, under above title, dated March 17, 1920, and also the department's cable of March 25, 1920, it may be of interest to report that the London Daily Express of April 14 states that:

"Many important sales of aircraft to foreign countries have already been made by the syndicate which recently acquired the British Government's surplus war stock of airplanes, engines, and stores.

"Mr. F. Handley-Page, head of the disposal company, has just returned from America, and is already busy with plans for the sale of thousands of machines.

Then follows a statement from Mr. Page:

"'Nobody actually knows yet how many airplanes we have acquired from the Government,' said Mr. Page to a Daily Express representative yesterday. 'It is the largest deal of its kind ever completed, and is much greater than Slough and the stock of army motor cars.

I may say that Mr. Handley-Page refers to a sale by Great Britain of army motor transports, and the aircraft sale is said to be very much greater than was that.

"'We have taken so far more than six depots of airplanes and stores. There are still innumerable machines to be handed over to us.

Proceeding further, he says:

"'We have achieved unification of sales by acquiring all the Government stocks and are in a position to deal much more advantageously than if there were a number of selling agencies—

They have a monopoly—

"'The Government will make a great deal of money out of their deal, and so, incidentally, shall we.'

"The sum of £1,000,000 was the price paid by Mr. Handley Page's syndicate to the Government for the surplus stocks of aircraft, with an undertaking to hand over 50 per cent of the profits made on reselling. Estimates put the total amount likely to be received from resales at £100,000,000."

Or $500,000,000.

Mr. President, it is the purpose to sell all of that surplus stock of aircraft in this country which our market will absorb. As I have said, I know, and the Consular Bureau of the State Department will so inform any Senator upon inquiry, that many of these planes are at present on the sea on their way to the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that those machines which are being shipped over here now are practically obsolescent for the uses of the British Government?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And that as they sell these machines they are building more modern types and improving those which they used during the war?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the hour is late, and I am not going to quote all of the authority I have here for the statement that I shall make as briefly as I can, but this whole transaction is a part of the British plan to make Great Britain as much mistress of the air as she has been and proposes to continue to be mistress of the sea. She is manufacturing aircraft right along at a very rapid rate, while we here in the United States, having invented the airplane, have passed into a condition of absolute quiet, at least, and nonproductivity.

Mr. President, there has been formed an American company for the purpose of transporting mails, light freight, and so forth. With that company I have no quarrel, and I am not proposing to criticize them at all. I am willing that that company or any number of companies shall be formed here for the transportation of mail, freight, and even passengers, for that matter, for I believe that such development will surely come, but the particular company of which I speak is to buy the British planes to which I have referred, at what figure nobody knows. Whatever they pay for them, one-half of it goes to the British Government, our competitor—not a commercial concern. It is the British Government, and we might just as well realize it here in the Senate; and if the United States allows this thing to go through we are not only building up Great Britain's industry but we are absolutely putting a block in the path not merely of the progress but of the very existence of our own industry.

I have talked with Mr. Handley-Page himself before he returned to England; I have talked with various representatives of this transportation company of which I speak; I have talked with officials of the War Department and the State Department. I have innumerable authorities here, excerpts from British newspapers, and all, which prove absolutely the correctness of what I am saying. I do not care to occupy the attention of the Senate by presenting them in detail.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will not this competition destroy facilities that the Government ought to rely on as a preparedness policy?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I was coming to that. Here is the further situation which the Senate must consider:

We all know what the experience of this country was in making airplanes when we got into this war. We had practically no facilities for making them. At the end of 18 months we had spent very much more than a billion dollars in making airplanes, and we had succeeded in establishing an industry which at that time was able to meet our needs. When the armistice was signed, however, all the Government's war orders, of course, were withdrawn at once. I say "of course," although I do not know exactly why they should have been, because they were not withdrawn in France, they were not withdrawn in Great Britain, and they have not been withdrawn or suspended in Germany by any manner of means. Great Britain and France both continued their orders to the companies manufacturing planes in those countries in order that they might continue in existence, and they tolled them along and eased them off until they could get some commercial demand on which to exist; but in this country we withdrew every bit of the Government's support.

Now, I am not criticizing that. That may have been sound policy. Whether it was or not, I am not going to stop here to say; but it was done just the same, and our industry was left to depend upon a commercial demand which did not exist and which has not yet come into existence to any very considerable extent. The result is that the industry has simply drifted along and drifted along until there is only about 5 per cent of it left; 95 per cent of it has been liquidated. If we had to send airplanes across the border to-day, we would have to rely upon foreign Governments to supply those machines. Except for five planes that have been made in Dayton in the last few months, we have few planes in this country except of the D–H type and a few planes that were made here for war purposes, and that are now obsolescent.

That is true of what we are getting from Great Britain. They are not modern machines. They are machines that were made for military purposes. They are fairly adaptable to a certain degree for commercial purposes, and they will be brought over here in very large numbers and disposed of to whoever will buy them at any price that they can obtain for them, and one-half of the purchase money will be paid to the British Government. That is what becomes of it under that contract.

Mr. President, as I have tried to point out, this is the very last and only place where the Government of the United States can interpose to avoid the destruction of the aircraft industry in this country at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator, first, the number of planes that the Government of the United States and private builders had at the close of war, and, secondly, what has become of those planes?

The Senator has just stated that there are no planes in the United States; that if we were called into war we would have no planes even to cross the boundary of Mexico; that we would have to rely upon other nations. My understanding was that the Liberty motor, of which we heard so much, was a great success, and that around it had been constructed almost the finest airplanes in the world. What has become of that great number of planes built by the Government at an expense of more than a billion dollars in the factories of private individuals?

Mr. NEW. If I said there were no planes, I did not mean that strictly. I do mean that there are no up-to-date machines. There are left in this country the undestroyed part, the residuum of what we made and had not shipped abroad prior to the armistice of November 11, 1918, mostly of the De Haviland 4 type. They are not combat planes; that is, they are not pursuit planes or anything of that kind. They are light bombers. They are suitable for the transportation of mail, and for the carrying of a passenger or two. Members of the Senate have flown in them. I have personally flown to New York in them a number of times, and made various flights around. For that sort of purpose they are all right; but they are not high-class pursuit planes or combat planes, as you understand the term "combat," and we have not anything of that kind in this country, except, as I said, and as was pointed out by the Senator from New York here a day or two ago, a few—less than half a dozen—that have been made under the auspices and direction of the Army engineering force at Dayton within the last year or so.

I am talking here, not to protect anybody's business, not from the commercial standpoint at all, but from the standpoint of the national defense; and I do not want to see a condition created in this country which is going to compel the little that there is left of the aircraft manufacturing industry to withdraw absolutely because there is no demand for it to supply. That is the situation, and that is the reason why at this time and in this connection I have presented the amendment that is before the Senate for its consideration.

APPENDIX.

The State Department has transmitted two consular reports from London, as follows:

SUPPEMENTAL REPORTS—AIRPLANES FOR PURCHASE.

[From Alfred Nutting, clerk in the American consulate general, London, England, Apr. 14, 1920. Approved, W. Stanley Hollis, American consul general in charge.]

With reference to the writer's report under above title, dated March 17, 1920, and also the department's cable of March 25, 1920, it may be of interest to report that the London Daily Express of April 14 states that:

"Many important sales of aircraft to foreign countries have already been made by the syndicate which recently acquired the British Government's surplus war stock of aeroplanes, engines, and stores.

"Mr. F. Handley-Page, head of the disposal company, has just returned from America, and is already busy with plans for the sale of thousands of machines.

"'Nobody actually knows yet how many aeroplanes we have acquired from the Government,' said Mr. Page to a Daily Express representative yesterday. 'It is the largest deal of its kind ever completed, and is much greater than Slough and the stock of army motor cars. We have taken so far more than six depots of aeroplanes and stores. There are still innumerable machines to be handed over to us.

"'We have achieved unification of sales by acquiring all the Government stocks and are in a position to deal much more advantageously than if there were a number of selling agencies. Machines are being sold to practically every country in the world and many deliveries have been made. Each machine sold takes with it a Government certificate of airworthiness. We do not adapt machines of other builders before selling them. The other firms do that for us.

"'The Government will make a great deal of money out of their deal, and so, incidentally, shall we.'

"The sum of £1,000,000 was the price paid by Mr. Handley-Page's syndicate to the Government for the surplus stocks of aircraft, with an undertaking to hand over 50 per cent of the profits made on reselling. Estimates put the total amount likely to be received from resales at £100,000,000."

ALFRED NUTTING.

AIRCRAFT FOR PURCHASE.

[From Alfred Nutting, clerk in the American consulate general, London, England. Mar. 17, 1920. Approved, Robert P. Skinner, American consul general.]

Within the past few days announcements have appeared in the press respecting the sale by the Government aircraft disposal board of all the stock of surplus aircraft, engines, etc., to a syndicate. The amount stated to have been paid is £1,000,000, while the value of stock taken over is estimated at £100,000,000, but the terms are that one-half of profits realized shall go to the Government.

In the first instance the purchase was made by a financial group, but it now appears, according to an official statement issued by Handley-Page (Ltd.), that such financial group was acting on behalf of the Aircraft Disposal Co., of which Handley-Page (Ltd.) are members.

The statement issued is as follows:

"With reference to the announcement which appeared in the press regarding the large transaction in British aircraft, the syndicate interested in the Aircraft Disposal Co. (Ltd.), by whom the following announcement has been made:

"'The sale by the Government of all its surplus aircraft material, engines, spares, and accessories was completed at the end of last week. We did not purchase direct from the Government, but we have now taken over the whole of the benefits and liabilities of the purchasers. The company, which comprises widespread British interests, has been specially formed to carry on the whole of the work previously undertaken by the ministry of munitions in disposing of the surplus stocks of heavier-than-air machines and equipment. Offices have been taken in Kings Way and as rapidly as possible the organization will remove there from the present disposal board offices. The whole of the storage organization and the management of the large aircraft depots all over the country will pass into our control.'

"The disposal board since the armistice have sold large numbers of machines, but their potential sales have been very much handicapped by their limitation to selling machines as they stand. Many of the machines for disposal are quite new, but in order to insure that every machine, engine, accessory, and spare is in perfect condition detailed inspection will take place before delivery and certificates of airworthiness will be given for all machines sold.

"Handley-Page (Ltd.), the well-known aircraft manufacturers, are members of the syndicate, and we shall have the full advantage of their experience in aircraft matters, as they will act as our technical advisers and be our sole agents for the disposal of the material."

ALFRED NUTTING.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I supplement by just a word what the Senator from Indiana has said?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This thing is a real situation. The Aerial Age Weekly, which I think is the name of one of the leading papers in this country treating with aeronautical subjects, is carrying to-day full-page advertisements, with photographs of these machines, offering them to any person in America who wants to buy them at stated prices. I recollect that the famous Martinsyde machine is advertised for sale, with its picture and its record; how fast it has traveled; how much weight it can carry; and its reputation during the war. These machines have been put into first-class condition for everything except the most advanced war work, where special qualifications are necessary. They are as good as anything in the world to-day for ordinary light commercial purposes, and the prices at which they are advertised are at a level approximating 25 to 30 per cent of what it would cost to build them in this country in our own factories. It is a hopeless competition. It will destroy us for at least two or three years.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I have been very much interested in what the Senator from Indiana has said, but this idea occurred to me: He has demonstrated by what he has said that there is practically no such industry now in the United States. We are out of the business. Now, here are a lot of planes coming over here that the Senator from New York says are as good as any in the world, and they are going to be put on the market, did the Senator say, at 25 per cent of what it would cost to make them here?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The average is somewhere between 25 and 40 per cent of what it would cost to make them here.

Mr. NORRIS. That will be, in the eyes of the purchaser at least, a very good thing, because he will get them cheaply. Now, if we have lost all interest in this industry in this country, and there is no business here in the airplane line, and these good planes could come over here and be sold at a price at which the ordinary person could buy them, as seems to be the fact, would it not create a great sentiment all over the country in the airplane line? Would it not stimulate the use of the airplane? The persons who buy them will be smashing them up and breaking them. Would it not develop a lot of manufacturing and repairing? Would not the ingenuity of the American Yankee improve them, so that in the end it would be a good thing, and develop better airplanes here than though we did not get them and let the whole thing die out and forget all about airplanes?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, that brings up the whole question of the protection of an industry. This is a competition which our people can not possibly stand, because it is not really commercial or industrial competition. British factories could not make those machines to-day and send them to this country, and sell them at any such low prices. This is the British Government unloading, and they are unloading for from 10 to 30 cents on the dollar.

Now, if the British types of machines, with all their selling agencies, are established in this country, and our people are made familiar with the British type and the British industry, and the spare parts must be purchased from British agents in this country, and those spare parts in the greater extent will be made in England and sent over here, and they will have their supply houses here, their distributing points—they have already arranged their selling agencies; my information is that they are going to have traveling agents to demonstrate these planes with flyers going around with them and setting them up at any place where they want to stop off and demonstrate these planes—when they get the custom of the people of the United States it will take years and years to pry the people of the United States away from the habit of buying the British machines.

The man who gets the market first has a tremendous advantage. He gets accustomed to dealing with this selling agent and that supply house. That is a well-known thing in industry. The British industry will have the good will of the American customers, because there will not be any American industry to compete with the American customer for his good will.

We will recover from it some day in the natural evolution of events. This stock will be exhausted. We understand there are 10,000 of these machines. Think of it; 10,000 of them! But for the next three or four years the Government will not have an American factory to which it can appeal to turn out airplanes for its own use in any number. In the meantime, as I said, the American market will have been captured by our British cousins, and I think we have a right to say that they shall not be sold in this country for less than it costs to build them abroad.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will permit me, by way of a further answer to the question of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], I will say that the price itself at which the Aircraft Disposal Co. gets the British service is proof conclusive, I take it, that what we are doing in this instance is merely helping the British Government to get what it can out of a surplus which it made for its own purpose, 1 per cent on the dollar. That is the amount of money paid by the Aircraft Disposal Co., £1,000,000 for more than £100,000,000 worth of airplanes. They are to be sold here, not at a fixed price, but at whatever those people can get. I do not undertake to say that they will be put up at auction, or anything of that kind. The American purchasers will come in and say, "Yes; we are buying them at a fixed price." Of course, they are selling for that, and whatever it is, that stands as the fixed price. But there is no price agreed on between the Aircraft Disposal Co. and the British Government. The British Government merely says, "take these planes and sell them for what you can get, and where you can sell them, and give us, in addition to the £1,000,000 you are paying, 50 per cent of the profit you make on the planes," and the profit they make on them is the measure of difference between the million pounds invested and the transportation to this country, with a little overhead; that is all.

In the meantime the British Government is going ahead with its manufacture, experimenting, building up an industry, devising new types, in order, as I said, and as they frankly say, that Great Britain may become the mistress of the air just as she is now mistress of the sea, and as these planes become obsolescent, the Aircraft Disposal Co., or some other kind of angel, takes them off their hands, and they are brought to the United States, forsooth, and sold to our people, and the British Government gets one-half of what we pay.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this measure is designed to meet a situation which is sui generis. It has been well described by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]. The airplane industry in the United States, which had a brief activity during the war, has since the armistice become practically nothing. Our own Government has been strangely indifferent to the importance of aviation in military affairs. That indifference is accentuated by the interest which has been displayed since the armistice by both France and Great Britain, Italy being a fairly good third. They realize, perhaps more vividly than we because they were engaged in the war much longer than the United States, that the progress made in the development of aircraft during that struggle justifies the conviction that wars of the future will be decided from the air. I have not a particle of doubt that if this war had continued for 6 or 8 or 10 months longer, the accomplishments of our aviation fleets would have greatly overshadowed those of our armies and of our naval fleets. I have not a particle of doubt that before midsummer Berlin and many of the other great German cities would have been laid in ashes by the allied aircraft. That nation, in my judgment, is wise, which, having taken to heart these tremendous lessons, is seeing to it that due provision shall be made against a recurrence of the World War. We alone are indifferent.

Aircraft is a new art in the world, and it is one which thus far has made but very slight invasions in commercial life. That it will become a great element of transportation in time,

I have no doubt, but until greater activity is manifested in that direction there is little opportunity for encouragement to aircraft building in this country outside of the military needs. Hence the importance of the Government's encouraging to an extreme, if need be, the establishment and continuation in America of some manufactories of aircraft, which may respond to our needs in the event of trouble in the future. The demand now for aircraft in this country is, perhaps, entirely commercial in its character, and being small, the two or three surviving institutions are having a hard time to live.

The machines which are to be brought over here, which are on the way here, are of a type which permits their use in the transportation of both passengers and goods. They are larger machines than we have ever manufactured in this country. They are capable of carrying something like a thousand pounds in weight in excess of the capacity of the ordinary machine.

Great Britain has seen an opportunity—and, true to her custom, she has been swift to take advantage of it—to get some return for her enormous expenditure in military aircraft and at the same time rid herself of an obsolescent supply and obtain good American money, to be used in the manufacture of up-to-date equipment. We, on the other hand, content ourselves with this invasion and patronize it because it will become the only source of supply.

That being the case, Mr. President, the country is face to face with an unbearable and unbelievable competition with the Government of Great Britain, for the substitution of a private corporation holding a contract with the Government is nothing but an agency to carry out that purpose. It is incredible that the British Government would make such a contract, whereby the nominal price paid for these machines is 1 per cent of their cost, reserving to herself the right to receive 50 per cent of all the profits and at the same time occupy the position that she is a disinterested party. The facts are inconsistent with that conclusion.

Given a restricted area of customers, and this enormous supply coming from abroad, and which can be sold at any price, exceeding 1 per cent of the cost plus transportation, to make a profit, and the result to the American manufacturer seems to be obvious. This is not such a case as was presented in the dyestuffs bill, where there is a probability of establishing an industry, self-supporting and capable of competing with the world. It is not the case of a general dumping bill designed to apply to all articles of merchandise anywhere which, if brought to this country, would only serve to reduce prices, but it is a case of an industry which has never yet been established, an industry which received great encouragement during the war only because it was during the war, an industry the nature of which has been demonstrated to be of supreme and overshadowing importance in times of war, an industry representing the newest development of military science, and perhaps the overshadowing one—I believe it is—which is bound to disappear under those circumstances, and what shall we do? The only thing which can be done at present, because the emergency is right here, is the enactment of a rider to this bill, limited in time, if you please, which will prevent the carrying out of this threatened program.

Mr. President, I do not believe in dumping systems. I do not believe in a high protective tariff. I have been opposed all my life to the theory of Government partnership with business. Yet I recognize that there are exceptions to certain rules, perhaps to all rules, and this appears to me as a supreme exception to every rule, for we can not afford to be dependent upon any country in the world in the event of a sudden emergency for the obtaining of a character of weapon for offense and defense so dominant of all other weapons as aircraft has become.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I propounded a question to the Senator from Indiana, and if he answered it I was inattentive and did not get his reply.

Mr. THOMAS. If he did not answer it, I am afraid that I can not, if it relates to aircraft.

Mr. KING. I invited his attention to the fact that we had constructed a large number of machines. My information is that those machines have been disposed of to one or two corporations of the United States, but are still in the hands of the Government. If they have been disposed of to a private corporation, is not this provision primarily for the purpose of protecting that corporation against any competition? That is one question.

Mr. THOMAS. I think not. I think it is secondarily designed to protect that corporation from competition, but not primarily. If I thought that, I would make a point of order against it myself.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows more about this matter than I do, but my information is that that corporation—the Curtiss plant—as I recall it, acquired from the Government of the United States a large number of machines.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true.

Mr. KING. And got those machines for an insignificant price.

Mr. THOMAS. A small price compared to the cost.

Mr. KING. It has those machines on hand. It wants to dispose of those which it has not already disposed of.

Mr. THOMAS. It has some of them. I suppose it has not disposed of all of them, though I know nothing about it.

Mr. KING. Of course, it is interested in preventing any competition.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. KING. It seeks a market and a monopoly in the United States as long as it has those machines and any others which it may construct.

Mr. THOMAS. It is certainly interested, selfishly interested, in this matter.

Mr. KING. Then this measure is in the interest of this corporation that acquired from the Government these machines.

Mr. THOMAS. Its effect will be to protect that corporation, of course, but its larger purpose is to serve the interest and welfare of the United States.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator pardon another question? As I understand the Senator, the aircraft situation is such in the United States that we need not expect any very great investment by private corporations in the development of aircraft.

Mr. THOMAS. Not at present.

Mr. KING. Primarily the Government would have to be the investor for the purpose of developing aircraft. Assuming that proposition to be true, how would the Government be disadvantaged by permitting aircraft to come in, because it would not be in competition with the Government? If the Government has to develop the enterprise, it would not suffer by reason of having new planes brought into the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield in a moment. The Government is disadvantaged in this way: In the event of another emergency it would be compelled to reconstruct its aircraft program, beginning at the ground, and with the establishment of manufactories for the production of aircraft for its use. That, of course, would occupy God alone knows how long a time between the time of the beginning of our trouble and the time of its ending. We might lose out entirely because of the lack of appropriate aircraft both for offense and defense.

I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In further answer to the question of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I should like to suggest to him that the form of war airplane that this British corporation has arranged to sell in the United States is not to be sold to the Government. They are to be sold to private parties.

Mr. KING. I understand that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So the Senator is to some degree mistaken in his assumption that only the Government affords a market for airplanes. There is being developed a very considerable market in this country for airplanes for business and pleasure purposes. The result, however, of taking away that private market from the American manufacturers will be just what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has described. When the emergency arises and when the Government does desire to buy airplanes, when it will need mechanics and engineers and promoters and business organizations to produce those great machines, it will not have them, probably will not have in the country the men who will have the time and the technical skill required to supply the Government with its wants, and it will be taking away the private market from the people instead of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. There is no question but that the bill will benefit local American manufacturers, of whom the Curtiss plant is but one. There are three or four other concerns struggling to get a footing, and all of them entitled, I think, to governmental consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if it is not true that if we are prevented from putting the amendment on the bill the effect will be to benefit the British manufacturer and the British Government?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly. As the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] said, shipments of these machines are now on the seas and in all probability will be delivered here in the next few days. There is a considerable demand for this size of airships, I am informed. I do not say that they can be produced here at present. I doubt if they could be, but they never will be unless we can get some foothold here of a permanent character, which can be utilized in the event of need for utilization should arise.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] some time ago introduced an amendment, which was not accepted, which nevertheless refers to a vastly important element of our military service of our martial development as a result of our entry into the war, and that is the Signal Service.

There are three features characterizing the conduct of the last war which, in my judgment, will characterize, if not overshadow, all other features of future wars. One is the Signal Service. That development during the war virtually astounded in its character and in its extent.

It has been carried to a point where there is no such thing as secrecy as regards our campaigns, for our military purposes camps in the country of the enemy are nothing but whispering galleries. The science is, of course, incomplete; it is a constantly developing one; and one of the ways in which to make future wars impossible is to encourage the development in every respect of our Signal Service. Still another is the arm of Military Intelligence, which depends upon the Signal Service for instruments that are needed for very valuable work. The other is aviation.

We are getting away very rapidly from what in times past have been regarded as the indispensable elements of military defense or military offense; and while these older methods are of extreme value, while they never will become obsolete, the scientific advancements made in every direction during this war multiplied and complicated the established conclusion that the wars of the future will depend more upon these things than upon the methods which characterized the earlier stages of this and all the stages of previous wars.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me that this subject is entirely too important to be treated in this summary way upon an appropriation bill, and I trust that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will adhere to his purpose to interpose a point of order against it. There may be merit in the argument that is made; but if there be, the subject is one which is important enough to be taken up as a separate matter and treated in accordance with its very large importance.

As far as I am concerned, I think we are going entirely too far in attempting to protect the American people from cheap goods. What the American people are complaining about is the expense of living, the high prices of things, but this session has been signalized by placing upon the calendar a number of bills designed to add to the cost of the articles when they are placed upon the market. There is the dyestuffs bill, which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] himself so ably opposed, the pearl-button protection, the chemical glassware protection, the chemical porcelain protection, the protection against surgical instruments, the protection against cheap magnesite from Europe, and tungsten; and now we are to be protected against cheap aeroplanes.

I do not think that the American people are interested in these measures to increase the cost of things that they may be compelled to buy or desire to buy. But if it is true, if there is merit in the issue, it ought to be brought up on a separate bill and sufficient time given for a study of the matter.

Let us look at the history of our aeroplane experience a little. What was the fundamental reason which caused the failure of our aeroplane service during the war? It was due to fact that the aeroplane management drifted into the hands of men who were determined to build up the industry in the United States as a separate proposition, not only the manufacture of aeroplane engines but aeroplane parts and aeroplanes themselves. They endangered the success of the war by refusing to avail themselves of European prices and European experiences and induced the Government to expend hundreds of millions of dollars during the dreadful years of the war in building up, as they claimed, an American industry, instead of taking advantage of what Europe had already done in the way of aeroplane construction.

We had one investigation after another in the Senate, and we discovered that literally millions upon millions of dollars were expended in the United States toward the development of an aeroplane industry, and now we are told that there is no American aeroplane industry.

I do not think that at this stage of the game and upon this bill we ought to undertake to develop an American aeroplane industry by prohibiting practically the importation of aeroplanes that are already in existence in Europe and are offered for sale. I can see quite a possibility that if aeroplanes were dumped upon this country by the hundreds and by the thousands, and should come into use among the people and in commercial use, there might be a more rapid development of aeroplane service than to bar them out and say, "You can have no aeroplanes unless you buy them at the present expensive cost of manufacture." I, for one, think it would be a mistake to put this practical prohibition upon this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think the Senator from Nebraska will find by an examination of the proposed amendment that it proposes a prohibitive rate. As I recollect—the Senator from Indiana, of course, will correct me if I am wrong—the amendment does not propose to establish a tariff duty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have the amendment here. It is, in effect, an antidumping proposition. A commission is to be established to appraise all airplanes which are brought to this country and practically to prohibit their sale at a cost which may be less than the cost of their manufacture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Less than their cost of manufacture in the foreign country?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. England and other countries will manufacture airplanes more cheaply than we can manufacture them for some time. This amendment can not be said to be prohibitive; it merely makes competition a little less hopeless for our people.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, we have in this country a few airplane factories, and in them have been sunk tens of millions of dollars of money which was appropriated by Congress. If after the expenditure of those many millions of dollars for airplanes those factories are not now able to manufacture airplanes in competition with airplane manufacturers of other countries and interest our people in them, I am in favor of allowing airplanes to come into the United States from other countries; and I am not alarmed over airplanes being sold to the people of the United States at cheap prices.

Mr. NEW. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NEW. The Senator from Nebraska says that he is in favor of airplanes being manufactured in other countries and being brought to this country under given circumstances, which he has just stated. Suppose the United States were to get into difficulty with Great Britain, how many airplanes does the Senator suppose Great Britain would then sell to the United States? If the United States were compelled to confront such an emergency, and Great Britain were manufacturing airplanes, and we had no airplane industry in this country, how many airplanes does the Senator from Nebraska think Great Britain would supply the United States?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the proposition which the Senator states is one of those practically impossible ones which need not disturb us as practical men. We know that during the recent war hundreds of millions of dollars belonging to the people were squandered in an attempt to build up the airplane industry in the United States, and that the only benefit which accrued from that expenditure was the equipment of a number of vast factories. We know that after the war closed and the Government had no further use for airplanes in large quantities, all the vast amount of Government material and half-manufactured airplanes and completely manufactured airplanes were turned back to those factories at a very small cost upon the dollar. If those factories at the present time are not now in shape to put airplanes upon the market, I think the United States Government need not disturb itself very much more about their condition.

We have sacrificed enough for them; we have given them enough protection; we have put enough of the people's money into their treasuries. My judgment is that this is only one of a number of measures that will be attempted for the purpose of promoting and building up industries here at the expense of the consumer.

I know, as a matter of fact, and the Senator from Indiana knows, that the state of our trade now is such and the state of exchange is such that it is becoming more than ever difficult for the United States to export its natural products to Europe.

If we begin erecting barriers against Europe to prevent Europe from sending us the goods manufactured there, the state of exchange will get worse; it will become more difficult to export our cotton and more difficult to export our corn, our wheat, our mining products, and other natural products of this country, because Europe will find difficulty in paying for them. We can not continue to erect such barriers against European commerce and expect at the same time to sell our goods to Europe.

Mr. President, I have said about all I wish to say. I am not making any charge; I have not any means of knowing what interests are behind a movement of this sort. I know that Senators on the other side of the aisle have a perfectly legitimate reason for supporting every proposition which smacks of protection or provides for protection, but I am not a protection Senator. I do not believe in taxing the consumer for the purpose of building up the industries in this country; and I can not support a measure of this character, which belongs to the class of protective measures in the strongest degree. When such a proposition is introduced, it seems to me it ought to be introduced and considered on its merits; we ought to have the figures; we ought to know what airplane industries we have in this country; we ought to know something about the comparative cost of airplane manufacture in this country. I think it is a great mistake upon an appropriation bill of this character to propose such an amendment, which is far-reaching in its effect and which is certainly not in accordance with my views of legislation. In order to cut the matter short and to save time, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I desire to say merely a few words in conclusion. I want the Senator from Nebraska and the Senate generally to know, inasmuch as the contract between the Curtiss Co. and the United States Government has been referred to, that the Curtiss Co. some time ago informed the Secretary of War that it desired to be relieved from that contract. This amendment has no possible reference to that matter, and under the circumstances would have no bearing upon it.

I do not know that there is anything which can be added to what I have already stated with reference to the amendment. I think the Senate understands the question. I wish to say for myself that the amendment is not introduced as a tariff measure or to protect anybody's commercial interest. It is intended for the protection of the United States, and in that sense I am doubly a protectionist. If the amendment is to be rejected, I consider that I shall have done my duty in having presented it, and the responsibility for its rejection must rest upon the proper shoulders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Nebraska state the grounds upon which he makes the point of order?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I make the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I trust the Senator in charge of the bill will have no objection to the amendment, for it is a meritorious one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add as a new section the following:

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to convey to the State of New Hampshire the title which the Federal Government now holds in the "Gun House Property," so called, in the city of Portsmouth, N. H.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As far as I am able to do so, I accept the amendment, although I can not do so on behalf of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAPPER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 73, after line 20, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the widow of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, while she remains unmarried, shall be permitted, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, to purchase for cash for her personal use Government subsistence stores at the price charged officers and enlisted men of said services. The privilege herein granted shall also be enjoyed by any minor child of such officer or enlisted man whose mother is not living or who has abandoned him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. KING. I raise the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the ground of the point of order?

Mr. KING. That it proposes general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PHELAN. I offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 75, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. That whenever under the laws of the United States or under any rules and regulations of the War or Navy Departments made in conformity therewith any decoration, cross, medal, clasp, button, badge, ribbon, star, or other emblem, device, or insignia has been, or shall hereafter be, awarded to any person by reason of any act, deed, conduct, or service in, or in connection with, any war, campaign, or expedition in which the United States has engaged or shall hereafter engage, and such person shall have died prior to receiving the same, said decoration, device, or insignia shall be delivered to such of the next of kin of the deceased person or to his widow, as the President may prescribe, and upon such terms and conditions as the President may prescribe, and if such person has died or shall hereafter die prior to the award to which he would otherwise have been entitled such award may be posthumously made, in the discretion of the President, and such decoration, device, or insignia delivered to such next of kin, or to his widow, upon such terms and conditions as the President may prescribe.

That honorable separation from the service of the United States of persons who would otherwise be entitled to receive them shall not prohibit or preclude the issuance to such persons of such decorations, devices, emblems, or insignia as may have been or as may hereafter be authorized, allowed, or ordered to be awarded, issued, or bestowed upon persons in the service of the United States; and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are authorized, after the proper award thereof is made, to issue such decoration, device, emblem, or insignia to the former personnel of their respective departments so entitled thereto, regardless of their previous separation from the service of the United States: Provided, That such decorations, emblems, devices, or insignia will hereafter be issued without charge to officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men entitled thereto.

That it shall be unlawful for any person to wear or to display upon his or her person within the United States or any other place subject to its jurisdiction with intent to deceive or mislead any decoration, cross, medal, bar, clasp, button, star, ribbon, badge, stripe, or other emblem, insignia, or device heretofore or hereafter authorized conferred, issued, or authorized to be worn under the laws of the United States, or under any rules and regulations of the War or Navy Departments made in conformity with the laws of the United States, by reason of, or to indicate heroic, distinguished, or meritorious acts, deeds, or conduct in the service of the United States, or honorable participation in the service of the United States in any war, campaign, or expedition in which the United States has been, or is, or shall be, a party, except the person upon account of whose acts, deeds, conduct, participation in, or connection with, such war, such emblem, insignia, or device was awarded, bestowed, or issued, or such other person as may be authorized by law or the order pursuant to which the same was awarded, bestowed, or issued to wear the same. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $300 or imprisonment for not exceeding 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

That no print, cut, or pictorial representation of any medal, cross, clasp, button, badge, ribbon, emblem, or other decoration or award to any person by reason of any act, deed, conduct, or service in or in connection with any war in which the United States has participated or may hereafter participate shall be used, published, printed, or exhibited on, or in connection with, an advertisement by any firm, company, or corporation for any purpose other than such as may be authorized by the Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think I shall have to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, in reference to the amendment, I desire to say that I have consulted the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, in charge of the pending bill. He was amazed at the information which I conveyed to him and stated that he would accept the amendment in order that it might go to conference. I should like to inform the Senate that there is now no law preventing the unauthorized use of victory buttons or other decorations. The Secretary of War in a letter to Representative KAHN said:

Last July Congress passed an act to prevent the unauthorized wearing of foreign decorations in the United States, but, remarkable as it seems, it is nevertheless a fact that there is no law on the statute books to-day which gives protection to the decorations of our own country. Obviously this condition should be remedied.

I may say that the department prepared the amendment presented by me.

The American Legion of Los Angeles called my attention to the matter in the following telegram, under date of May 18:

Victory buttons being sold in Los Angeles by local dealers and military shops without presentation of discharge or, in fact, any credentials which show service. Understand dies have been turned over to Bailey, Banks & Biddle, of Philadelphia, and are being farmed out to manufacturers. If anything remains sacred to the veteran of the World War, it is the victory button. Immediate drastic action is necessary to prevent a Nation-wide distribution of this emblem to slackers. Please spare no effort for immediate results.

I should think the chairman of the committee would accept the amendment in view of its importance.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the amendment goes further than merely imposing a penalty.

Mr. PHELAN. It also provides that the next of kin may receive the decorations of dead soldiers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know; but, Mr. President, while it may be all right, here is a bill which is quite different from what I understood the Senator was going to introduce. It is four pages long. I imagine there is not a Senator here except the Senator from California who has read it.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I only desire to get it before the conference committee in order that it may take action on the subject.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In other words, that is to say, the conference shall do the legislating for the Congress. The purpose of the rule is to give the Members of the Senate a chance to look into these matters. This includes the posthumous decoration. I do not know anything about it, and I am compelled to raise the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 17, after line 10, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter officers on the retired list shall be allowed 75 per cent of the rate prescribed by law as representing the money equivalent of the authorized allowance for quarters for officers of their rank: Provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall operate to reduce the allowances of retired officers when assigned to active duty.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to extend to retired Army officers the privileges of the commutation-of-quarters provision made for the active officers.

The situation with reference to the matter is this: It was the evident purpose of Congress, when the provision for the pay of retired officers was made, that they should have three-quarters of the pay and allowances of officers on the active list. The commutation-of-quarters act had not then been passed, and when it was passed by some omission it was not made to apply to retired officers. We have here the spectacle of retired officers, most of them men who have been retired for age, 64 and over, who, by reason of the fact that they are not getting the allowances of quarters, are getting not three-fourths of what the active officer is getting, but about 58 per cent of it; and here are these old men, those who are retired for age and those who are retired for disability, who are deprived of what I think they are justly entitled to, and what Congress meant that they should have. They suffer from the deprivation more than the younger man, more than the man who, by reason of age and physical condition, is much better able to contend with the high cost of living and other disabilities than the old fellow and the disabled man who come under the operation of this provision.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I do not ask the Senator to yield. I make the point of order against the amendment. The matter might be taken up in legislation, but it is in no part of the law at present. It has not been considered, to my knowledge, by the committee. We have submitted this afternoon to about four hours of our time being taken on amendments offered to this bill, some good and some bad and some indifferent, perhaps, that are out of order and should not go on this appropriation bill.

While I appreciate what the Senator desires to do for these deserving officers, and might very likely vote for it if it came up in committee as legislation, I certainly must now make the point of order against the inclusion of the amendment in an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to be added at the end of the bill. It does not carry any appropriation, and does not in any way involve money matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following proviso:

Provided, That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to promote Capt. Hollis C. Clark, retired, recently on active duty as lieutenant colonel in the Air Service, to the grade of colonel on the retired list of the Army.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I sincerely hope no point of order will be raised against this amendment and that it may be adopted. Capt. Clark is a Montana man with whom I am well acquainted. He is an excellent gentleman, worthy and deserving, and he is a very meritorious and efficient officer. I see that at the bottom of page 75 there is in the bill a similar provision for Col. William C. Brown.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was stricken out on a point of order. I intend to raise the same point of order in this case when the Senator is through.

Mr. MYERS. If that was stricken out on a point of order I hope this may not be.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was stricken out.

Mr. MYERS. This may be different.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York make the point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. When I can get the floor I will.

Mr. MYERS. I will take just a few minutes to speak of this exceptionally meritorious case. I am deeply interested in it. I know the facts. The Congress has repeatedly been so generous as to pass bills authorizing the President to restore to their ranks in the Army men who were convicted by court-martial of various offenses and put out of the Army; but that is not the case with Capt. Clark. There is not a thing against his record. It is without a flaw or blemish. Capt. Clark has rendered splendid service to his country. He did so both before and during the war with Germany.

He has been a very faithful and meritorious officer. He was retired a few years ago on account of ill health, but he regained his health, and became perfectly capable in a physical sense, in every sense, of resuming active service in the Army, and he did resume active service, and during the war with Germany served in the Aviation Corps. He attained during the war the rank of major, I think probably colonel, also. However, after hostilities ended, like many other temporary officers who saw active service, he was reduced to his former rank, captain. He is now, I understand, at the age where he can not be retired as a colonel, although if he had remained continuously in the Army, if it had not been for a hiatus on account of poor health, when he was out for a few years, he would now be eligible to be retired as a colonel. Having been reinstated and having served ably during the war, it is hard for him now on account of former ill health to be retired as captain.

This amendment simply leaves it in the discretion of the President to say whether or not Capt. Clark may be retired as colonel. It does not compel the President to retire Capt. Clark as colonel. It is to be simply left to his discretion; and I had hoped that there would be no objection to the amendment. I hope now there will be no point of order raised against it. Let us be fair to this gallant officer; give him a show.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I raise the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 62, line 6, it is proposed to insert:

For the maintenance, support, and development of the manufacturing industries and increased storage facilities of the Benicia Arsenal, Calif., $1,500,000.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this item has not been estimated for. I raise the point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, on page 59, line 18, I move that the figures "$700,000" be stricken from the bill and the figures "$1,000,000" substituted therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 59, line 18, under the heading of "Manufacture of arms," it is proposed to strike out "$700,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$1,000,000."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, this amendment is for the purpose of giving to the War Department the amount of money which they have asked for the manufacture of rifles.

The rifle in use in this country is known as the 1903 model. It is the best rifle in the world. It is made only at the Government arsenals. The War Department asked for a $1,000,000 appropriation, which the House cut to $700,000, and to which the Senate committee agreed. The appropriation made in this bill provides for the manufacture of 70 small arms per day. The appropriation asked for by the War Department would give a production of 125 small arms per day. If we are going to restrict our appropriations and economize, let us not begin with the rifles that are necessary for the training and equipment of our soldiers; and I think Congress ought to be very careful about making it possible for any official of the War Department in the future, in case of an emergency, to point to the fact that we had cut down our appropriations to such an extent that we had prevented the manufacture of the necessary number of rifles to be used by our troops.

The change in this appropriation takes 50 rifles a day for 300 days in one year out of the supply for our Army, reducing the number 15,000, and in 10 years 150,000, if the same situation is permitted to continue. In the face of a statement which I shall read from an official of the War Department, how can we justify any action of ours that prevents our Army from being supplied with the necessary number of rifles to replace those in use each year?

To be sure, we have on hand a very large supply of rifles, but not of the 1903 model, which is the only one in use, and which, as I have said before, is the very best in the world.

I want to call attention now to the statement of Col. Rice at the hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate:

We are running the plant at Springfield—

The plant where these rifles are made—to manufacture the 1903 rifle, and this rate of 125 a day—

Which is the rate that will be provided for if the appropriation of $1,000,000 is made—will not be all that will be required for the annual replacements of the 1903 in service.

In other words, if we made this appropriation $1,000,000, we would not even then be making the necessary number—namely, 15,000 more—that would be required to replace the rifles in service; yet we have reduced the appropriation from $1,000,000 to $700,000, and it can not be justified except upon the ground of economy. If we are going to justify it on that ground, we have got to admit that we do not propose to keep the employees or keep our armories in such shape as to be equipped to provide the necessary number of rifles to replace those in use each year.

These are the reasons. I am sure the chairman of the committee and the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate would not have made any change in the appropriation if the House had made the amount $1,000,000, but I think they felt inclined and disposed to follow the amount set by the House. That, it seems to me, does not justify our taking that action.

I hope the Senate will change this amount to $1,000,000, and then at least we will be in the position of saying: "We gave to the War Department for the manufacture of rifles"—the first thing essential in any program of preparedness; what is the good of having men if we have not got rifles for them?—"all that the department asked for."

This is a great reduction over what has been asked for in previous years. Therefore, Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the facts are these: With a million dollars, which was denied by the House and also denied by the Senate committee, there would be a capacity of 125 rifles a day at that arsenal; with $700,000, 85 could be made per day. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to say 75, but the figures given to us by the Ordnance Office are 85. We have 2,000,000 rifles on hand today of the 1917 model, which was the British model modified to fit American ammunition, and I may say a most excellent rifle, though not quite as good as the Springfield. Of the Springfield rifle we have 800,000 on hand. The question is whether the Senate desires to keep more men at work making 125 rifles a day, or a few less making 85 rifles a day, of the Springfield model.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think I am not wrong in saying that the full capacity of the Springfield Arsenal is 500 rifles a day. I think it is 250 a day at the Rock Island Arsenal. This seems to be cutting it very low, indeed. For reasons never quite clear to me we took up the Enfield and shaped it for our ammunition, instead of making it so that it would fit English ammunition also. We have a large supply of those rifles, but the manufacture of the Springfield new model, which I think it is admitted is a better rifle, ought to be kept up. I naturally take an interest in it because of the great arsenal in my State, and I do not want any unreasonable cutting down in the manufacture of that rifle. I know perfectly well there has to be a reduction, but it seems to me it has been carried perhaps rather far, and that it is better economy to keep the arsenal working a little more nearly to its capacity, and that we ought to strenghen our supply of the Springfield new models, which is the best gun.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Do I understand that we have on hand 800,000 rifles of the model of 1903?

Mr. LODGE. The chairman states that we have on hand 800,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And something like 2,000,000 of the rifles made in 1917?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; those are the Enfield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Practically the same as we were told during the war?

Mr. LODGE. They are not practically the same. We arranged them to use our cartridges. They have a different mechanism.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That matter was pretty well thrashed out.

Mr. LODGE. Eight hundred thousand Springfield rifles, on the basis of five guns to a man in active service, is not a very large supply; in fact, it is rather under, unless you are going to arm your young men with the new model.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course, we have not anything like 800,000 men. We are providing for only about 150,000.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator must know that the tactics are somewhat different now. Generally three or four, and even five, rifles to a man are required in active service.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I realize that as a war proposition, but we are now provided with 2,000,000 rifles of a type considered good enough for this last war, and 800,000 of this type. As I understand the Senator, the amendment is chiefly for the purpose of keeping the arsenal running. I am in sympathy with that idea. I think the arsenal should be kept running, but is it not sufficient to keep it running at 85 a day, which will give 25,000 rifles a year?

Mr. LODGE. That is a very small allowance for an arsenal with a capacity of 500 rifles a day. There is something in the plant, in the organization, that is worth preserving.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I agree with the Senator's position on that point, and I shall be willing to go some distance in keeping the arsenal in operation, keeping the plant there; but it seems to me when we already have 800,000 of these very rifles, and 2,000,000 additional rifles that were considered amply good, which are practically the same, we ought to go a little slow about adding to the provision as made in the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There was one amendment reserved. The paragraph beginning at line 13, page 61, which was stricken out in Committee of the Whole, I shall reoffer in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the one indicated by the Senator from New York.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I reoffer the amendment on page 61.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] moves to insert the paragraph beginning at line 13 on page 61, the item relative to the Aberdeen Ammunition Arsenal, Md.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Secretary need not read it. It is the Aberdeen Arsenal amendment, which is well understood by Senators. I do not intend to discuss it, as I think most of the Senators here now heard all the discussion upon it. I will be satisfied with a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. NEW, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and Mr. THOMAS conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT SCHOOL SYSTEM—EVENING SESSION TO-MORROW.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, at not later than 5 o'clock p. m., the Senate take a recess until half past 7, and that at the evening session the report of the special committee on the public-school system in the District of Columbia be taken up for discussion only, and that no other business shall be transacted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I object.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator request that it be taken up for discussion only or for discussion and action?

Mr. CURTIS. Merely for discussion, not for action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has the report been submitted?

Mr. CURTIS. It will be submitted to-morrow morning.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I object until the report has been submitted and printed, so that we may know something as to what it contains.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold his objection for a moment, the request was made in order to save the time of the Senate. There is going to be some discussion on the report relative to the school situation. I expect to say something about it; but I did not want to occupy the time of the Senate to-day, because I do not desire to delay the passage of the appropriation bills. But if objection is made to the request and we can not discuss the report at an evening session, I shall proceed to discuss it during the day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent? The Chair hears none, and unanimous consent is granted.

The unanimous-consent agreement was reduced to writing, as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Wednesday, May 26, 1920, the Senate will take a recess until 7.30 o'clock p. m. on said day, the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of the report of the special committee appointed to investigate the public school system in the District of Columbia.

PENSION APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up the bill H. R. 13416, the pension appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to have the bill reported.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the pension appropriation bill and carries just what the statutes call for. If there is any discussion or any objection, I will withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent to take up House bill 13416, the pension appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13416) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 11, after the word "Congress," to strike out "$214,000,000" and insert "$279,000,000"; and on page 2, line 8, after "1921," strike out "$20,000" and to insert "$150,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, namely:

Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $279,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1921, $150,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3184) known as the water-power bill.

I make this motion with the understanding that if the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] should desire to call up the sundry civil bill, the water-power bill may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to call up the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the water-power bill may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 26, 1920, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 25, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Good Lord deliver us, we pray Thee, from that class of people passing up and down through the land seeking whom they may devour, who delight in calling themselves free thinkers, who think little and read less from wholesome literature, but who spend their time in sowing the seeds of discord, hate, and revenge, ever preaching free speech, free press, free assembly where they can carry on their propaganda among the credulous. They are here to destroy and eat the bread of idleness. Have mercy upon them and create in their minds a desire to promote peace and happiness in every home under the best Government under the sun. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REREFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 3995, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I may say that this action is at the request of the Committee on the Public Lands and that the minority leader has been consulted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the rereference of a bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if this is the same bill that he was talking to me about?

Mr. LANGLEY. It is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 3995. An act providing for the relinquishment of certain described property by the United States to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the rereference?

There was no objection.

RURAL CREDIT.

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 12678, the rural credit bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the rural credit bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REHABILITATION OF PERSONS DISABLED IN INDUSTRY.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a quorum before that matter is taken up, and I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. One hundred and three Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed, and the Sergeant at Arms was directed to bring in absentees.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Donovan	Hulings	Padgett
Bacharach	Dooling	Hull, Iowa	Paige

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-seven Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio presents a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 556.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the Committee on Education be, and the same is hereby, discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment, with the Senate amendment thereto, and it shall be in order to consider the same in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the House resolution when it reached the Senate was taken up for consideration. The Senate offered but one amendment by striking out all of the House resolution after the enacting clause and inserting the Senate bill, which virtually is the same as the House bill, differing only in some minor details. When it came over to the House the Senate asked for a conference. The conference was objected to here, and so it went to the Committee on Education. In order to bring the bill before the House for immediate consideration without further delay, the Rules Committee has reported this rule to discharge the Committee on Education and to bring the bill before the House to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. I propose to make a motion to concur in the Senate amendment. I have understood that there is no desire on the part of the minority members on the Rules Committee for time, and I therefore move the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. Let me understand. Does the gentleman propose to move to concur in the Senate amendment without debate?

Mr. FESS. No; it will be debated in the House.

Mr. CANNON. Under the five-minute rule?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were 137 ayes and 53 noes.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 4438, to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment, and ask that the Clerk report the same, together with the Senate amendment thereto.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, trade, commerce, manufacturing, mining, transportation, and all the mechanic arts, and who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation and their return to civil employment, and, in the opinion of the State board, are unable to carry on a gainful occupation, to resume their former occupations, or to enter upon some other occupation, or having resumed or entered upon such occupation are unable to continue at the same successfully, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act, for the purpose of cooperating with them in the maintenance of vocational rehabilitation of such disabled persons, and in returning vocationally rehabilitated persons to civil employment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $500,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $750,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and annually thereafter, the sum of $1,000,000. Said sum shall be allotted to the States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population in the United States, not including Territories, outlying possessions, and the District of Columbia, according to the last preceding United States census: Provided, That the allotment of funds to any State shall not be less than a minimum of $5,000 for any fiscal year. And there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the following sums, or so much thereof as may be needed, which shall be used for the purpose of providing the minimum allotment to the States provided for in this section, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $66,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $46,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and annually thereafter, the sum of $34,000.

All moneys expended under the provisions of this act from appropriations authorized by section 1 shall be upon condition (1) that for each dollar of Federal money expended there shall be expended in the State under the supervision and control of the State board at least an equal amount for the same purpose: Provided, That no portion of the appropriation authorized by this act shall be used by any institution for handicapped persons except for the special training of such individuals entitled to the benefits of this act as shall by a general plan of supervision be determined by the Federal board; (2) that the State board shall annually submit to the Federal board for approval plans showing (a) the kinds of vocational rehabilitation and schemes of placement for which it is proposed the appropriation shall be used; (b) the plan of administration and supervision; (c) courses of study; (d) methods of instruction; (e) qualification of teachers, supervisors, directors, and other necessary administrative officers or employees; (f) plans for the training of teachers, supervisors, and directors; (3) that the State board shall make an annual report to the Federal board on or before September 1 of each year on the work done in the State and on the receipts and expenditures of money under the provisions of this act; (4) that no portion of any moneys from appropriations authorized by this act for the benefit of the States shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, preservation, erection, or repair of any building or buildings or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any lands; (5) that all courses for vocational rehabilitation given under the supervision and control of the State board and all courses for vocational rehabilitation maintained shall be available, under such rules and regulations as the Federal board shall prescribe, to any civil employee of the United States disabled while in the performance of his duty.

SEC. 2. That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations authorized by section 1 any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, (1) accept the provisions of this act; (2) empower and direct the board designated or created as the State board for vocational education to cooperate in the administration of the provisions of the vocational education act, approved February 23, 1917, to cooperate as herein provided with the Federal Board for Vocational Education in the administration of the provisions of this act; (3) in those States where a State workmen's compensation board, or other State board, department, or agency exists, charged with the administration of the State workmen's compensation or liability laws, the legislature shall provide that a plan of cooperation be formulated between such State board, department, or agency, and the State board charged with the administration of this act, such plan to be effective when approved by the governor of the State; (4) provide for the supervision and support of the course of vocational rehabilitation to be provided by the State board in carrying out the provisions of this act; (5) appoint as custodian for said appropriations its State treasurer, who shall receive and provide for the proper custody and disbursement of all money paid to the State from said appropriations. In any State the legislature of which does not meet in 1920 or 1921 if the governor of that State shall accept the provision of this act, such State shall be entitled to the benefits of this act until the legislature of such State meets in due course and has been in session 60 days.

SEC. 3. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall have power to cooperate with State boards in carrying out the purposes and provisions of this act, and is hereby authorized to make and establish such rules and regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry into effect the provisions of this act; to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons and their return to civil employment and to cooperate, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, with such public and private agencies as it may deem advisable. It shall be the duty of said board (1) to examine plans submitted by the State boards and approve the same if believed to be feasible and found to be in conformity with the provisions and purposes of this act; (2) to ascertain annually whether the several States are using or are prepared to use the money received by them in accordance with the provisions of this act; (3) to certify on or before the 1st day of January of each year to the Secretary of the Treasury each State which has accepted the provisions of this act and complied therewith, together with the amount, which each State is entitled to receive under the provisions of this act; (4) to deduct from the next succeeding allotment to any State whenever any portion of the fund annually allotted has not been expended for the purpose provided for in this act a sum equal to such unexpended portion: Provided, That no deduction from the allotment to any State shall be made until one year after the legislature of said State shall first meet after the passage hereof; (5) to withhold the allotment of moneys to any State whenever it shall be determined that moneys allotted are not being expended for the purposes and conditions of this act; (6) to require the replacement by withholding subsequent allotments of any portion of the moneys received by the custodian of any State under this act that by any action or contingency is diminished or lost: Provided, That if any allotment is withheld from any State for a period of three years after the appropriation is made, it shall be covered into the Treasury.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the certification of the Federal board, as provided in this act, shall pay quarterly to the treasurer of each State the moneys to which it is entitled under the provisions of this act. The money so received by the treasurer of any State shall be paid out on the requisition of the State board as reimbursement for services already rendered or expenditures already incurred and approved by said State board. The Federal Board for Vocational Education shall make an annual report to the Congress on or before December 1 on the administration of this act, and shall include in such report the reports made by the State boards on the administration of this act by each State and the expenditure of the money allotted to each State.

SEC. 5. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Board for Vocational Education the sum of $50,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and annually thereafter for the period of four years, $75,000 for the administrative expenses of said board incident to performing the duties imposed by this act, including salaries of such assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as the board may deem necessary, actual traveling and other necessary expenses incurred by the members of the board and by its employees, under its orders, rent and equipment of offices in the District of Columbia, stationery, typewriters and exchange thereof, miscellaneous supplies, postage on foreign mail, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, and all other necessary expenses.

A full report of all expenses under this section, including names of all employees and salaries paid them, traveling expenses and other expenses incurred by each and every employee and by members of the board, shall be submitted annually to Congress by the board.

No salaries shall be paid out of the fund provided in this section in excess of the following amounts: At the rate of $4,000 per annum, to not more than one person; at the rate of $3,600 per annum each, to not more than four persons; at the rate of $3,500 per annum each, to not more than five persons; and no other employee shall receive compensation at a rate in excess of $2,500 per annum: Provided, That no person receiving compensation at less than $3,500 per annum shall receive in excess of the amount of compensation paid in the regular departments of the Government for like or similar services: Provided, That no part of the moneys herein authorized shall be expended for the publication, printing, or preparation of any magazine, newspapers, or periodicals unless authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing.

SEC. 6. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education is hereby authorized and empowered to receive such gifts and donations from either public or private sources as may be offered unconditionally. All moneys received as gifts or donations shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and shall constitute a permanent fund, to be called the "Special fund for vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons," to be used under the direction of the said board to defray the expenses of providing and maintaining courses of vocational rehabilitation in special cases, including the payment of necessary expenses of persons undergoing training. A full report of all gifts and donations offered and accepted, together with the names of the donors and the respective amounts contributed by each, and all disbursements therefrom shall be submitted annually to Congress by said board.

That in order to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or in any legitimate occupation and their return to civil employment there is hereby appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act, for the purpose of cooperating with them in the maintenance of vocational rehabilitation of such disabled persons, and in returning vocationally rehabilitated persons to civil employment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $750,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and thereafter for a period of two years, the sum of $1,000,000 annually. Said sums shall be allotted to the States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population in the United States, not including Territories, outlying possessions, and the District of Columbia, according to the last preceding United States census: Provided, That the allotment of funds to any State shall not be less than a minimum of $5,000 for any fiscal year. And there is hereby appropriated the following sums, or so much thereof as may be needed, which shall be used for the purpose of providing the minimum allotment to the States provided for in this section, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $46,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and annually thereafter, the sum of $34,000.

All moneys expended under the provisions of this act from appropriations provided by section 1 shall be upon the condition (1) that for each dollar of Federal money expended there shall be expended in the State under the supervision and control of the State board at least an equal amount for the same purpose: Provided, That no portion of the appropriation made by this act shall be used by any institution for handicapped persons except for the special training of such individuals entitled to the benefits of this act as shall be determined by the Federal board; (2) that the State board shall annually submit to the Federal board for approval plans showing (a) the kinds of vocational rehabilitation and schemes of placement for which it is proposed the appropriation shall be used; (b) the plan of administration and supervision; (c) courses of study; (d) methods of instruction; (e) qualification of teachers, supervisors, directors, and other necessary administrative officers or employees; (f) plans for the training of teachers, supervisors, and directors; (3) that the State board shall make an annual report to the Federal board on or before September 1 of each year on the work done in the State and on the receipts and expenditures of money under the provisions of this act; (4) that no portion of any moneys appropriated by this act for the benefit of the States shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, preservation, erection, or repair of any building or buildings or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any lands; (5) that all courses for vocational rehabilitation given under the supervision and control of the State board and all courses for vocational rehabilitation maintained shall be available, under such rules and regulations as the Federal board shall prescribe, to any civil employee of the United States disabled while in the performance of his duty.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of this act the term "persons disabled" shall be construed to mean any person who, by reason of a physical defect or infirmity, whether congenital or acquired by accident, injury, or disease, is, or may be expected to be, totally or partially incapacitated for remunerative occupation; the term "rehabilitation" shall be construed to mean the rendering of a person disabled fit to engage in a remunerative occupation.

SEC. 3. That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations provided by section 1 any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, (1) accept the provisions of this act; (2) empower and direct the board designated or created as the State board for vocational education to cooperate in the administration of the provisions of the vocational education act, approved February 23, 1917, to cooperate as herein provided with the Federal Board for Vocational Education in the administration of the provisions of this act; (3) in those States where a State workmen's compensation board, or other State board, department, or agency exists, charged with the administration of the State workmen's compensation or liability laws, the legislature shall provide that a plan of cooperation be formulated between such State board, department, or agency and the State board charged with the administration of this act, such plan to be effective when approved by the governor of the State; (4) provide for the supervision and support of the courses of vocational rehabilitation to be provided by the State board in carrying out the provisions of this act; (5) appoint as custodian for said appropriations its State treasurer, who shall receive and provide for the proper custody and disbursement of all money paid to the State from said appropriations. In any State the legislature of which does not meet in regular session between the date of the passage of this act and December 31, 1920, if the governor of that State shall accept the provisions of this act, such State shall be entitled to the benefits of this act until the legislature of such State meets in due course and has been in session 60 days.

SEC. 4. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall have power to cooperate with State boards in carrying out the purposes and provisions of this act, and is hereby authorized to make and establish such rules and regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry into effect the provisions of this act; to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons and their return to civil employment and to cooperate, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, with such public and private agencies as it may deem advisable. It shall be the duty of said board (1) to examine plans submitted by the State boards and approve the same if believed to be feasible and found to be in conformity with the provisions and purposes of this act; (2) to ascertain annually whether the several States are using or are prepared to use the money received by them in accordance with the provisions of this act; (3) to certify on or before the 1st day of January of each year to the Secretary of the Treasury each State which has accepted the provisions of this act and complied therewith, together with the amount which each State is entitled to receive under the provisions of this act; (4) to deduct from the next succeeding allotment to any State whenever any portion of the fund annually allotted has not been expended for the purpose provided for in this act a sum equal to such unexpended portion; (5) to withhold the allotment of moneys to any State whenever it shall be determined that moneys allotted are not being expended for the purposes and conditions of this act; (6) to require the replacement by withholding subsequent allotments of any portion of the moneys received by the custodian of any State under this act that by any action or contingency is diminished or lost: Provided, That if any allotment is withheld from any State, the State board of such State may appeal to the Congress of the United States, and if the Congress shall not, within one year from the time of said appeal, direct such sum to be paid, it shall be covered into the Treasury.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the certification of the Federal board as provided in this act, shall pay quarterly to the custodian of each State appointed as herein provided the moneys to which it is entitled under the provisions of this act. The money so received by the custodian for any State shall be paid out on the requisition of the State board as reimbursement for services already rendered or expenditures already incurred and approved by said State board. The Federal Board for Vocational Education shall make an annual report to the Congress on or before December 1 on the administration of this act and shall include in such report the reports made by the State boards on the administration of this act by each State and the expenditure of the money allotted to each State.

SEC. 6. That there is hereby appropriated to the Federal Board for Vocational Education the sum of $75,000 annually for a period of four years for the purpose of making studies, investigations, and reports regarding the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons and their placements in suitable or gainful occupations, and for the administrative expenses of said board incident to performing the duties imposed by this act, including salaries of such assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as the board may deem necessary, actual traveling and other necessary expenses incurred by the members of the board and by its employees, under its orders, including attendance at meetings of educational associations and other organizations, rent and equipment of offices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference, law books, and periodicals, stationery, typewriters and exchange thereof, miscellaneous supplies, postage on foreign mail, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, and all other necessary expenses.

A full report of all expenses under this section, including names of all employees and salaries paid them, traveling expenses and other expenses incurred by each and every employee and by members of the board, shall be submitted annually to Congress by the board.

No salaries shall be paid out of the fund provided in this section in excess of the following amounts: At the rate of $5,000 per annum, to not more than one person; at the rate of $4,000 per annum each, to not more than four persons; at the rate of $3,500 per annum each, to not more than five persons; and no other employee shall receive compensation at a rate in excess of $2,500 per annum: Provided, That no person receiving compensation at less than $3,500 per annum shall receive in excess of the amount of compensation paid in the regular departments of the Government for like or similar services.

SEC. 7. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education is hereby authorized and empowered to receive such gifts and donations from either public or private sources as may be offered unconditionally. All moneys received as gifts or donations shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and shall constitute a permanent fund, to be called the "Special fund for vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons," to be used under the direction of the said board to defray the expenses of providing and maintaining courses of vocational rehabilitation in special cases, including the payment of necessary expenses of persons undergoing training. A full report of all gifts and donations offered and accepted, together with the names of the donors and the respective amounts contributed by each, and all disbursements therefrom shall be submitted annually to Congress by said board: Provided, That no discrimination shall be made or permitted for or against any person or persons who are entitled to the benefits of this act because of membership or nonmembership in any industrial, fraternal, or private organizations of any kind under a penalty of $200 for every violation thereof.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment. I am going to state to the membership of the House the points of difference between the House bill and the Senate amendment. The Senate struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted as an amendment the Senate bill. It is virtually the same as the House bill, with some minor changes, and I shall point out those changes. On page 10, lines 1 to 4, it will be noticed that the Senate amendment limits the appropriation so that no appropriation will take effect this year, but the first year it will take effect is in the fiscal year 1921–22. The amount of $750,000 and then for two years afterward $1,000,000 each year is appropriated. The House bill was indefinite, to the effect of a million dollars a year indefinitely, and the Senate amendment limits it to 1924, inclusive. That is the first change.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. GARD. I note on line 15, page 10, the words "and annually thereafter, the sum of $34,000." Is that intended to come within the four-year limitation of which the gentleman speaks?

Mr. FESS. That would be limited, I should say, to the four years, because the Federal Government would not be cooperating after 1924.

Mr. GARD. Is the appropriation of $34,000 "annually thereafter" limited to the four years?

Mr. FESS. I understand that it is. That is to make up the minimum, so that no State will fall below $5,000 a year.

Section 2, at the bottom of page 11, is new. It defines the term "persons disabled." It was thought better to have the limitation in rather than to leave it indefinitely.

The House bill simply authorized appropriations, while the Senate amendment makes the actual appropriation. That is another change. The House bill also limited the rehabilitation to persons who were unable to pay their own expenses. The Senate amendment strikes out that limitation upon the basis that puts it rather on the ground of charity. The Senate amendment puts no limitation upon the ability of the injured man to pay for it himself, and makes it general.

The Senate amendment, on page 13, also adds, in lines 6 and 7—

in regular session between the date of the passage of this act and December 31, 1920.

That is done to avoid the possibility of this bill not being operative in case a legislature was not in session at the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MADDEN). The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. The Senate amendment also makes a radical change on page 15, section 6. It limits the amount to be used for studies to $75,000 a year, and limits the time to a period of four years, while the House bill made that $150,000 and the time was unlimited.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Members of the House frequently receive pamphlets from the Vocational Board of studies they have made. I have read some of those, and they are highly technical. I want to know if the board tries to use the highly technical books in instructing these men. If they do, I think it would be absolutely impossible for the ordinary man to get any intelligent grasp of the highly technical books they are issuing from time to time, giving the result of the studies they are making. What use is made of them?

Mr. FESS. I have not gone into that sufficiently to answer my friend from Texas. In the investigation that matter was criticized some. It was claimed that some of the bulletins were not entirely practical.

Mr. BLACK. If there is any faculty that I have at all, it is just plain common sense. I have read some of those pamphlets and I know that the average young man absolutely could not grasp them at all. They are too highly technical and they are worthless as a practical proposition.

Mr. FESS. I think the gentleman's objection is patent. That is something very likely to occur in many of the utterances of commissions. However, that is for the commission to correct. The last section on page 17 of the Senate amendment has also a provision that was not in the House bill.

The Senate amendment is similar to the House bill except in the details that I have here mentioned. I would prefer to have had the matter go to conference. I made the request to send it to conference in order that the differences might be worked out. Objection was made to sending it to conference and the committee felt that the quickest way would be to bring it before the House at once and concur in the Senate amendment, and in that way make it a law. For that reason we have thought it best to agree to the Senate amendment rather than to prolong the discussion.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Does the gentleman mean on the proviso?

Mr. FESS. Yes; the latter proviso.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What are they referring to there? What did they have in mind?

Mr. FESS. There has been a lot of contention in the investigation as to just whether there has been any discrimination at all because of fraternal relationships.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What does the gentleman mean by fraternal relationship?

Mr. FESS. It might be that fraternal orders supply the funds for their own maintenance or their own reeducation, and in case that is true this bill is not going to discriminate against them.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman means Masons, Odd Fellows, and that sort of organizations?

Mr. FESS. I understand that was put in so there will be no discrimination, however.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Does that mean labor unions?

Mr. FESS. Yes; all such organizations. There is no discrimination because of any membership of anybody in any fraternal organization.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, I have just hop skipped and jumped over this matter, and as I understand it from a very hasty hop-skipping of it a man worth a million dollars or any other sum can be relieved from any payment under this bill?

Mr. FESS. The gentleman's understanding is correct.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to express the hope that the House will accept the Senate amendment, which will at once send the bill to the President for his signature, which will make it a law. It will, in my judgment, be regarded as one of the most humanitarian as well as the most economic and constructive pieces of legislation during the decade.

One of the most distinctive results of the war is the emphasis placed upon functional reeducation, or the rehabilitation of disabled men.

Europe's part in this work has been more voluntary than official. Canada had taken the most advanced step and served as an inspiration for this country. Up to date we have progressed along the lines of governmental rather than voluntary rehabilitation.

This work gave a new stimulus to those who have persistently advocated such legislation as compensation laws, which have become an established policy in at least half the States of the Union.

The next and legitimate step is rehabilitation of the cripple in industry. Compensation alone is likely to lead to human deterioration. Functional reeducation is designed to go beyond mere governmental support, which operates as does a pension, by placing in the hands of the unfortunate the instruments of self-help to insure a personal independence and avoid the state of charity.

Studies have been made on this subject both in Europe and America, the results of which justify legislation to carry forward the work to include industrial cripples. One of the most recent reports came from a survey made in Cleveland, Ohio. Of the 1,738 men between 15 and 60 years of age, 32 per cent were classed as not seriously handicapped, 48 per cent able to work at selected trades, and 20 per cent disabled for work with normal persons. Upon this report recommendation was made for an adequate system of vocational training to remove the handicap. This training was declared to be the basis of future ability in economic life.

Massachusetts, as usual in remedial legislation, has taken the lead in this work. Two laws have recently been enacted—one for the benefit of industrial cripples to aid them "in obtaining such education, training, and employment as will tend to restore their capacity to earn a livelihood." This division may "cooperate with the United States Government and in cooperation with the board of education may establish or maintain, or assist in establishing or maintaining, such courses as it may deem expedient, and otherwise may act in such manner as it may deem necessary to accomplish the purpose of this act."

New York, anticipating the enactment of this proposed Federal rehabilitation act, unanimously provided for the cooperation with the Government before the recent legislature adjourned.

Eight States have already taken the necessary steps in anticipation of this legislation.

I have urged the passage of this Federal proposal upon the basis of facts submitted from extended studies.

(1) Those who may be regarded as having made a satisfactory adjustment, whose situation was as good or better than before the injury, 57 per cent.

(2) Those who, although in a less favorable economic situation than before, have made a partial adjustment, 16 per cent.

(3) Those cases in which the outcome is not apparent, 9 per cent.

(4) Those who are unsuccessful in their attempts at adjustment, 18 per cent.

These facts eminently justify the position of those who advocate this Federal cooperation in the work of rehabilitation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Amend the Senate amendment, page 12, line 3, by striking out "or may be expected to be."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one which was pretty thoroughly considered by the House. I think the Senate amendment ought to be amended, but I do not imagine it will be, because I think we are in the advanced stage of legislative disability or infirmity in this House, and this Congress will probably go out of session in a blaze of complete legislative paralysis.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does the gentleman think we will ever recover?

Mr. WALSH. This language in the bill leads me to think that some of us in the future may very well ask to come under the provisions of this bill, because a person disabled is anybody "who by reason of a physical defect or infirmity, whether congenital, or acquired by accident, injury, or disease, is, or may be expected to be, totally or partially incapacitated for remunerative occupation." I would like to ask where you can draw the line under such a definition as that in the administration of this bill?

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. PLATT. Does not the gentleman think the words "whether congenital or" ought to come out? This bill originally rehabilitates a person injured by accident, and the Senate has thrown it wide open.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will recall when it was before the House we were swept off our feet by the argument that we had appropriated money for hog cholera, and therefore we must open wide the gates to the Treasury for legislation of this sort, and they saw how easily it went through the House at that stage, and the Senate without five minutes' consideration of this measure when it was over there slipped this bill through, not only opening wide the gates but they have taken down the gates, the fence, and the gate posts, so as to open up the whole business for a raid upon the Treasury for such a purpose as this. My firm belief is that the support of the House of Representatives of such paternalistic legislation as this gives more support and encouragement to the people throughout this country who have no respect for our institutions and form of government. [Applause.] We are going to embark upon this program, Mr. Speaker, and we will never be able, under ordinary means which we have used, to produce and raise revenue to keep up with this procession and keep the tax burdens off the people of this country. [Applause.] I submit we might well refuse here and now to act further upon this legislation and let it wait until we get back to thinking normally, until we get our feet back upon the earth. [Applause.] But where are we going to draw the line? You say that people who may be rehabilitated are those who are or who may expect to be disabled or partially incapacitated for remunerative occupation or employment. "The term 'rehabilitation' shall be construed to mean the rendering of a person disabled unfit to engage in a remunerative occupation." Now, Mr. Speaker, I think we might well adopt this amendment to the Senate amendment and put at least some little restriction upon this definition that has been incorporated in this bill by the coordinate branch.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I will ask for three additional minutes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will not the gentleman take five minutes and allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the gentleman, for whose opinion I have great respect, wherein do we find in the instrument sometimes known as the American Constitution any authority for this legislation?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know of a line in the American Constitution [applause] that supports this policy upon which we are embarking, and this is simply enlarging and carrying forward this rehabilitation, I say, that has been put into practice by the Federal Board of Vocational Education, and it has carried it far beyond the borders which were originally intended when we established that branch of the Government, and it is entering upon a field with which the Federal Government, I submit, has nothing whatever to do, and there is no authority by law or in the Constitution for our undertaking to step within the boundaries of a State, either by cooperating or under the original law, and undertaking to mend and rehabilitate those who are crippled and maimed in industry.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The bill to which the gentleman alluded is the vocational education act. Did not that relate to the soldiers mainly?

Mr. WALSH. It got its start in that way.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And this bill has no relation to injured soldiers?

Mr. WALSH. No, sir; none whatever.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But to any industry?

Mr. WALSH. The original Federal Board for Vocational Education operated under the law that was passed before the rehabilitation act became a law, and it applied solely to those crippled in the military or naval services.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But did not such injured or crippled people bear some relation to interstate commerce or to some other Federal power?

Mr. WALSH. The vocational education act did not apply solely to injured persons; it was to persons who desired to pursue education along vocational lines, and we formed that board, and this is the outcome of it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did not the vocational laws of necessity relate themselves in some way to interstate commerce or some other Federal power?

Mr. WALSH. Not as I read that act.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I thank the gentleman for permitting me to interrogate him, because he can perceive from my questions that my state of mind inclined me to vote against this bill on its former passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, regarding the merits of the motion to strike out, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] exaggerates, and I think tries to put a meaning into the words which is not warranted. In the first place, a man must be disabled. Then the language is used:

Is, or may be expected to be, totally or partially incapacitated.

There is no unreasonableness in the use of that language. A man might have incipient tuberculosis or be slightly injured, in which case it would be impossible to determine whether or not he would be partially or wholly incapacitated.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. In that connection I want to ask the gentleman whether there are any agencies for the treatment of tuberculosis other than the Vocational Board?

Mr. TOWNER. Indeed, there are.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Are they not adequate?

Mr. TOWNER. Not for the purpose of industrially treating these people or industrially educating them. We have a provision for that.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I shall have to decline to yield, because I want to make my statement. We have this condition to meet by this bill: On every hand throughout the United States of America are men and women in industry who are being crippled and incapacitated from carrying on their work. Very often a man may be injured in one vocation, have a leg taken off, for instance, and be engaged in some active outdoor work, and yet, being industrially educated for some other vocation, he may be placed in a self-sustaining position by the industrial education which will make him capable of maintaining himself, and sometimes a family as well, by an occupation in something that does not require the use of a leg. And so on in hundreds of cases that might be illustrated.

This is only carrying out the purpose which is certainly justifiable, when the Nation is immediately affected by the health and the ability to sustain themselves and their citizens, to assist the States in the rehabilitation of those injured, and place these men on their feet again, so that they may be self-supporting American citizens.

Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE].

Mr. BEE. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa if the result of this bill is going to lead in this way, that in a corporation suit for damages or injuries committed upon men working for them, they will plead against the suit the fact in mitigation of the damages that this man is to be rehabilitated by the act.

Mr. TOWNER. How can they do so?

Mr. BEE. Why not?

Mr. TOWNER. Because every man takes advantage of the law. You might argue that as a matter of fact before a jury, but I guess your argument would not go very far.

Mr. BEE. Why should a corporation be relieved of the absolute responsibility?

Mr. TOWNER. A corporation is not relieved in any sense; neither are the States relieved by the rehabilitation work. But the Government assists in this work. It tries to get these men into self-supporting positions. It tries to make them good American citizens as well as citizens of the State of Texas.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. I notice in section 1 that it recites that the bill is for the purpose of providing for the rehabilitation of persons injured in industry, and it seems to be confined to them.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Or in any legitimate occupation.

Mr. HUSTED. Or in any legitimate occupation. Now, in section 2 it sets forth:

That for the purpose of this act——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUSTED. In section 2 it provides that the term "persons disabled" shall be construed to mean any person who by reason of a physical defect or infirmity, whether congenital or acquired by accident, injury, or disease, is included within the beneficial provisions of the act. Now, is it the intention of the act to confine this rehabilitation education to persons disabled in industry or in some legitimate, useful occupation, or is it also to treat cases of congenital deformity, who are not in industry or engaged in any legitimate occupation?

Mr. TOWNER. I presume these men would probably be engaged in industry, but of course the definition here of the words "persons disabled" would control. The larger view of the case, if they came in contradiction with each other, would be the statement here that is made that if it was acquired, whether congenital or otherwise, by accident, injury, or disease, it would include them.

Mr. HUSTED. But by your interpretation it would cover any case of physical disability, whether congenital or otherwise?

Mr. TOWNER. I am inclined to think it would be limited to those who are engaged in industry, but if they had any congenital disease, or anything of the kind, which incapacitated them from their work, they would get the benefit of it.

Mr. HUSTED. But it would not be limited, as I understand your statement, to those engaged in industry.

Mr. TOWNER. To an accident actually occurring in industry, I think not. But if a person was engaged in industry and should become incapacitated by reason of incipient tuberculosis developing I think he would be entitled to the benefit.

Mr. HUSTED. And it would apply to all such cases, entirely irrespective of their financial ability to pay for rehabilitation?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTED. Whether a man was rich or poor, or whatever his financial condition might be?

Mr. TOWNER. If he was working in industry, I do not think he would be very rich.

Mr. HUSTED. It says any legitimate occupation.

Mr. PLATT. It would apply to Members of Congress.

Mr. HUSTED. It would apply to a Member of Congress, or to a physician, or lawyer, or anybody.

Mr. TOWNER. I presume that might be considered as being a large interpretation.

Mr. Speaker, I want to use some time——

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WHEELER. I would like to inquire if any of the States have appropriated for this?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, yes; many of the States have done so, some in anticipation of this act.

Mr. FESS. I would like to state to my friend from New York that Illinois, without a dissenting vote in either house, has already provided for it.

The State of Massachusetts has appropriated $10,000 for the work.

Mr. GARLAND. And Pennsylvania.

Mr. FESS. Eight of the States have done it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman knows that we have probably got more college professors in the State of Massachusetts than in any other State in the Union, and that fact is showing its effects in legislation of this kind.

Mr. FESS. Yes; and it is showing more and more leadership along this line in spite of the efforts of the gentleman from Massachusetts to obstruct it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Would it apply to men injured in the ordinary pursuits of agriculture, following a plow or driving a team?

Mr. TOWNER. It would if he had a physical infirmity.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. This is a proposition, as I understand it, that covers any form of incapacity, whether congenital or otherwise, in any pursuit or occupation throughout the country?

Mr. TOWNER. I am not absolutely certain of that.

Mr. LAYTON. That is about it?

Mr. FESS. I think that is true.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to speak for a moment about the extreme statement that was made by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] regarding all of this form of legislation. I regret exceedingly that the gentleman takes that kind of a position. I regret exceedingly that we are to see now manifested the same opposition to all forms of beneficial legislation by the General Government that has been exhibited so often on the floor of this House. There is not a particle of question, Mr. Speaker, but what with the advancing civilization of this and other civilized countries the Governments can and will continue to do many things for citizens which they have not done before. In fact throughout every year of our history in this country we have been doing that very thing, and will doubtless continue so to do. If government were so rigid that the only thing that could be done was the thing that had been done there could be no progress, no adjustment to new conditions as they arose. Governmental activities will doubtless increase to meet new conditions and new demands, and that is as it should be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to enter into a general discussion of the provisions of this bill, but I do desire to take advantage of this privilege by recalling briefly the history of this legislation at this session of Congress. When we met in May of last year this bill was introduced both in the House and in the Senate. Last summer or last fall it passed the Senate of the United States. On October 17, 1919, it passed this House by a vote of 196 to 105 in substantially the same form that it is now presented to this House for final action. We had a very thorough and exhaustive debate pro and con on the merits and demerits of that bill at that time, extending over several days of our deliberations.

Now, the proposition is presented here for the Members of this House who are in favor of this bill to finally enact it into legislation. I think it would be extremely unfortunate if any delay should occur by virtue of the adoption of such an amendment as that proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

If we undertake to analyze the purpose of the language here that he objects to it will be very readily observed that the language was put in there for a purpose. It was not surplus language. It was not put in there for the purpose of throwing the field wide open to a person who was in an uninjured condition, who might possibly be expected to become injured or incapacitated; but if the Members will refer to the language they will see that it says "persons disabled" shall be construed to mean any person who, by reason of a physical defect or infirmity, whether congenital or acquired by accident, injury, or disease, is, "or may be expected to be, totally or partially incapacitated for remunerative occupation." Of course, that means to take the case of an individual who is suffering from some temporary injury or disease, the result of which will reasonably eventuate in his permanent disability—not to go into the field of speculation and throw the gate wide open for a person who might contract a disease or infirmity. That is the reason for the language which, on reflection, I hope, will readily appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. It will not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Massachusetts, as we all know, is opposed to this kind of legislation, and of course it becomes the part of the gentleman from Massachusetts to throw every obstacle possible in the way of its passage, and if he can secure the passage of any immaterial amendment to this bill he will by that much accomplish the delay of the measure.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. On whose expectation is this to be based—on the expectation of the man who thinks he is going to become incapacitated, or the expectation of some official?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman mean how is this fund to be administered under the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I am asking the gentleman as to the definition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. My answer is pertinent to the gentleman's question. This fund is to be administered under the provisions and regulations of the State board of education.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman states that, I do not think he could have read the bill. I do not think it contains any such provision as that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will refer to section 1 of the bill, on page 10, he will find that it provides that it shall be expended in the States under the supervision and control of the State board, and they will establish rules and regulations for its administration.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman read section 4?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course the Federal board reserves the right to lay down the general regulations as to what character of persons shall be eligible for this retraining, just as it does under the provisions of the Smith-Hughes vocational bill for the training of normal pupils in our public-school system. In that connection the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] what warrant there was in the Constitution for the passage of legislation of this character. That question, I imagine, was not raised in connection with that bill, which was passed by a Democratic Congress——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There was a bill passed, as I say, by both the Democrats and Republicans when we were in control here, authorizing the expenditure of $3,000,000 a year. It was to be divided among the States to be spent on the public-school systems of the different States for the vocational training of normal-school pupils in the public and high schools.

Mr. FESS. Seven million dollars.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Seven million dollars, as I am informed by the gentleman from Ohio. I do not imagine, even if there was not any constitutional warrant for the passage of a bill of that character, that an objection on constitutional grounds would be raised to a bill of this character, which certainly appeals more strongly to our sympathy and more strongly to our economic judgment than the education of absolutely normal people under the supervision of the board.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. As a matter of fact, there are many progressive diseases which the physician knows are going from bad to worse.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do not take too much of my time.

Mr. LAYTON. It is to provide for them, in anticipation of the worst, so that they can have rehabilitation to fit them for activity when that time comes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Exactly. I think that is the purpose of the language.

Mr. BEE. I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman from Alabama, and will state that outside of other objections running to this measure I can not help thinking that the corporations which have men employed in industry will find it of great advantage to them in the trial of their cases before juries to plead in mitigation of damages the fact that these men will be rehabilitated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. My friend is a good lawyer, and I am rather surprised to hear that he would inject that character of argument as an objection in this debate, because the gentleman well knows that a plea of that sort, if it were offered to a complaint alleging damages for physical injury caused by the negligence of a corporation, would be absolutely subject to demurrer, and would not be a germane plea to interpose in any court in this country that I know of.

Mr. BEE. The gentleman from Iowa thinks it would be useful as an argument to suggest such a thing to the jury.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But not as a matter of pleading.

Mr. BEE. No; an argument in mitigation of damages to the unfortunate man whose legs have been cut off.

Mr. TOWNER. Just exactly the same objection that the gentleman from Texas urges to this bill was made, I presume, in every State in the Union with regard to the employers' liability act, and yet every State in the Union has an employers' liability act.

Mr. BEE. Yes; but the employers are the ones who are required to pay in that case, and here the Government of the United States is called on to pay it.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; the Government of the United States, under this bill, makes only an appropriation of $1,000,000, after 1922, to be divided among the States; not that the burden is thereby imposed upon the Government to retrain these unfortunate people, because $1,000,000 would not go any where along that line; but the purpose is only the stimulation of the leadership of the Federal Government to get this system inaugurated if the States of the Union see fit to take it up, and to make appropriations necessary for that purpose, to retrain and reeducate their own unfortunate citizens. That is the principle that runs through this bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman think persons should be included who are financially able to effect their own rehabilitation; and if he does think so, why was not that provision made in the House bill? As I understand it, the House bill did not include those persons.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not in a position to advise the gentleman as to the arguments affecting that situation, but I imagine that in the rules and regulations that will be provided for. In the first place, there would be no inducement to a rich person to take training of this character, and that regulation would be put into effect by the Federal and State boards, which would limit it within reasonable terms to those who actually needed training of this character.

Mr. LAYTON They would not have that right, would they?

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama, How could it become an issue in the trial of a case in a State court, whether the Government rehabilitated the injured person or not?

Mr. BANKHEARD. It could not be.

Mr. CARAWAY. It could not be proved, and it could not be argued.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Absolutely not.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is no way to suggest it to the jury.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I agree with my friend from Arkansas on the legal argument involved.

All I have to say, in conclusion, is that I trust those who favor this legislation upon its merits will vote down the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think we ought to have a little more time to consider a matter as important as this.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman want it on this amendment? There are other amendments. I do not refer to the Senate amendment but to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. There will be other opportunities.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That is all right.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed in 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] be closed in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I think we may as well recognize, in view of the language inserted by the body at the opposite end of this building, that this bill in its present form provides the entering wedge for a vast machinery under the guise of taking care of cripples in industry, to provide a vast governmental machine to extend far beyond that. Just why in section 2, which is a new section, they left out the word "mental" after the word "physical" I do not know, because they might just as well have included that and made the United States a partner in the care of all those who unfortunately have become insane in the several States. They did not do that, but they put in everything else. Therefore, I rise to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and I would support an amendment striking out section 2, for it seems to me in all good faith that under the language of section 2 as it now stands, without any limitations at all, we are simply having here an exhibition of the desire of the State and those who represent the State to be relieved from responsibility. I am not discussing State rights, but I do call attention to some State responsibilities and duties. Here is a case where a man is not injured in industry. I am decidedly in favor of workmen's compensation laws, and I believe that the industry in which a man is injured should pay for his injury and for his rehabilitation; but this bill in its extent will make the United States a partner with the States in every sort of rehabilitation, and it is only the entering wedge allowing this great Federal machinery to be builded up, and it will be said, "Well, after all, they are citizens of the United States, and the United States under its vast machinery can do it better. Let us relieve the States from any responsibility. Let us have it all in the Federal Government." Anyone who votes for this bill as it now is must realize that that is exactly what is meant here, the ever-increasing readiness of States to get away from their responsibilities, their ever-increasing readiness to accept, nay, to demand from the Federal Treasury appropriations to carry out functions which are properly and almost exclusively State functions. That is what this bill means.

However, I am opposed to everything in section 2, and especially am I in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I am opposed to section 2 in its entirety.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Surely.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did the gentleman vote for the Smith-Hughes vocational act in 1916?

Mr. GARD. I presume I did.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How does the gentleman differentiate this from that act?

Mr. GARD. It is different absolutely in principle. That was a form of education.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But the gentleman is arguing that the Government should not go into partnership with the States. That was a partnership with the State.

Mr. GARD. Yes; to a limited extent, and to that extent I am subject to the criticism of the gentleman if I did vote for it, and I presume I did. But this goes far beyond the system of the Government assisting the State in the education; this goes so far as to establish a system which unhindered will absolutely control or seek to take control of those injured not alone in industry but injured in any way, and therefore I oppose the bill as it stands.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. There evidently is no quorum present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Doorkeeper was ordered to close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms to notify the absentees.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this call 318 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this measure that is before us is one of those insidious and attractive propositions which dazzle the eye by appearing in a pleasant guise. Ostensibly for a good and noble purpose, it carries within it a menace to our institutions and to our system of government. [Applause.]

We are likely to ignore the danger, because, forsooth, it comes before us apparently as a unanimous report of a committee. The opposition has no friends, no spokesmen except those that may on the spur of the moment get up here and attempt to point out the dangers. Vocational rehabilitation! Splendid proposition and a good thing. But because the thing is good, gentlemen, are we bound to pass every vicious bit of legislation that comes across the bar? Vocational rehabilitation is a good thing, but because a thing may be inherently good, is it the duty of the Federal Government to go into the various States and meddle with functions that belong to those States? That is the basis of my opposition to this proposed measure. I have no objection to vocational rehabilitation. It ought to be done. It is a proper governmental function, but it belongs to the States and not to the Federal Government.

We have no right to go any deeper into the Treasury of our Government on these paternalistic propositions. We have gone far enough. One million dollars a year for vocational rehabilitation! It seems small, but under the limitations of this act it provides that not a cent of that may be used for buildings or repairs. It is simply the opening wedge to justify appeals to Congress later on for buildings for vocational education, for plants, and incidental expenditures to carry it out. What are you doing? You are not doing anything novel. You are simply "carrying coals to Newcastle."

You are not doing anything that the States have not already done, or most of them. Whether I be heard or not, I want to sound the warning that by this measure you are going to uproot and damage all of the workmen's compensation acts in every State in the Union. It has always been held a fundamental principle that the industries involved should pay the damages to the person who is injured. That is the basis of the workmen's compensation acts. We hold industry responsible, and under the present laws, where they are in force, industries are expected to pay for rehabilitation. That is an element of damage which is usually and properly considered. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] undertook to answer the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] that the fact that the Federal Government was undertaking Federal rehabilitation might be urged and considered in the courts in mitigation of damages. The gentleman from Alabama thinks there is no danger, but I want to warn him that there is danger. For legal propositions commonly grow into our law out of every new condition. After you once get your Federal vocational rehabilitation system in operation it will not be long before the courts will take judicial notice of the fact that the Government is providing for vocational rehabilitation, and then what will happen to your workmen's compensation laws? The burden will be then shifted from the industry at fault to the Nation at large. Therefore I say that this legislation is simply an entering wedge destined to uproot and destroy the workmen's compensation acts of our various States.

It is an assault upon the principle that States should attend to their own concerns. The lame, the halt, the blind are all worthy of our consideration, but in the past communities have been in the habit of looking after them. There is no reason shown why they should not continue. It is not right to expect the great Federal Government to undertake or assume that duty and responsibility. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN], who claims that this is a State matter and ought not to be entered upon by the Federal Government, simply to remind him that the Smith-Hughes Act, of which this will be a part—while it is not an amendment it operates in a degree as an amendment to that act, to be administered by the same board—was passed through this House with scarcely any opposition at all, and that every State in the Union has taken advantage of it, and no State with greater enthusiasm than the State of New York. I want to also state to my friend that the Legislature of the State of New York this session anticipated this measure by passing a provision to put the State in a position to accept this cooperation, without a single dissenting voice, either in the senate or house—Democrat, Socialist, or Republican. There was not a single vote against it. The State of Massachusetts has already made provision for the acceptance of it, and six other States have done the same thing. If it is unconstitutional, that fact would have been discovered long ago, because we have been doing this sort of work. If it is wrong in that the Federal Government ought not to do it, then we have been wrong in the land-grant colleges and in the extension of stimuli on educational matters in the Smith-Lever Act and in the Smith-Hughes Act and also in this act.

And I want also to say to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who has been opposed to this legislation——

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me two minutes in which to reply to him?

Mr. FESS. Debate has been fixed. Mr. Speaker, I would not have any great opposition to the amendment that is proposed if it were not for the fact that I believe opposition to the bill at this time is for the purposes of delay. When this Senate amendment came over from the Senate I asked unanimous consent that the bill be sent to conference. That is a very common request; but a very unusual thing happened: It was denied, even though the conference was asked by the Senate. The author of the denial to that request offered this amendment, and, fine though he is, as much as I love him, I know that the purpose of the amendment is to delay and to defeat this legislation at this session. So far as I am concerned, we do not propose to have it defeated. I call for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, all debate has expired.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent of the House debate was limited, and that time has now expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 33, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer to amend, on page 9, line 20, by inserting after the word "hereby" the words "authorized to be," and on page 10, line 10, after the word "hereby," insert the same words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GOOD: Page 9, line 20, after the word "hereby," insert the words "authorized to be," and on page 10, line 10, after the word "hereby," insert the words "authorized to be."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I have offered changes the bill from a direct appropriation for four years to an authorization for an appropriation for four years. The amendment which I have offered will leave the language in that respect in the same form as it was when the bill passed the House. It authorizes the exact appropriation that was made in the bill that was passed by the Senate. In support of that amendment I want to offer a few observations.

Everyone knows that revenue measures and appropriation bills originate in the House of Representatives. With matters in relation to Foreign Affairs, the making of treaties and things of that kind, we have nothing to do. Their ratification is solely with the Senate. We pay no attention to that sort of thing. The Senate attends to that, and in turn leaves matters of appropriation in a large measure with the House. I want to show you what the Senate has been doing in the way of putting permanent appropriations on the statute books of the United States, and we have been agreeing to it. This year the total estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, as found in the Book of Estimates, amounted to $4,865,000,000. How much of that do you think was permanent appropriation, the appropriation over which we exercise no control at all? If you will turn to the Book of Estimates, commencing on page 989, and continue for 16 pages to page 1005, you will find the total of permanent appropriations over which this Congress exercises little or no control amounts to $1,425,000,000. Those things have largely been put on by Senate amendments, and that is what we are doing here to-day. By a Senate amendment we are seeking to appropriate money, not for this year, not for next year alone. We are appropriating $750,000 for next year, a million dollars for the next year, a million dollars for the next year, and a million dollars for the next year, when the House simply carried the authorization for an appropriation.

Why, take this very subject. If you will turn to page 993 of the Book of Estimates you will find what we have put on in permanent legislation for the Vocational Board, and no committee of Congress or Congress itself exercises any control over it. We had already on the statute books the following for the board: Cooperative vocational education in agriculture, a permanent appropriation of $1,268,000; cooperative education in trades and industries, permanent appropriation of $1,278,000; cooperative education of teachers, $1,090,000; salaries and expenses of the Board for Vocational Education, $200,000; and a committee of the Congress has been busy for at least a month or six weeks, if the dope that comes to my table is to be relied upon. Doing what? Investigating the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and now, when we ought to be holding tight on the purse strings in regard to appropriation for that organization, we say by this Senate amendment, "Turn them loose, give them a million dollars a year, and let them spend it at will." [Applause.]

Adopt the amendment which I have offered and then these gentlemen will have to come before the Congress, just like every department comes and ought to come to Congress, and when they make a showing under the law the Congress gives them every dollar that they can expend under the law. That is the duty of Congress. It has been the duty of appropriating committees to consider and report out appropriations when money is needed. It has been my duty at times to assist in reporting items on appropriation bills that I did not believe in at all, that I did not believe the money ought to be expended for, but when the Congress had spoken and said this work should be done I was willing to do the bidding of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair had already put the request for two minutes.

Mr. GOOD. When Congress has said to the Committee on Appropriations that so much money shall be expended and so much work shall be done, as far as that committee is concerned that settles it. We have sometimes cut deeply requests for appropriations because we believed that by wise administration a department could not expend more than the sum carried in the bill under the law, and then they have come back, just as the Federal board has come back, and they have had the money. They have had all the money they could expend, more than they should have expended, and I beseech you to put a stop to the plan of accepting Senate amendments that take from the House one of its great prerogatives, that of initiating appropriation bills. [Applause.] Let us stand here to put a curb on this extravagance and not appropriate in a legislative bill money for four years. If future Congresses want this work continued, any Committee on Appropriations would take the instructions of such Congress and would report out a bill to do the work. At the same time Congress can exercise a very wholesome influence and see to it that salaries are cut down to where they should be, and see to it that money is expended exactly as the law provides. Pass this bill as it is and you exercise no control. Let us investigate and pass upon all estimates. Of the $1,425,000,000 carried for the next year as permanent appropriations there has been no investigation at all. A permanent appropriation precludes investigation by Congress, spells extravagance, and that is what the Senate wants and just what the House proposes to agree to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for three minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have concluded. [Applause.]

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, replying to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, my very good friend, Mr. FESS, in which he pointed out the similarity in principle of this bill to the

Smith-Hughes bill and indicated that because we took a certain step then that we ought to follow it now, I would only say that "it is never too late to mend." It is certainly very charming and beautiful to hear him approve any measure which was passed during a period when the Democratic Party was in control of both Houses. I doubt whether he would laud that measure now except as an excuse for passing this particular measure before us. It would seem to me that if we committed an error in principle then, in all good conscience we ought to turn about now and undo it. As to what New York State has done I can only justify that by this statement of facts: It was natural for the Legislature of New York State to take cognizance of the final passage of this vocational rehabilitation bill by the Congress. Our legislature met in January. This bill was passed by the House prior to that time, and there was a clear intimation that Congress was about to open up the Treasury and allow all the States to line up and put in their hands. Of course, I would much rather have seen the Empire State stand back and put up its hands and say, "No; we will not touch it," but you can not blame any State legislature if it says, in effect, "Well, if the Federal Government is going to contribute 50 per cent for vocational rehabilitation, we will take our share of it." In my estimation, however, the Legislature of New York State, like a great many other legislatures, is unduly influenced by a lot of women who go up there under the color of working for some very worthy purpose and zealously advocate some new-fangled fad, some uplift proposition. They seem to be deeply solicitous about the halt, the lame, and the blind. They want the Government to open up the doors of the Treasury and spend money for the alleviation of human distress. All right. I do not oppose that, but I do insist it ought to be done under proper restraint and under proper limitation. While it may be all right for the State to do it, it does not necessarily follow that it is right for the Federal Government to do it. We ought not to extend our jurisdiction so as to meddle with the functions of the various communities. If we go this far, I think perhaps you will probably have in due course a bill presented here and urged by the unanimous report of a committee to establish Federal poorhouses. There ought to be some end to this legislation. There ought to be some limit put upon the efforts of men to get at the Federal Treasury and build up an elaborate organization with its employees, professors, and its committees to visit other States, preparation of reports, and printing, and all that. And then the idea of enlarging the scope of the Vocational Board, a board that is now under fire. Has it demonstrated that it has functioned so well, to such a very startling degree, that it is justifiable for us to-day to extend its functions and give it further authority? Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I venture to suggest that this bureau has enough to do to attend to the vocational rehabilitation of the soldiers. Let it stick to that and not ask for further jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I shall, of course, support the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Frankly, however, I am against the bill. I think if there ever was a time in the history of the country when we ought to refrain from initiating new legislation calling for appropriations, the time has now arrived. [Applause.] There never was a more serious situation than that now confronting the country, and I respectfully submit that the bill ought to be laid aside; that it ought not to be forced to passage now.

We acted on this bill in the House on the 17th of October. I did not believe that there was any crying demand for it then, and so far as I know there has not been any evidence of a demand for it since. I can say as one Representative that I have not had any indication from my district or from the State of Virginia of any interest being manifested in this legislation. But, Mr. Speaker, even if there were such a demand, this is no time to respond to it.

Gentlemen argue that because the House approved the bill last October it should again approve it. But the conditions have materially changed since that date. Since then we have not been able to remit a single dollar of taxes, not one single cent. We talk about reduction of appropriations. The people are not particularly interested in reducing appropriations unless you reduce the taxes. To continue taxes, even though there is a reduction at the same time of appropriations, is equivalent, so far as the taxpayers are concerned, to providing the proverbial Spanish feast, a great display of table linen and silver, but with a very small supply of meat.

Since the House acted in October not only have we not been able to lighten the tax burdens, but outside of the field of taxation the people have been and are about to be subjected to heavy additional burdens. It has developed since that date that the people are called on for at least $1,000,000,000 more for the purchase of sugar this year than they spent last year. The Interstate Commerce Commission now is considering the transportation problem, with a certainty that the people in the near future are going to be subjected to increased freight rates which will amount to more than $1,000,000,000 per annum. In that situation ought we to think of embarking upon new legislation that is going to call for large appropriations now and increased appropriations in the future? That is a policy which ought to be checked now and here. It may prove a fatal policy. [Applause.] We ought to turn our faces against it.

I am not speaking as a party man. I discard, in respect to this matter and many other matters, party considerations as unworthy to be thought of at this time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Now, as we find ourselves in the midst of what amounts to a revolution—and some writer has said that the greatest revolutions are those unnoticed while in progress—as we stand in the midst of a revolution that involves political, social, economic, and even religious conditions, we should surely hesitate before adopting legislation of this or any similar character that will serve to make against reduction of taxation and economy in expenditures.

The people are clamoring for relief, and we will deny relief by passing bills of this character.

In the days gone by, in a time of agitation and controversy, one of the political battle cries was, "A union of the Whigs for the sake of the Union." We might well now take as our political battle cry, "A union of all patriotic and earnest Americans for the sake of the Republic." [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] has expressed in very forcible language the opposition to this bill which goes to the character of legislation. He has had the courage to come out and oppose the legislation because he does not believe in it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If my friend will allow me to interrupt him, I would prefer he should state that I take this position, namely, that I defer any final opinion relative to the merits of the legislation, and that I do not believe we should legislate in this direction or in any similar direction while the present great emergency exists. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I meant to offer a compliment to the gentleman from Virginia, believing that he was opposing the legislation because he did not like the character of it.

Now I find that it is mere expediency in his opposition, that it is not the time to do it, but later on we might take up such legislation. I regret that I must put that application upon his utterance.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] opposes the legislation upon the basis that it is a direct appropriation, but you will recall that the opposition from the gentleman from Iowa was even more vigorous when it was in the House before, when it was simply an authorization of the appropriation instead of a direct appropriation. The opposition of the gentleman from Iowa is to this sort of legislation now and placed upon the basis that it is a direct appropriation.

Gentlemen of the House, I believe in this character of legislation [applause], and I think that this is no time, when the war has brought to us the problem that we have been solving and when this rehabilitation work has swept the world and our country is in the advance guard of that sort of work, to oppose it. We promised when that legislation came on that in due time we would extend this remedial, rebuilding, functional rehabilitation to the cripple in industry, so that he might not be a charitable subject, begging on the streets, but that he might be a self-supporting individual who can produce instead of beg. And I want to say that the time is here now for us to leave it without ambiguity, whether we are in favor of this sort of legislation or not. The amendment that I ask this House to vote down is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], which is not in antagonism to the appropriation, but in antagonism to the legislation.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. And every friend of this measure ought to realize what the purpose back of the vote is.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. FESS. I am fair.

Mr. GOOD. The amendment I have offered will leave the bill just as the gentleman left it, just as the House left it when it passed before, and it does not change the bill in any other particular.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman will understand that if it had been sent to conference we would have been able to bring it back here as the gentleman wanted it, but we were denied the right to send it to conference, and this is the only way to prevent this delay, which is a part of the program in reference to this legislation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman spoke of a promise that we would take care of the crippled in industry.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. By whom was that promise made?

Mr. FESS. That promise was made by the two committees of the Senate and House at the hearings on the bill.

Mr. WALSH. What authority had they to bind a future Congress?

Mr. FESS. Oh, the gentleman is tweedledee and tweedledum. They had no authority further than they can embody the authority in the vote of this House.

Mr. WALSH. Then that promise is the excuse and not the reason for this legislation?

Mr. FESS. Oh, no; excuse or reason may have a difference in the gentleman's mind, but I see no particular difference.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the Senate amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. WALSH. I make a preferential motion, Mr. Speaker. I move that this bill be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves the previous question, and the gentleman from Massachusetts makes the preferential motion that the bill lie upon the table. That motion comes first. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to lay the bill on the table.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that he was in doubt.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the motion will rise.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point that there is no quorum present. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-seven Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to lay the bill on the table will, when their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 106, nays 209, not voting 112, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] for the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. May we have the amendment reported?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GOOD: Page 9, line 20, after the word "hereby," insert the words "authorized to be." Page 10, line 10, after the word "hereby," insert the words "authorized to be."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, may we have the language read as it would be if amended?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the language.

The Clerk read as follows:

So that as amended it will read:
"That in order to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or in any legitimate occupation and their return to civil employment there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act."
Page 10, line 10: "And there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the following sums."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 98, noes 93.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 171, not voting 112, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 102, noes 76.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed joint resolution of the following title:

On May 25, 1920:

H. J. Res. 354. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to Paul E. Slocumb Post, No. 85, Grand Army of the Republic, Bloomington, Ind., necessary tents and cots for use at the State encampment to be held at said city May 25, 26, and 27, 1920.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 11960, making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 10, and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, and 14, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$480,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$900,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"For the purchase of an embassy building and grounds at Santiago, Chile, and for making necessary minor repairs and alterations in the building to put it into proper condition, $130,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, is hereby made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for the objects and purposes designated by said act of appropriation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"FEES FOR PASSPORTS AND VISÉS.

"SECTION 1. From and after the 1st day of July, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application for a passport and $9 for each passport issued to a citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the right of the Secretary of State by regulation to authorize the retention by State officials of the fee of $1 for executing an application for a passport: And provided further, That no fee shall be collected for passports issued to officers or employees of the United States proceeding abroad in the discharge of their official duties, or to members of their immediate families, or to seamen, or to widows, children, parents, brothers, and sisters of American soldiers, sailors, or marines, buried abroad whose journey is undertaken for the purpose and with the intent of visiting the graves of such soldiers, sailors, or marines, which facts shall be made a part of the application for the passport.

"SEC. 2. From and after the 1st day of July, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application of an alien for a visé and $9 for each visé of the passport of an alien: Provided, That no fee shall be collected from any officer of any foreign Government or members of his immediate family, its armed forces, or of any State, district, or municipality thereof, traveling to or through the United States, or of any soldiers coming within the terms of the public resolution approved October 19, 1918 (40 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1014).

"SEC. 3. The validity of a passport or visé shall be limited to two years, unless the Secretary of State shall by regulation limit the validity of such passport or visé to a shorter period.

"SEC. 4. Whenever the appropriate officer within the United States of any foreign country refuses to visé a passport issued by the United States, the Department of State is hereby authorized upon request in writing and the return of the unused passport within six months from the date of issue to refund to the person to whom the passport was issued the fees which have been paid to Federal officials, and the money for that purpose is hereby appropriated and directed to be paid upon the order of the Secretary of State.

"SEC. 5. Section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad" (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1228), authorizing the Secretary of State to issue passports to certain persons not citizens of the United States is hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreement of the House to the amendments of the Senate on H. R. 11960, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference as to each of the said amendments:

The Senate recedes from its amendments Nos. 4, 10, and 13.

Amendment No. 4, appropriating funds for emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service, increases the appropriation from $400,000 to $500,000.

Amendment No. 10, providing for the expenses of the International High Commission, struck out the word "State" and inserted the words "the Treasury."

Amendment No. 13, under post allowances to consular and diplomatic officers, added a proviso limiting the expenditure of the appropriation.

Senate amendments Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, and 14 were agreed to by the managers on the part of the House.

Amendment No. 5 inserts a new paragraph appropriating $4,500 for the relief of Mrs. Winifred T. Magelssen.

Amendment No. 6 adds a new paragraph making the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, for the objects and purposes designated by said act of appropriation.

Amendment No. 7 inserts a new paragraph appropriating $9,000 for expenses in connection with the Pan-Pacific Union.

Amendments Nos. 8 and 9 changes the word "International" to "Inter-American."

Amendment No. 11 changes the appropriation for the International Joint Commission on Waterways Treaty, United States and Great Britain, from $25,000 to $40,000.

Amendment No. 12 struck out the last proviso limiting the expenditure of the appropriation.

Amendment No. 14 changes the appropriation for contingent expenses for the United States consulates from $900,000 to $1,000,000.

Amendment No. 1 fixes the amount for clerks at embassies and legations at $480,000 instead of $688,000 as proposed by the Senate amendment.

Amendment No. 2 increases the appropriation for contingent expenses, foreign missions, to $900,000 instead of $1,000,000, as proposed by the Senate amendment.

Amendment No. 3 providing for the purchase of embassy building and grounds at Santiago, Chile, changes the language but leaves the appropriation of $130,000 the same.

Amendment No. 15 increases the fees for passports and visés to $10 and limits their validity to two years.

SIMPLIFICATION OF THE REVENUE ACT OF 1918.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14198, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and pending that motion I would like to see if we can not come to some agreement as to the time for general debate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order, and I make the point of order that the gentleman's motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it is not a bill to raise revenue. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa in what way does it raise revenue?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It establishes certain rules——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Establishing rules is not a bill for raising revenue. It has been repeatedly held that a bill from the Committee on Ways and Means in reference to procedure, or anything of that sort, fixing regulations for the collection of revenue, is not a bill raising revenue and is not privileged under the rule.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This bill would increase the revenue; no question about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A bill increasing revenue by establishing economies would not have the privilege of a bill raising revenue. Will the gentleman say how the bill will raise revenue?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Section 3, page 2, will make property conveyed by gift subject to a tax if the party to whom the gift is made sells it and realizes a profit on it. At present no tax will apply to it. That is one way the bill would raise revenue.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the rulings have been numerous that a bill dealing with the administration of the revenue law is not a bill raising revenue.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is not simply a matter of administration in that respect. It would enable more taxes to be collected where the tax does not now apply in the revenue law of 1918. I have referred to one way in which it would raise revenue in subdivision 3, page 2, which makes property conveyed by gift subject to a tax if sold and a profit is reaped over the cost to the original donee. This matter is highly technical, and if the gentleman's contention is correct, you would have to make over the whole revenue law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How much time do gentlemen on that side want?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I have some demands for time, and we would like to have an hour and a quarter on this side.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We could not possibly get through with the bill to-day with that time. The utmost I should want to agree to would be half an hour on a side, and I will try and get along with considerably less on this side.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Does the gentleman intend to finish the bill to-day?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is highly important that this bill should be passed soon, and I hope gentlemen on the other side will defer their speeches until later. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] and the other half by myself.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I call attention to the fact that to-morrow is Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And I will make the same request for general debate on the next bill.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. The next bill may not be privileged.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request, that there be one hour of general debate, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] to have three-quarters of an hour and I be allowed 15 minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. All right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent, pending his motion, that general debate be limited to one hour, three-quarters to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] and one-quarter of an hour by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. REAVIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14198) to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON. I think it had better be read.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It will all be read for amendment, and I will explain sections as we go along.

Mr. CANNON. I never heard of the bill before, and I do not believe there are 10 men in the House outside of the committee that know anything about it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I object. I think we ought to find out what it is.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

BASIS FOR DETERMINING GAIN OR LOSS.

That subdivision (a) of section 202 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) That for the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived or loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, the basis shall be—

"(1) In the case of property acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property, as of that date;

"(2) In the case of property acquired (except by gift, bequest, devise, or descent) on or after that date, the cost thereof; or the inventory value, if the inventory is made in accordance with section 203;

"(3) In the case of property acquired by gift since February 28, 1913, the same basis that it would have in the hands of the donor or the last preceding owner, by whom it was not acquired by gift;

"(4) In the case of the sale or exchange of property acquired by gift, the entire amount received therefor shall be included in the gross income of the donee, unless the donee submits with his return evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the basis to the last preceding owner who acquired the property other than by gift; and

"(5) In the case of property acquired by bequest, devise, or descent, the fair market price or value of such property on the date of acquisition."

SEC. 2. That section 202 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subdivision to read as follows:

"(c) In the case of stock dividends paid after February 28, 1913, the cost to the taxpayer of each share of old and new stock shall be the cost of the old shares of stock (or the market price or value thereof as of Mar. 1, 1913, if acquired prior thereto) divided by the total number of old and new shares of stock: Provided, That in cases in which the old and new shares of stock differ materially in character or preference, the cost of the old shares of stock (or the market price or value thereof as of Mar. 1, 1913, if acquired prior thereto) shall be apportioned between the old and new shares of stock as may be in proportion to the respective values of each at the time the new shares of stock were acquired."

SEC. 3. That Title II of such act is amended by adding at the end of part I thereof the following new section:

EXTRAORDINARY NET INCOME.

"SEC. 207. (a) That compensation received in any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1919, for personal service rendered by the taxpayer during a period of more than three years, and gain derived in any such year from the sale of capital assets acquired more than three years prior to the date of such sale, shall be deemed to be extraordinary income; and such income, less losses of the same class or description and the expenses or other deductions properly chargeable thereto, shall be deemed to be extarordinary net income.

"(b) The term 'capital assets' as used in this section includes (but is not limited to) property held by the taxpayer for consumption or use; but does not include any property, whether real, personal, or mixed, held by a dealer for sale or included in the inventory of the taxpayer taken at the close of the preceding taxable year. The terms 'compensation received' and 'gain derived' mean compensation or gain accrued in the case of taxpayers who make returns upon the so-called accrual basis; but the provisions of this section shall not apply in the case of sales upon the installment plan when the income or gain is accounted for in installments as the payments are received.

"(c) If the extraordinary income of a taxpayer amounts to more than 20 per cent of his entire gross income for the taxable year, the extraordinary net income for such year may at his option be apportioned ratably to the years or parts thereof during which such service was rendered or such assets held (or to the years or parts thereof between February 28, 1913, and the date of sale, if such assets were acquired prior to March 1, 1913); and the amount thus ratably apportioned to any year shall be added to the other income of the taxpayer for such year and the tax redetermined upon the corrected amount at the rates applicable to such year, notwithstanding the provisions of section 206 or any other provision of this act. A return or returns of such extraordinary income shall be made at the time prescribed in subdivision (a) of section 227 in such manner and with such information as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe; and if the additional taxes found upon such redetermination to be due for prior years are paid in the same proportionate amounts and at the same installment dates fixed for the payment of taxes due upon income for the year in which such extraordinary income was received, no penalty or interest shall be added with respect to the time which has elapsed between such prior years and the date or dates of payment."

ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION OF TAXES.

SEC. 4. That subdivision (d) of section 250 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The amount of tax due under any return made under this or prior acts shall be determined and assessed by the commissioner within five years after the return was made, except (1) in the case of false or fraudulent returns with intent to evade the tax, or (2) with the consent of both the commissioner and the taxpayer, or (3) as otherwise provided in section 207, or in paragraph (9) of subdivision (a) of section 214, or in paragraph (8) of section 234, or (4) in the final settlement of losses and other deductions tentatively allowed by the commissioner pending a determination of the exact amount deductible; and no suit or proceeding for the collection of any tax shall be begun after the expiration of five years after the date when the return was made. In the case of such false or fraudulent returns, the amount of the tax due may be determined at any time after the return is filed, and the tax may be collected at any time after it becomes due."

SEC. 5. That Title XIII of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof two new sections to read as follows:

"SEC. 1321. That if after a determination and assessment in any case the taxpayer has without protest paid in whole any tax or penalty, or accepted any abatement, credit, or refund based on such determination and assessment, and an agreement is made in writing between the taxpayer and the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, that such determination and assessment shall be final and conclusive, then (except upon a showing of fraud or malfeasance or misrepresentation of fact materially affecting the determination or assessment thus made) (1) the case shall not be reopened or the determination and assessment modified by any officer, employee, or agent of the United States, and (2) no suit, action, or proceeding to annul, modify, or set aside such determination or assessment shall be entertained by any court of the United States.

"SEC. 1322. That in case a regulation or Treasury decision made by the commissioner or the Secretary, or by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, is reversed by a subsequent regulation or Treasury decision, and such reversal is not immediately occasioned or required by an opinion of the Attorney General or a decision of a court of competent jurisdiction, such subsequent regulation or Treasury decision may, in the discretion of the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, be applied without retroactive effect."

LIBERTY BOND EXEMPTIONS.

SEC. 6. The various acts authorizing the issues of Liberty bonds are amended and supplemented as follows:

"(a) On and after January 1, 1920, 4 per cent and 4¼ per cent Liberty bonds shall be exempt from graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations, in repect to the interest on aggregate principal amounts thereof as follows:

"Until the expiration of two years after the date of the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government as fixed by proclamation of the President, on $125,000 aggregate principal amount; and for three years more on $50,000 aggregate principal amount.

"(b) The exemptions provided in subdivision (a) shall be in addition to the exemptions provided in section 7 of the second Liberty bond act, and in addition to the exemption provided in subdivision (3) of section 1 of the supplement to the second Liberty bond act in respect to bonds issued upon conversion of 3½ per cent bonds, but shall be in lieu of the exemptions provided and free from the conditions and limitations imposed in subdivisions (1) and (2) of section 1 of the supplement to second Liberty bond act and in section 2 of the Victory Liberty loan act."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have so little time that I shall ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] to use his time before I consume mine.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD].

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of Civil War pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, the annual supply bills have all passed the House, and we are now considering insignificant, immaterial measures, for a decree has gone forth from the Republican leaders that nothing else shall be done at this session. According to the press and cloakroom gossip, we are to adjourn early in June. I am making these remarks to call the attention of those charged with responsibility for legislation to a bill I introduced on October 24, 1919—H. R. 10155—entitled—

A bill to deport from the United States certain aliens who withdrew their declaration of intention to become citizens to evade military service, and to suspend all immigration to the United States until January 1, 1930.

I am profoundly convinced that the welfare and best interests of the United States demand that this or some other bill of the same tenor and effect be enacted into law before we adjourn. In my judgment, the immigration question is one of the most important problems that confront us to-day, and upon its correct solution largely depends the perpetuity of our sacred institutions and our American form of government. In our early history some of the older States opposed admitting our western Territories into the sisterhood of States, fearing these new States would exercise undue influence in shaping national affairs. Mr. Chairman, how can those States rest complacent to-day and see aliens admitted to our shores by the millions? Each year the immigrants admitted into the United States are more than the combined population of three of four of our western Commonwealths. To-day a majority of the population of some of our largest States are of alien origin. New York, Illinois, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Minnesota, Michigan, Montana, Utah, and the Dakotas are largely populated by people of foreign birth, more than 50 per cent of the inhabitants being immigrants. The same is true of a number of our large cities. The last official statistics on population is from the census of 1910. According to it New York had a population of 4,766,888, only 19.3 per cent being native-born whites; Chicago had 2,185,284, only 20 per cent of them native born; Pittsburgh had 533,905, with 33 per cent natives; Milwaukee had 373,867, with 21.1 per cent natives; Boston had 670,585, with 23 per cent natives; and Fall River had 119,295, with only 13.3 per cent natives. While these cities have greatly increased in population during the last 10 years, I am confident the percentage of native and alien population is approximately the same.

From 1904 to 1914 nearly 10,000,000 immigrants came to the United States, averaging approximately 1,000,000 a year. Immigration from 1914 until now has been limited, because during the war passenger service on the seas was entirely suspended, and is now more or less limited, but it is rapidly becoming normal. Before the war many manufacturers, grown rich by special privileges granted them under protective-tariff laws, while advocating a high protective tariff on the merchandise they manufactured for sale, urged free trade in labor, and were large employers of immigrant cheap labor. In the years gone by these manufacturers and certain steamship companies had agents abroad to work up immigrants to the United States, both being inspired by selfish motives. The manufacturer desired cheap labor, so as to increase his own profits; the steamship companies desired to make money by collecting passage fare from the immigrants.

History usually repeats itself, so we have every reason to fear these two powerful agencies will act in the future just as they have in the past, doing all in their power to induce immigration from Europe. Conditions to-day in the Old World are uncertain and unsatisfactory. Families have been separated and scattered, homes, business houses, and farms destroyed, taxes are very burdensome and high, governments uncertain, lawlessness and anarchy prevalent everywhere. The people are not anchored by the ties that formerly held them, so little urging will be necessary to induce them to come to America. In last Sunday's New York Times, May 23, 1920, appeared an article under large headlines:

Immigration rush overtaxes force. Nearly 9,000 aliens landed on Ellis Island in week.

In the article the superintendent of the immigration station, Mr. P. A. Baker, is quoted as follows:

Immigrants are coming to this country as fast as the limited transportation facilities can bring them. There is every evidence that even with postwar passport restrictions, there would be the greatest rush of people to this country ever known in the history of immigration if there were only ships to bring them.

This is only one of the many immigration ports in the United States. No doubt similar conditions obtain at all our other ports. I think we already have sufficient aliens within our borders, and that it is time for the Government to suspend all further immigration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In connection with the gentleman's interesting and timely speech, let me call attention to the fact that the United States has been able to deport during the past 10 years ended April 30, 1910, only 27,350 aliens for all causes. In 10 years 8,800 have gone back as likely to become public charges, 1,100 as diseased, 4,200 as insane, 4,200 as immoral, 1,200 as criminals, and only about 300 as anarchist and dangerous, and 241 of these went on the Buford last December.

Mr. CRISP. I thank the chairman of the Immigration Committee. I assume that his figures are the latest obtainable.

In many parts of our country, if you will look around you, reading business signs and names and listening to the language of the street, you would think you were in some foreign land instead of America. When Columbus discovered America it was inhabited by Indians. European immigration changed the whole civilization of America, and the Americans of to-day are totally different from the original American—the Indian. English immigration to Australia has changed the civilization of that country, and it is to-day English in thought. European immigration to India is rapidly changing the national spirit and customs of that Empire. Japanese immigration has changed laws and life in China and Korea, and history teaches that where peoples of different nationalities, religions, customs, and civilization emigrate in large numbers to any land there is always a bitter conflict between the different races; if the immigrants become greatly superior in numbers in a republican form of government, inevitably the political ideas, customs, manner of living, and idiosyncrasies of the immigrants become dominant, control legislation, and ultimately shape the destiny of the nation. According to testimony adduced before the Immigration Committee of the House, we have to-day 11,000,000 aliens in the United States, only 2,000,000 of whom have filed their declaration of intention to become citizens. In my opinion it is suicidal to the best interest of America to continue to permit further immigration until the millions of aliens now within our borders are Americanized by being required to learn to read, write, and speak our language, to familiarize themselves with American ideas and our American form of government, and to become American citizens.

In most of our industrial centers we have Little Bohemia, Little Italy, Little Russia, Little Germany, Little Poland, Chinatown, and so forth, which centers are the breeding grounds for un-American thought and deeds, and it is in such places that Emma Goldmans, Alexander Berkmans, Haywoods, and the Fosters find their greatest number of converts and followers. Our country is filled with industrial unrest and discontent, strikes are common, anarchists, reds, communists, and I. W. W. agitators walk boldly and defiantly through our land, preaching their nefarious doctrine, urging that our Government be overthrown and a Bolshevist government established. These despicable creatures have no weight or influence with the brave, industrious, patriotic, American workingman, but they unduly sway the ignorant immigrants. Statistics show that in the basic industries of the United States foreigners constitute over 50 per cent of the laborers, as will be seen by a perusal of tables given below, prepared by Mr. Box from the reports of the Immigration Industrial Commission:

	Foreigners.
Iron and steel	57. 7
Slaughtering and meat products	60. 7
Bituminous coal	61. 9
Woolen and worsted manufacturing	61
Cotton goods	67. 7
Clothing manufacturing	72. 2
Furniture manufacturing	59. 1
Leather, curing and finishing	67
Oil refining	66
Sugar refining	85

From April 6, 1917, to November, 1918, the heartbreaking period, when our brave boys were in Europe or on the high seas braving the dangers of the German submarine, risking their all for you, for me, and for their beloved country, every impulse of love for them and appreciation of their sacrifice and every patriotic emotion and instinct dictated that every liberty-loving person employed in industries at home essential to supplying our heroes with food, clothing, and munitions of war should exert themselves to the utmost to reach the maximum of production to insure their success against the Germans.

But, notwithstanding this solemn, sacred duty, according to the Department of Labor, during this critical period of our national life, there were 6,000 strikes, the average duration of which approximated 17 or 18 days, in the industries of the United States. In this connection I can not refrain from expressing my sincere admiration for the patriotic conduct and marvelous achievements of the farmers of our country during the progress of the World War. [Applause.] The slogan "Food will win the war" became familiar to all. Notwithstanding tens of thousands of farmers and their sons and hired helpers were inducted into our military service, these splendid citizens, by working from daylight to dark, in sunshine and in rain, in the cold of winter and heat of summer, produced more crops than ever before in all our history. They fed and clothed our Army and the armies of our allies as well as the civil population of the Allies, and never for one moment did they consider striking. [Applause.]

The 6,000 strikes referred to were largely brought about by the influence of American walking delegates and foreign-labor agitators upon alien immigrants, who constitute the greater part of the employees in our essential industries. Such conditions will continue to exist as long as we permit immigrants from southern Europe and other objectionable parts of the world to enter the United States by the millions, with no intention of becoming American citizens, but who come solely to be employed in our industrial life, because they can get higher wages than they earn in their native country. In my judgment, the greatest service this Congress can render our country is to suspend all immigration for a period of 10 years or longer; to deport these red anarchistic labor agitators, and all other undesirable aliens, and to require all aliens within the United States within a specified time to learn to read, write, and speak the English language, to become Americanized and become citizens of the United States and real Americans in fact and not in name only. [Applause.]

I have no sympathy or patience with hyphenated Americans, whether they call themselves English-Americans, Hungarian-Americans, Scotch-Americans, French-Americans, Italian-Americans, Russian-Americans, Polish-Americans, or German-Americans. [Applause.] To me there is but one kind of American worthy of the name, and it is he who tolerates no prefix to "American"; one whose every thought, heartbeat, and emotion places America first before all other nations on earth; one who, in his heart of hearts, acknowledges allegiance to no country but America, and no flag but the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.] All aliens who are not willing and anxious to measure up to this standard should be deported from our land. [Applause.]

The bill I have introduced is intended to accomplish this purpose. Mr. Speaker, I have no pride of authorship in my bill, but I am profoundly interested in having legislation along the line suggested in it enacted into law. I earnestly appeal to you, my colleagues, to wake up to the grave situation that confronts us, and urge the Committee on Immigration to report out some bill restricting immigration, and when so reported to insist that the Republican steering committee, who directs the policy of this House, have the bill considered and enacted into law before Congress adjourns. I am alarmed for our country. One of the vital questions of the hour is whether our pure Americanism shall be preserved unpolluted to continue to enlighten, encourage, develop, and bless mankind, or whether it is to be polluted and destroyed; whether the people, culture, and spirit of our Nation shall be oriental, European, or continue American in character. The answer to this most important question largely depends upon what immigration laws we enact. Our forbears, with the great price of untold hardships and sacrifices, and, yea, with sacred, precious blood, established this, our ideal, Government in the wilderness of the New World for themselves and their posterity. We owe it to them, to our children, and descendants, and to ourselves, to see that America remains American, and that our priceless heritage shall in no way be impaired; continued immigration threatens it. Shall we continue to slumber when the country and form of government we love is endangered? I pray you, sirs, that your answer will be "No." [Applause.]

Mr. EMERSON. Upon the duties of a Congressman and what we have done and are doing as a Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, the following letter explains itself:

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., May 22, 1920.

Hon. H. I. EMERSON,
Congressman, Twenty-second District of Ohio,
Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR MR. EMERSON: I desire to congratulate you upon the fact that in the next Congress you will be the second man on the Rivers and Harbors Committee, as this will place you on the conference committee and give you much prestige.

You have advanced rapidly on this committee, due largely to your hard work.

With kindest regards, I am,
Yours, sincerely,
C. A. KENNEDY,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. Chairman, the service rendered by a Member of Congress is oftentimes misunderstood by his friends and oftentimes misrepresented by his enemies.

Members are oftentimes asked these questions: What have you done? What bills have you had passed?

I find upon investigation that over 20,000 bills are introduced by Members each term of Congress, and of this number about 200 become laws, or about 1 per cent.

Of these 200 bills and resolutions that are passed about 190, or 95 per cent, bore the names of the chairman of the committee that reported the bill.

Members who have been the most efficient here and have served in this House for over 25 years tell me they have secured the passage of not over 5 or 10 bills which bore their names during all the time they have served here.

All Members get pension bills through, but these bills are all placed together in one bill and bear the name of the chairman of the committee who reports the legislation.

A Congressman's service can not be measured by the number of bills or resolutions that are passed which bear his name.

A Congressman renders his greatest service by his votes for or against important legislation that comes before Congress.

He renders a great service when he assists the ex-service men back home in getting their insurance straightened out and in other ways.

He renders a great service when he attends properly to his correspondence and looks up the matters he is asked to look up, such as passports, securing copies of bills, publications, and reports.

Seniority prevails in the House, and a Member's influence increases with his years of service, and finally reaches its climax when he becomes chairman of some important committee.

Members are criticized for missing roll calls, which is oftentimes very unjust. Members should not miss a roll call upon a very important measure unless they have some very good reason, but the ordinary no-quorum roll call is made oftentimes solely to filibuster and delay important legislation, and, besides, Members are called away because of sickness and death, and some of the most efficient Members here miss roll calls when they are in the Capitol because they are attending important committee meetings or are in conference with the officials of some department.

About one-third of the roll calls are unnecessary and uncalled for.

It takes at least a half of the day for a Member to answer his mail, and oftentimes all day.

I find that all Members of Congress are quite busy all the time, and are doing their best for their constituency as they see it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the rehabilitation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the requests of the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. SABATH and Mr. KING]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order for me to ask unanimous consent that every Member have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would submit the request.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, it would not be in order if objection was made.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HICKS. As a matter of fact is it in order at any time in committee for gentlemen to ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD on a subject other than that under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TILSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1223. An act for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower and for the relief of passengers on board said steamer;

S. 3763. An act regulating the disposition of lands formerly embraced in the grants to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and Coos Bay Wagon Road Co.;

S. 3461. An act to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii; and

S. 4332. An act to exchange the present Federal building and site at Gastonia, N. C., for a new site and building.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 179) authorizing use of Army transports by teams, individuals, and their equipment representing the United States in Olympic games and international competitions.

The message also announced that in accordance with House joint resolution No. 302 the Vice President had appointed as members of the United States Pilgrim Tercentenary Commission Mr. LODGE, Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts, Mr. HARDING, and Mr. UNDERWOOD.

SIMPLIFICATION OF THE REVENUE ACT OF 1918.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the majority party in control of Congress proposes to enter upon either the recess or the adjournment stage around June 1, presumably with the view of abandoning all further legislation until the regular session convenes in December next. The Republican caucus of the House of Representatives, which was held on May 17, 1919, just prior to the beginning of the extra session of Congress, adopted a legislative program in which they declared it to be their purpose to proceed in the consideration of a "constructive program of legislation," which, among many other important legislative items set out, included the following:

Reduction in domestic taxation; simplification of laws relating thereto; and immediate repeal of obnoxious consumption taxes.

This promise was also made to the people during the campaign of 1918. These and a number of other solemn pledges embraced in this pretended caucus program of legislation have so far been studiously ignored and deliberately broken. It would be worse than bad faith for the Republican Congress now to plead that it abandoned its plain duty and its unequivocal promise to simplify and make more equitable the war-tax system during the two sessions of Congress extending over the past 12 months through fear of presidential vetoes, because both the President and the Secretary of the Treasury have earnestly and repeatedly urged just such legislative action. If the Republican Congress were going to invoke this false plea in defense of its gross negligence, failure, or incapacity, such plea, if carried to its logical conclusion, means that the Republican House caucus, which convened on May 17, 1919, should have resolved that the President would veto any measure passed by the Republican Congress, and therefore no legislation, not even on a so-called peace resolution, could be considered until after March 4, 1921, under a new administration. The unvarnished truth is that the Republican leadership in this Congress early decided that instead of proceeding promptly to simplify and make more equitable the war-tax system, it would be better politics to allow the taxpayers to suffer and complain for one or two years and until after the presidential election, and that they might perchance visit their wrath upon the Democratic administration and overlook this duplicity and this deliberate failure of the Republican Congress to perform its plain duty to them. Again we thus see politics placed above duty and patriotism at the expense of all those taxpayers who are suffering from such inequities as changed conditions have created and as crept into the war-tax system incident to the necessary haste in which it was framed. Republican leaders have by this general policy been strenuously endeavoring to convert a nation of patriots into a nation of partisans. They have applied a political test to almost every legislative proposal.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the present and prospective state of our Federal taxation, and incidentally to offer some comment on our finances, economy in expenditures, and the present economic situation. In considering these problems we must bear in mind the new and, in many respects, wholly different conditions in our industrial, financial, and commercial affairs which have arisen as a result of the World War. The present artificial conditions of credit, money, trade, and prices but illustrate the truism that the problems of technical peace or peace during the reconstruction period are more difficult than those of war. The popular notion that a nation in arms can overnight be transformed into a nation at peace with peace or normal conditions has already been exploded. There still exists an enormous inflation of prices, credit, and currency extending throughout the world and embracing in similar degree both the nations which participated and those which did not participate in the war. We find just as high, and in most cases higher, prices in Spain, Scandinavia, Japan, the Orient, and nations farthest removed from the war as exist in this country to-day. The destruction of $40,000,000,000 of property, the loss of 9,000,000 men, and a total war cost of over $200,000,000,000 have undermined the very foundation of European industry and commerce and badly dislocated our own economic situation. During the more than four years of war the world consumed and destroyed far more than it produced and saved.

In many most important respects we are still dealing with war conditions, and to do so successfully requires exhibitions of patriotism, patience, and toleration, such as the American people offered in the most wonderful way during the fighting period of the war. The lesson taught by every important war of the past, which we are too prone to forget, has been that almost a complete dislocation of social, political, and economic affairs, calling for gradual, radical, and painful readjustment, occurs, with the inevitable result that a wave of social unrest always appears, including strikes, controversy, discontent, wholesale complaints, and wholesale remedies, both real and imaginary. Some of these postwar evils can be remedied and some lessened by legislation, while others must run their logical course and disappear gradually. The greatest consolation which the American citizen can claim is the outstanding fact that the serious postwar difficulties, dangers, trials, and burdens which the entire world is at present undergoing, affect the people of this country far less injuriously in every important respect than the people of any other country participating in the war, and of almost every country not participating.

Both Government and individual financing have an important bearing on the restoration of normal economic conditions. During this trying period both the Government and the citizen should exercise sane and rigid economy in expenditure, and both should cooperate in the work of catching up with all kinds of essential production. Only increased production and economy will bring down prices and taxes.

Mr. Chairman, just now there is much timely discussion of the questions of Federal revenue, expenditures, and economy. The American people are rightfully demanding of Congress the wisest and soundest action in dealing with each of these problems. It has been correctly stated that during this presidential year the people will be interested in political parties more on account of what they will accomplish in the future than what they have achieved in the past. The past record of a political party on a given subject, however, affords the best possible assurance of what it will or will not do in the future. Since certain Republican leaders, by every kind of false and misleading statements, charges, and innuendos, have sought to minimize the record of the Democratic administration, as it relates to taxation, expenditures, and economy, I shall direct attention to a few high points in the records of the two leading parties on these three subjects, both as a means of showing the utter falsity of their present attacks and as an augury of what can reasonably be expected of each party if intrusted with power in November.

The Democratic Party administered the affairs of the General Government during the chief portion of the first 70 years of its history. Its cardinal policies were equitable taxation with the lowest levy that would meet the necessities of the Government, administered with economy and efficiency in all its departments. Under these wise and beneficent policies, which the opposition, even, had ceased to question for many years prior to the Civil War, the annual expenditures of the Federal Government only rose to $63,000,000 from 1789 to 1860. During this period a number of wars were fought and most of the great public domain west of the Mississippi was annexed. The average annual increase of expenditures covering more than one-half the Nation's history was less than $800,000. For the first full year after the Civil War the Republican Congress only reduced expenditures from the highest war peak a little over one-half. As late as 1868, more than three full years after the war, the level of ordinary expenditures still stood at $207,000,000, or more than three times the prewar level, excluding new pensions and interest on the new war debt, whereas the Treasury officials estimated that a fair normal annual increase from 1861 should have placed the expenditures for 1869 at $100,000,000. The Harrison administration increased the average of annual expenditures over the first Cleveland administration $95,000,000, while the second Cleveland administration conducted the Government at a cost of $6,559,000 less than the preceding Harrison administration.

The McKinley administration increased the average annual expenditures $45,000,000 over those of the last Cleveland administration, or a total for the four years of $180,000,000, excluding the entire expenses of the Spanish-American War. The last four years of the Roosevelt administration piled up expenditures of $1,696,000,000 in excess of the last four years of Cleveland's administration, or an average annual increase of $424,000,000. The Taft administration pursued the settled Republican peace and war policy of waste and extravagance. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Blaine, in his "Twenty Years in Congress," referring to previous Democratic administrations, says:

> During the long period of their domination they guarded the Treasury against every form of corruption and every attempt at extravagance.

Mr. Chairman, the Democratic Party is traditionally the party of economy in Federal expenditures; the Republican Party is traditionally the party of extravagance. I can emphasize the wide contrast between the honesty, efficiency, and economy of the Democratic administrations and the policy of waste, corruption, and indifference to the taxpayers by Republican administrations no more accurately than by offering two citations. The indictment of the first 16 years of Republican rule by Samuel J. Tilden in the Democratic national platform of 1876 reads as follows:

> The annals of this Republic show the disgrace and censure of a Vice President; a late Speaker of the House of Representatives marketing his rulings as a presiding officer; three Senators profiting secretly by their votes as lawmakers; five chairmen of the leading committees of the late House of Representatives exposed in jobbery; a late Secretary of the Treasury forcing balances in the public accounts; a late Attorney General misappropriating public funds; a Secretary of the Navy enriched or enriching friends by percentages levied off the profits of contractors with his department; an ambassador to England censured in a dishonorable speculation; the President's private secretary barely escaping conviction upon trial for guilty complicity in frauds upon the revenue; a Secretary of War impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors.

Verily, there were itching palms and nimble fingers in high official life in those days. On these awful charges the American electorate returned a verdict of "guilty without mitigating circumstances." I challenge comparison of this hideous record of almost one continuous official debauch with that of every important Democratic Federal official during the past seven years or any other period. Fourteen years later, when the Republican administration amazed the country with a billion-dollar Congress, and then, 20 years thereafter, a billion-dollar single session of Congress, the cool and contemptuous reply to the outraged taxpayers was "this is a billion-dollar country." I deny the right of any Republican whose party record is reeking with official waste, corruption, and debauchery to slander the present Democratic administration in similar terms by imputations and innuendos and without any concrete facts. I deny the right of any Republican whose party, during all the years it was in power, kept one hand in the Treasury and the other in the pockets of the people to upbraid a Democratic administration for either extravagance or unfair taxation. We find in almost every single Democratic platform of the past hundred years a strong plank pledging rigid economy, honest and fair taxation, and efficiency in the administration of Government affairs, while Republican platforms, with rare exceptions, have been completely silent on these vital policies. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Mr. Chairman, let us now carry this contrast further into the present Democratic administration, covering the past seven years and including the financing of the Nation's part in the World War. When this administration assumed control of the Government in 1913 it found a patchwork, panic-breeding currency system and a system of lopsided customhouse taxation, which consistently exploited the consumers and carefully protected the principal owners of the wealth of the country from nearly all taxation. The great Federal reserve law was speedily enacted. A broad and equitable system of income taxation was passed and put in permanent effect for the first time. This system was based on the principle of ability to pay instead of on the necessities of the taxpayer. The income tax and the Federal reserve act gave the United States a fiscal system everywhere conceded to be far superior to that of any other nation. Save for these two great engines of fiscal power the successful financing of the Great War which soon followed their enactment would have been utterly impossible. They came in the very nick of time and they only came with the advent of this Democratic administration. Prior to the war this administration exerted itself to effect plans for economies, which included a budget system. The normal expenditures for 1916, $1,072,000,000, were held down $5,000,000 below those for the previous year. Then we were drawn into the war.

It is a matter of extreme gratification that the ablest statesmen, financiers, and economists the world over agree that our Government financed its part of the war on lines far sounder and wiser than any other nation. When the United States entered the war on April 6, 1917, Congress proceeded with the work of formulating a suitable war-revenue policy. After a careful consideration of the fundamental principles of taxation, the consensus of opinion was that an equitable and comprehensive war tax should be laid principally upon wealth, luxury, pleasure, and seminecessities. With a basis of taxation thus established on lines broad and sound at the beginning of the war, the tax could be increased and extended as the war progressed and our revenue needs increased, and after business had adjusted itself to such new system of taxation, without disturbance of our economic conditions and without the necessity later of readjusting or patching up our tax structure. In adopting this view Congress was actuated by the three controlling considerations of adequate revenue, equity in the tax levy, and ability to pay. This general policy was written into the war-revenue act of 1917 and was further conspicuously reflected in the war-revenue act of 1918. The taxation embraced in these two measures—though all war taxation must be more or less inequitable—is recognized by economists and financiers everywhere as more nearly meeting all the requirements of general soundness as to its scope, nature, and extent than the war-revenue system of any other nation.

Congress was guided by the further principle of wise war finance, nowhere controverted, that during the war the Government should levy the largest amount of taxes that could be imposed without materially injuring business or seriously handicapping the normal course and development of any essential industry. Excluding normal expenditures, postal receipts, and the principal of the public debt, the war cost from April 6, 1917, to October 31, 1919, was $32,330,000,000, the total war and normal cost being $35,413,000,000. During this period the revenue receipts other than borrowed money aggregated $11,280,000,000, or 32 per cent of the total expenditures; or, if we deduct the amount of loans made during this period to foreign Governments in direct aid of the prosecution of the war, aggregating nearly $9,406,000,000, leaving the disbursements of the American Government $26,007,000,000, the proportion of the cost met out of revenues was over 43 per cent. I have not deducted several large special and temporary items expended for stock of War Finance Corporation, ships, railroads, Federal land banks, and so forth. This ratio of receipts from taxation to expenditures was 24.7 per cent in England, 15 per cent in France, 14.7 per cent in Italy, and less than 11 per cent in Germany. Ours was a much better showing than that of any other important Government. This wise policy of taxation kept down inflation of credit and prices, maintained our Government credit, and permitted a corresponding payment of war costs with the same inflated values in which they were contracted, and to that extent saved the taxpayers a double burden in the future. I append to my remarks tables giving itemized statement of receipts and disbursements from April 6, 1917, to April 30, 1920.

Mr. Chairman, it is easy, now that the war is won, to offer ignorant, captious, and political criticism of the amount of the war expenditures. The complete answer to such unpatriotic efforts to minimize our war achievements is to say that during a period of 19 months the combined financial and industrial efforts of the United States were feverishly exerted to throw its maximum resources, including man power and supplies, into the war. The inevitable result was that huge plans were perfected, thousands of contracts entered into, colossal programs framed, enormous military and industrial structures built up upon what the allied generals agreed was the true assumption that the war would continue far into the year 1919, and in contemplation of sending nearly 5,000,000 soldiers, with ample equipment and supplies, to France. On this unprecedentedly broad basis the United States was going full tilt when suddenly, and to the surprise of the allied military authorities, the armistice came about and the fighting part of the war ended. Carping political critics of expenditures now say in effect that the Government should have ignored this best human foresight and restricted its war activities to the narrow scope that would contemplate the sudden ending of the war in November, 1918.

Let us try to imagine how the political hyenas now offering this criticism would have yelped and thundered against the Government had it failed to prosecute the war on the great scale it did, and the war as a result had continued into the spring and summer of 1919, as it doubtless would have done, involving fabulous expenditures of men and money in excess of what were actually incurred. Speed, necessarily resulting in what would ordinarily be considered extravagant expenditures, is the one prime, paramount factor in the successful prosecution of any war. The expenditures, though ever so high, arising where a vigorously prosecuted war is brought to a quick conclusion, are far less in the aggregate than a lower level of expenditures involved in a slowly conducted and consequent long-drawn-out war, to say nothing of the increased loss of life. Compared with the English war debt, ours would be over $70,000,000,000, and still greater when compared with those of most other nations participating in the war.

While the entire world applauds the Nation's unparalleled war record of 19 months, only certain ignorant or hypocritical critics at home seek to dim the glory of our achievements. Some Republican leaders vociferously demand more than their party's share of credit for the prosecution of the war, and at the same time claim exemption from any share of responsibility or criticism.

Republican leaders strive to create the impression that the Treasury is in a distressful and serious condition. I agree that in normal times this would be true, but it is outrageously unfair and unjustifiable to apply this test now. The truth is that our Treasury condition is immeasurably better than that of any other important Government, and is as satisfactory as could possibly be expected in the circumstances. The deficit in current receipts and expenditures for the first nine months of this fiscal year was $214,000,000, and it will only be later increased to the extent of the much larger withdrawals under recent railroad appropriations than were expected. At the same time our floating debt, most all of which came over into this fiscal year in the form of outstanding certificates of indebtedness, will be reduced, counting certain reductions in the general fund in the transaction, near $600,000,000, and will on June 30 be considerably less than $3,155,000,000, which is the amount of the deficit produced by the current annual expenditures and the amount of floating war debt combined, as estimated in the last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. The entire amount of these outstanding certificates has been extended, so they will mature in the fiscal year 1921, except $716,630,000, which are covered by the income and profits taxes payable on June 15, 1920. The much-talked-of "deficit" arrived at by counting our floating war debt is thus practically provided for. Exclusive of public-debt transactions, the latest estimated receipts for this fiscal year ending June 30 next are $6,521,000,000, while the estimated expenditures are nearly $7,000,000,000. The extreme delay of Congress in returning the railroads, with the resulting new expenditure of $1,000,000,000, together with its failure to adopt any definite shipping policy, so the Treasury could derive receipts instead of suffer further expenditures from this source, afford the main reason for the failure of current receipts to balance current expenditures during this fiscal year. The chief portion of $5,000,000,000 has gone to the railroads and ships since the armistice.

Mr. Chairman, no other important Government has so nearly balanced current receipts and expenditures at this early stage after the war, notwithstanding each has added taxes to its war-tax system, while a Democratic Congress reduced our war taxes about $2,000,000,000. England suffered a deficit of $1,630,000,000 at the end of her recent fiscal year, without including her floating debt of more than $6,000,000,000, while France fell several billions behind, and Italy and other countries fared in like proportion. Even Japan expects to borrow $170,000,000 during her new fiscal year. Republican administrations suffered five annual deficits in the ordinary receipts and expenditures of the Government, ranging as high as $89,000,000, from 1897 to 1910; and it ill becomes a partisan Republican to pretend to censure the Democratic administration for failure to show a surplus instead of a practical balance at the end of only the first full fiscal year after the war.

With our present volume of taxation continued through next year and with rigid economy—far more rigid than the feeble and utterly ineffective sort which this Republican Congress has so far practiced—the Treasury should be able to reduce the amount of our floating debt considerably more than one-half by June 30, 1921. Instead of outlining a broad-gauged, constructive program of strict economy and legislating accordingly, the Republican majority in Congress, signally failing in this course, as the actual appropriations will later show, has engaged in mere haphazard methods, and to offer the appearance of real retrenchment to the country they have adopted the transparent and fraudulent device of proclaiming the amount of the reduction in the departmental estimates made by the House appropriation bills as the true standard of legislative economy. The only accurate standard consists in the reduction of the present below the past regular expenditures of similar character for similar purposes and under similar conditions, without impairing the efficiency of the public service. New items of expenditure not due to absolute emergency should be included in such computations. According to the present Republican fake rule of calculating savings, Democratic Congresses during the past seven years have saved $9,275,000,000, one "saving" alone amounting to $5,554,000,000 for the fiscal year 1918. Everybody knows that the estimates of the departments have always embraced higher figures than either the appropriations or the expenditures would later involve. Republican leaders have not only worked this system of false propaganda overtime, but as war expenditures have disappeared, as temporary war bureaus and divisions have automatically gone out of existence, and expenditures have correspondingly declined, they have attempted to capitalize these natural reductions by pretending that they were only achieved by so-called Republican economy. Another similar scheme is to reduce appropriations for next year lower than the necessary amount, with a view to making up the proper amounts in the succession of deficiency bills expected to follow the November election. In fact, many of these deficiencies are in part met through special bills bearing some other title which are dropped through the House on the various Calendar Wednesdays.

This Congress, in pursuit of the same subtle and false policy, is concealing several hundred million dollars of appropriations by merely authorizing departments to expend unexpended balances in the Treasury and given amounts on hand or later to accrue from their operations, without requiring the latter to be paid into the Treasury and appropriations then made in a business way. One item of over $200,000,000 is thus concealed in connection with the operation of the shipping organization. To add absurdity to false pretense, the endeavor is constantly made to convince the public that the deficit in current receipts and expenditures at the end of this fiscal year is near $3,000,000,000 instead of the small figures I have already set out. This pretended conclusion is reached by improperly including the total amount of the floating war debt as a current expenditure, which is strictly a war hang over. The only wonder is that these lightning political calculators did not include the entire funded debt. It would be almost as deceptive as the floating debt in this connection.

Mr. Chairman, the total annual expenditures should during the next two or three years be kept down around $3,500,000,000, but a Republican Congress will never do it, because a stream can not rise higher than its source. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This would include interest on the public debt and sinking fund requirements of $1,250,000,000. Insurance, compensation, pensions, and other aid to all ex-service men will probably reach an average level of $700,000,000 per annum for the period of the next 25 years. Unless the annual expenditures under the regular appropriations, not embracing any part of the items just recited, are held down far more rigorously than during the present session, they will be found to aggregate from $1,800,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 both during the next fiscal year and some years to follow. This amount is in striking contrast with the 1916 expenditure standard. Budget legislation has been so delayed that it will afford but slight aid in fixing the amount of the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

Mr. Chairman, the American people met the large war-tax levies with admirable spirit and patience, but many imagined that as soon as the fighting part of the war ended war conditions and war taxes would likewise end. They overlooked the dreaded and trying period of reconstruction which follows in the wake of every war, and also the considerable amount of expenditures arising directly from the war that would confront the Treasury for a year or two thereafter. We must not forget that war taxes are still utilized to meet war obligations. When paying taxes a citizen would also do well to stop and recall a few of the many inestimable benefits and advantages he derives from the Federal, State, and local governments in return. Police and peace officers protect the safety of the taxpayer, his family, and his property by day and by night; he and his family have the benefits of public highways, streets, and sidewalks, constructed and maintained by governmental agencies; efficient free schools beckon on every hand to the children of the taxpayer; courts of justice are open to the taxpayer at governmental expense for the redress of any injury, actual or threatened, against his person or property—these and manifold other privileges, rights, and liberties, priceless in their nature, are derived from taxes paid. Think how much smaller and fewer would be these wonderful benefits and blessings and how much greater the expense should organized society be dissolved and each individual, without cooperation with others, undertake to care for his own welfare.

We, nevertheless, hear many complaints against the existing war-tax system and a demand for a readjustment of the tax burdens. It is undoubtedly true, as was inevitable, that numerous hardships and injustices have resulted to certain taxpayers from a number of inequitable features in the present system in its application to existing postwar conditions. The taxpayer in his present situation, however, should realize two important facts: One is that much louder complaints against much more inequitable war-tax systems are being made by the taxpayers of the other nations participating in the war, and the other is that many, or most, of the injustices complained of could and should have been eliminated by Congress in extra session during the year 1919. The trouble is not so much in high taxation as in its present inequitable effects. Let me say, in the first place, that Congress exerted its fullest possible efforts to enact equitable war taxation. Senator PENROSE filed a report expressing the views of most of the minority on the revenue act of 1918, when it was reported to the Senate, and in that report he said:

> With respect to those provisions of the bill as amended by the committee, which it is estimated will produce $6,000,000,000 revenue for a full 12-months period, we are generally in accord. These provisions are the result of months of painstaking deliberation and are based upon as accurate and reliable expert information as it was possible to obtain through every agency, official and other. They reflect actual business, industrial, and economic conditions now believed to exist, taking into consideration the rapid transition during the year from the maximum war-needs production to the sudden cessation of hostilities and the arrest of war industry.

Both political parties in Congress were equally responsible for these war-tax statutes, because both shared alike in framing them; no substitute plans or methods were offered by the minority; both parties approved each measure as being the best that could be drafted amid war conditions, the House was equally divided politically, each bill was reported out of the House and Senate committees with practical unanimity, and the entire membership of each party, with scattering exceptions, voted for their final passage.

Mr. Chairman, had the Democratic Party retained control of Congress it would have proceeded during the year 1919 to simplify and in many ways readjust the existing tax system; to substitute more equitable items for harsher ones repealed, so as to afford relief in many cases and classes of cases where serious discrimination or hardship existed; to raise some rates and lower others; and at the same time safeguarding the present volume of revenue. Other nations have already taken just such action.

Any important war makes imperatively necessary three stages of revenue legislation: War taxes framed amidst abnormal conditions and calculated to raise the largest possible amount of revenue within the shortest possible time; a readjustment of the war taxes following the termination of the war with a view to simplification and to removing inequities discovered and better to adjust the tax burdens in the light of reconstruction or post-war conditions; and finally the working out and perfecting of a permanent revenue system applicable to normal conditions. Our Republican friends in control of Congress have purposely denied the American taxpayers the much-needed relief which this second stage most strongly calls for, although the fullest cooperation has been constantly tendered by the President and the Democratic membership of both Houses of Congress.

In his first message to the extra session on May 20, 1919, the President devoted nearly two pages to urgent recommendations of just such tax readjustments as I have outlined. In his message to the present session at its opening on December 2, 1919, he again devoted about two pages to the same subject in the most earnest language, prefacing his recommendations in the following words:

> I trust that the Congress will give its immediate consideration to the problem of future taxation. Simplification of the income and profits taxes has become an immediate necessity.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report of December, 1919, made strenuous recommendations to the same effect, in the course of which he said:

> I believe it to be the duty of the Congress to give its closest attention to the study of the incidence of taxation with a view to the revision of the revenue act on lines which will produce the necessary revenue with the minimum of inconvenience and injustice.

He earnestly plead the urgent necessity of revision of the revenue law by Congress. As late as March 17, 1920, the Secretary of the Treasury addressed a strong letter to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, outlining a plan to simplify the income and profits taxes, to simplify Liberty bond exemptions, and specifying a number of other harsh features of the present tax system and its administration, together with suggested remedies. The Secretary said in part:

> Public opinion has not yet awakened to the gravity of the consequences which are likely to follow a failure to simplify the tax laws at this legislative session.

He then stated that postponement now meant no tax relief until the autumn or winter of 1921, and then added, "I can not contemplate such delay without the gravest apprehension." He concludes his forcible and very earnest recommendation as follows:

I shall be glad upon request to submit draft of amendments embodying the suggestions here presented, and to place at your disposal for the work of tax revision all of the personnel and facilities of the Treasury Department.

Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House have introduced many remedial tax measures, and have during the entire past 12 months constantly urged on the Republican majority of the committee prompt and effective tax legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I charge that the action of this Republican Congress in deliberately postponing this character of remedial tax legislation for one and a half years, for purely political reasons, resulting as it must in untold injury to a vast number of taxpayers and many phases of business, is worse than criminal. When the public is later able to appraise the injuries and the wrongs inflicted upon the country by this and similar omissions of this Republican Congress in its political policy of denying a suffering people this and other needed legislation, thereby encouraging and aggravating discontent in order to capitalize it in November, its wrath and contempt will know no bounds. To add insult to injury, Republican leaders endeavor to cover up their pusillanimous record of failure by declaiming daily against various features of the present war-tax laws, just as though their party in control of Congress had been helpless to remedy them since last May. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], attempting still further to confuse the public, in a speech before the Republican State convention of Michigan on May 5, 1920, spoke with pretended alarm about the present large volume of imports, although he knew that our exports were increasing in greater proportion, and added that $700,000,000 of revenue could be derived from imports by an adequate protective tariff law. This gentleman either overlooked or ignored the important fact that a smaller quantity of manufactures ready for consumption, from which customs taxes are chiefly derived, are now being imported than came in under the Payne tariff law. With values doubled, and more than doubled, the total annual amount of these imports is less than $700,000,000. The overwhelming portion of present imports comprise crude materials for use in manufacture, foodstuffs, and manufactures for further use in manufacturing. The gentleman from Michigan will never be permitted, and will probably never even attempt, to levy any substantial amount of tariff taxes on these classes of articles should his party perchance control the next Congress. I think every person except the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] now knows this fact. The greatest amount of customs taxes the Republicans were able to levy under the Dingley and Payne tariff laws averaged less than $275,000,000 from 1897 to 1913. Toward the end of this period they were forced to turn to internal taxes to supplement this amount. No customs yield, unless noncompetitive articles are taxed, can well be made to greatly exceed $400,000,000. The most ignorant person now knows that any political party in charge of the Government hereafter must rely chiefly upon our internal revenue.

What will be our revenue and expenditure situation for the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1921? The Treasury estimates total receipts $5,620,350,000 and total expenditures $3,973,797,000.

It was most vital that Congress during 1919 should have commenced the work of tax readjustment and the gradual development of a permanent peace system framed on the lines of equity, ability to pay, and productiveness of revenue. This policy, which the Democratic Party, being in the minority, could not inaugurate, embraced the one big central plan of formulating such additions to and modifications of our income-tax laws as would subject the profits of individuals, partnerships, and corporations to the same relative proportion of taxes. This course would contemplate the elimination as early as possible of the "capital invested" provisions of the excess-profits tax and the merging into the income-tax law proper of such additional and substitute provisions as would adequately meet this phase of tax requirements, with a view to the development of the broadest and most comprehensive normal peace income-tax system possible to be devised. I shall presently discuss this proposal in some detail. Another policy of close secondary importance would require the concentration of the immense number of miscellaneous taxes, both large and small. It is wiser and better to levy a substantial tax on a limited number of articles than a small tax on nearly all articles. Collections are much easier and cheaper, the difficulties of administration are greatly reduced, and the taxpaying public is saved from an immense amount of trouble and vexation. We have entirely too many kinds of little taxes, and they can be reformed under the rule just stated without loss but with additions to the revenue, if necessary, and with great relief to the general public. Let me say to the captious critic of the present laws, however, that the jumbled, confused mass of Civil War tax laws is universally conceded to have been immeasurably harsher and more burdensome than those now in operation.

Mr. Chairman, in looking for more desirable substitute tax subjects, we readily see the entire feasibility of increasing the yield of the estate tax from $110,000,000 to $300,000,000 per annum. This would be a relatively smaller burden than that imposed in England and some other countries. The stamp taxes, while they remain, could just as easily be greatly augmented. They yielded $112,000,000 in England last year, and they constitute a substantial portion of the peace tax systems of most nations. The automobile taxes could, without undue burden, stand a considerable raise. The 3-cent postage tax additional yield of $70,000,000 could well be restored. The governments of several other nations impose 4 cents and more. Several billions of exempt property should be reached for income taxation. But it is useless in the circumstances to enlarge on these items at this time. The transportation or freight tax in the present abnormal situation materially adds to the cost of living and should at least temporarily be replaced by a less hurtful item of taxation. Some of the retail-sales taxes, which are unproductive and almost unworkable, loudly call for radical modifications or entire substitutes. It is to no purpose, however, to offer further suggestions relative to changes, repeals, and substitutions that are desirable in connection with the miscellaneous taxes, since no legislation is contemplated during the present session.

Let us now turn to the further consideration of the proposed relief measures relating to the income and excess-profits taxes and to the conflicting views now prevalent as to the incidence of the principal taxes. The war and excess profits provisions are based upon the view generally accepted in the 14 countries enacting such laws during the war, that it is entirely justifiable for the Government to take the chief portion of abnormal profits arising under war conditions for the payment of war expenditures. These laws can only be somewhat crude, temporary war measures. Any law applicable to abnormal profits and abnormal conditions such as these will necessarily be lacking in equity and scientific accuracy in many individual cases and in some classes of cases. The controlling feature of equity is that no citizen should be permitted to make and keep abnormal or colossal profits as a result of the war, but should be required to turn the excess over a good normal profit into the Treasury. To say the least, this plan offers the most feasible method of reaching this class of profits. The chief complaint against the law at present is based on two conflicting theories: One that it is severely overtaxing business and handicapping business development, including expansions and the making of future contracts, while the other theory is that these taxes are passed on by business to the consumers, thereby greatly increasing the high cost of living. The biggest factor in creating the present high prices is undoubtedly the scarcity of production; another major factor is the great inflation of credit and fiat paper money in Europe amounting to over $50,000,000,000, and of credit in this country, while taxes offer a third contributing cause. Following the Civil War there was a great clamor for the immediate repeal of war taxes in order to reduce prices, but a full try out of this theory at that time proved that prices were not affected by the removal of the taxes because of the influence of the stronger factor of scarcity of production. The result was that the producers received the same and even higher prices in many cases and transferred the amount of the taxes repealed from the Federal Treasury to their own pockets. We recall that prior to the time of high war taxes a greater rise in prices occurred than afterwards; that prices showed no decline when substantial reductions were made in war-profits taxes for the calendar year 1919 and thereafter; and that prices have risen and remained high in countries like France and even countries not participating in the war, which did not impose high taxes, or much less, at any rate, than England and the United States, countries which imposed high taxes. I repeat that the chief ground of complaint must be based on inequities rather than the amount of the present taxes. I think some taxes do retard production.

The corporate net income of the country remaining after paying all income, excess, and war profits taxes from 1916 to 1920, inclusive, is more than $34,000,000,000, or an average of $7,000,000,000 a year, while the corresponding net income remaining for the years 1912, 1913, and 1914 averaged but slightly over $4,000,000,000, and these latter were not bad business years. I fully appreciate and sympathize with the condition of those taxpayers suffering from inequities in the law, but I do feel justified in commending to those other taxpayers not so suffering, but complaining nevertheless, the example of financial heroism of similar classes of taxpayers in most other countries, where, with the minimum of complaint, they are grimly and resolutely facing and bearing heavier burdens as only patriots can. Those who remained at home and made immense profits during the war should even welcome the opportunity to turn over to the Treasury most or all of the excess above a good profit. The war was never intended as a money-making institution, and those who have profited abnormally from it will meet with deserved popular condemnation whenever they attempt to shirk their duty to pay taxes accordingly. This class of persons and corporations should be subjected to the maximum of the present war-tax laws and of general peace-tax laws during the coming years.

Mr. Chairman, the claim that existing excess-profits taxes afford an incentive to commit waste by unnecessary advertising and other nonessential expenditures was far more plausible during the calendar year 1918, when the Government was taking 80 per cent of war profits, and hence paid 80 cents on each dollar so wasted, than since that time, because the highest excess-profits tax rates are now 40 per cent, and more than 50 per cent of the corporations fall within the 20 per cent bracket. Our conditions of mixed real and artificial prosperity are conducive of much extravagance, which would occur in any event, but just now the fault of all extravagance is laid on the present taxes. To the other charge, that profits taxes are generally passed on to the consumers, the ablest economists the world over have always agreed that the graduated income tax is far less capable of being passed on than any other tax that has been devised. Under this system of graduation the greater the profits realized by the taxpayer the greater the amount he must turn over to the Treasury, with the result that he must soon tire of the process. The most damaging indictment thus far brought against business concerns which have been realizing abnormal profits is that they are willing to charge the public enough to pay all excess-profits taxes imposed and such additional and extortionate amounts as would enable them to realize substantially the same level of abnormal profits that they would have reached in the absence of such taxes. I can not well conceive of a more utter lack of patriotism than that which would prompt any business concern to practice extortion on so huge a scale. Every spark of business integrity and enlightened self-interest would require this class of taxpayers to be content to charge consumers a just and reasonable margin of profit, and any failure should meet with drastic penalties.

Let me make brief reference to some of the many concrete recommendations of the Treasury suggesting tax modifications: Amendment authorizing the Treasury with the consent of the taxpayer to make final settlements of tax assessments and claims in order that the taxpayer may know that he is through; an amendment providing that when Treasury decisions are reversed the new decision or regulation shall not be retroactive; an amendment limiting suits, assessments, and for the collection of taxes to five years after the date return was due; an amendment simplifying Liberty bond exemptions so that owners would have no difficulty in making tax returns; an amendment providing for the apportionment of taxes on profits derived from the sale of property over the period of years it was held, and a like apportionment of compensation for personal service under contracts extending over a period of years; a new law to tax personal service corporations in lieu of the provisions recently declared invalid by the Supreme Court, so as to prevent several thousands of these corporations from remaining tax free for two or three years, involving several million dollars loss to the Treasury; to readjust the higher individual surtaxes on incomes, up or down, with a view to securing the maximum of taxes from this highest category of income; the enactment of suitable provisions to deal with the stock dividend situation as the recent Supreme Court decision left it, so as to save the Treasury tens of millions of dollars; a new enactment requiring the donee in case of all gifts to pay income tax on the difference between the price at which he sells the property and the cost to the donor, thereby literally saving the Treasury hundreds of millions of dollars; a new law simplifying and radically modifying the excess-profits tax with a view to meeting the Treasury requirements pending its early repeal and the merging of suitable substitute tax provisions into the income tax system proper. This plan would have for its purpose the securing of the fullest measure of taxes from all remaining excess profits, but in a more accurate and equitable manner which would be arrived at by imposing a substantial flat or graduated tax on the undistributed profits of corporations and by the elimination of the "capital invested" provision of the present law. These and scores of other amendments to the present tax system have been urged on the Ways and Means Committee by the Treasury for many months. Many of the proposed changes would simplify existing provisions without the loss of revenue, while others would make the laws much more equitable and at the same time afford an actual increase of revenue. The passage of a few of these tax items through the House as Congress is in the act of adjourning is not even deathbed repentance.

Mr. Chairman, I am amply justified in the light of the record of the present and past Republican Congresses in failing and refusing to adopt honest and fair revenue legislation—legislation based on the ability of the taxpayer to pay—in offering the earnest view that only a Democratic Congress can be expected and relied upon to bring about speedy, comprehensive, and equitable reforms in our present system of war taxation, develop it into a model peace revenue system, and maintain its traditional policy of economy in expenditures. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Upon what subject?

Mr. SIMS. I desire to print some remarks in the RECORD with reference to economic railroad financing and operation.

Mr. WALSH. And incidentally involving the Plumb plan?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no; not at all. I never would expect unanimous consent for a thing of that sort.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, the boldest and most flagrant case of profiteering in food products has been in regard to sugar. Sugar is one of the necessities of life. The United States is the largest sugar consumer in the world, the consumption, according to the report of the Committee on Agriculture, amounting for the year 1919 to 92 pounds per individual. Based upon these figures, the amount required for domestic consumption is 4,520,000 long tons. The sugar profiteer has taxed the American public at least 10 cents per pound and, taking 92 pounds per capita, it would be a tax of $9.20 on every man, woman, and child of our 110,000,000 inhabitants, or, in other words, the sugar profiteer has robbed the American people of over one thousand million dollars—$1,012,000,000.

RESPONSIBILITY.

The above facts can not be controverted. The question is, Who is responsible, the Congress of the United States or the Democratic administration in administering the laws that Congress has passed? Both the Congress and the administration are charging each other with this responsibility, and the American people, who are groaning under this tremendous tax, which on one article alone is adding between $40 and $60 tax per year on every American family, are going to ascertain who is responsible and visit just punishment upon the responsible party.

ADEQUATE LAWS PASSED BY CONGRESS.

War was declared April 6, 1917. There was a great shortage of food in Europe. The Allies begged the United States to supply them with sugar, wheat, fats, and so forth. August 10, 1917, Congress passed what is known as the food-control act. Under this act the President had absolute control of the manufacture, sale, distribution, and fixing the price of sugar. Under this act the President was authorized by Congress to—and did—organize under the laws of New Jersey a corporation, the stock of which corporation was subscribed for in the name of the President of the United States, and $5,000,000 was appropriated by Congress and placed in the President's hands as cash capital. The President appointed eight directors of this corporation, called the Sugar Equalization Board. This board had from its appointment the right, and exercised that right, to fix the price of sugar, license sugar dealers, and go into the market and buy sugar. The names of the members of the Sugar Equalization Board appointed by President Wilson are:

Directors: Herbert Hoover, chairman of the board; George A. Zabriskie, president; Clarence M. Wooley; Elias A. De Lima; Theo. F. Whitmarsh, vice president; Edgar Ricard; William A. Glasgow, jr., general counsel; and F. W. Taussig.

In the year 1917 the Sugar Equalization Board, under control of the President, bought the entire Cuban crop of sugar. It had an arrangement with our allies that it would resell one-third of the Cuban crop to them. This agreement was carried out. The Sugar Equalization Board entered the Cuban market and purchased the entire Cuban sugar crop at 5.5 cents a pound for unrefined sugar or $5.50 per hundred pounds.

Agreement was made with the refiners that they should refine sugar at $1.54 per 100 pounds. The duty was $1 per 100 pounds for Cuban sugar. The freight was approximately 38½ cents per 100 pounds. Thirty-eight cents per 100 pounds was retained by the board to defray the cost of administering the law. Agreement was made with the refiners that they would sell the refined granulated sugar at 9 cents per pound. The Sugar Equalization Board allowed the brokers one-fourth of 1 cent per pound for handling the sugar and the retailers 1 cent per pound. This brought the price of the refined sugar to the consumer at practically 10 cents per pound throughout the country. Thus the law passed by Congress worked well, and there was no profiteering in sugar up to November, 1919.

CHANGE IN POLICY.

In January, 1920, for some reason unknown and never yet explained, the Sugar Equalization Board canceled its former order fixing its price of sugar to the consumer at 10 cents per pound.

It removed the charge that the brokers might exact from the retailers and the retailers from the public. The same law under which the Sugar Equalization Board purchased the Cuban sugar crop of 1918 at 5½ cents per pound was still on the statute books. This law has never been repealed. Under the terms of the law the President, as I previously stated, is given authority to license the importation, manufacture, storage, or distribution and fix the price of sugar. This law was to remain in force under its terms until the President himself proclaimed that the existing state of war between the United States and Germany had terminated. The act was continued by this Congress until December 31, 1920, so that if peace was consummated at any time the law would still be in force until the close of the present year 1920.

The Department of Justice, by Attorney General Palmer, has repeatedly made the statement that the laws have not been adequate. Notwithstanding this statement, the existing laws were sufficient for the Sugar Equalization Board to purchase the Cuban sugar crop of 1918 and fix the price of sugar in the United States to the consumer at 10 cents per pound for the years 1918 and part of 1919. Under the existing laws Attorney General Palmer has recently set the margin of profit allowed on sugar sales at 1 cent a pound for the wholesaler and 2 cents a pound for the retailer. How does the Attorney General reconcile this action and the action of the Sugar Equalization Board in purchasing the Cuban sugar crop of 1918 and fixing the price of sugar in the United States with the statement that the laws are not sufficient? At no time has the President or the Department of Justice, officially or otherwise, requested Congress to give them any more powers than the law already gave them, which were ample.

THE ADMINISTRATION AT FAULT.

November 8, 1919, Attorney General Palmer sent the following telegram to Mooney, United States attorney:

MOONEY, NOVEMBER 8, 1919.

United States Attorney, New Orleans, La.:

Your wire of the 8th (Nov., 1919) detailing results of conference. Consider agreed price rather high, but hereby concur in maximum fixed price of 17 cents for Louisiana plantation clarified, 18 cents for Louisiana clear granulated, understanding that all contracts for a higher figure to be abrogated. Further suggest if possible you secure an agreement in writing by authorized committee of Louisiana producers and refiners, to be used as prima facie evidence where prices are charged in excess of agreement. You are hereby instructed to immediately prosecute any violator of this agreed price.

PALMER.

This telegram fixed the price of Louisiana plantation sugar at 17 cents and Louisiana clear granulated at 18 cents per pound, which was an important factor in jumping up sugar all over the United States and also in Cuba. November 8, 1919, when Attorney General Palmer allowed the Louisiana sugar speculators to charge 17 and 18 cents for their sugar at the plantation, sugar was selling in the United States at 11 and 12 cents per pound at retail.

In connection with Attorney General Palmer's telegram fixing the price of sugar at 17 and 18 cents on November 3, 1919, attention is called to the minority report of Senator RANSDELL, of the State of Louisiana, in which report the Senator opposes the continuation of the Sugar Equalization Board in the following language:

The present sugar scarcity is only temporary; will be relieved as soon as the present longshoremen's strike is settled and the domestic sugar crops reach the market, and I am of the opinion that even without the purchase of the Cuban crop there would not be such a scarcity of sugar in this country as is anticipated by the majority members of this committee. The purchasing power of the European countries is limited and the greater portion of the Cuban crop will be bought and refined in this country through the natural avenues of trade and industry. In support of this view, I beg to annex herewith the memorandum submitted by Dr. Taussig to the President August 14, 1919, in which he dissented from the views of a majority of the United States Sugar Equalization Board.

It is further interesting to read the statement of Prof. Taussig, of Yale University, a Democrat and free trader, to whose opinion President Wilson gave more weight than he did to the other seven members of the sugar equalization board.

I regret not to be able to reach the same conclusion as the other members of the Sugar Equalization Board. I believe that no negotiation should be entered into with the Cuban producers and that the regulation and restriction of sugar prices should cease with the close of the present arrangement, December 31.

It will be noted that Prof. Taussig does not claim that the existing laws are not sufficient.

Sugar at that time was selling in the United States at retail from 10 to 12 cents per pound. The Cuban crop of sugar was offered and could have been purchased by the Sugar Equalization Board for 6½ cents per pound, so that the consumer could have had all the sugar desired at from 10 to 12 cents per pound for the remainder of 1919 and all of 1920. To-day the consumer is paying from 22 to 30 cents per pound, with a possibility of its going higher, and the purchaser only allowed to purchase one pound at a time.

I herewith give the following news item clipped from a Washington paper:

CHICAGO, May 20, 1920.

Fifty-one freight cars loaded with 3,060,000 pounds of sugar are being sought in railroad yards here by Federal agents. It is said the sugar has been on side tracks for two weeks. Sugar is being sold at 31 cents a pound retail here.

Prof. Taussig's theory, which was accepted by Prof. Wilson, our President, has cost the people of the United States over one thousand million dollars. This enormous and unearned profit goes into the pockets of a very few speculators who control the sugar market. If this enormous profit was divided equally among 100 of the profiteers, each would make a profit of over $10,000,000.

EFFECT OF PALMER'S ACTION IN FIXING PRICE OF LOUISIANA SUGAR.

George A. Zabriskie, head of the Sugar Equalization Board, stated to the New York Globe December 24, 1919, as follows:

The sugar situation is now hopeless, for the reason that it has gotten into politics, and the sooner it gets out the better. The ridiculous price of 17 cents wholesale for the raw sugar now charged by the Louisiana planters is an outrage. I can not say that Attorney General Palmer fixed the price, but it was known in Louisiana that he would stand for it. It was known furthermore that he approved it. It was this folly that inspired the Cubans to make their gouge. When they saw American sugar planters getting away with 17 cents, they decided it was perfectly legitimate for them to get some of the plunder, and to-day the people are paying the price for the Attorney General's mistake. Had the Sugar Equalization Board been permitted to exercise its own judgment, instead of the country facing a famine, as it now does, we would have had the largest crop of sugar in history at 6½ cents per pound.

COULD HAVE BOUGHT CUBAN SUGAR CROP OF 1919 AT 6½ CENTS A POUND.

July 29, 1919, George A. Zabriskie, president of the Sugar Equalization Board, received the following letter from the accredited representatives of the Cuban sugar growers of Cuba, R. B. Hawley and Manual Rionda:

GEORGE A. ZABRISKIE,
President Equalization Board,
112 Wall Street, New York City.

DEAR SIR: In pursuance of the informal discussions conducted between subscribers, speaking by authority for the Cuban Government, the members of the Equalization Board, as the purchasers and distributors of Cuba's sugar crop for the existing year, we deem it expedient to submit for your information, and, as far as you may determine, for your action in continuing the control and disposition of Cuba's crop of sugar for the ensuing year, 1920.

In presenting our suggestions, while acting directly for the Cuban sugar producer, we accept the grave responsibility of speaking scarcely less for the American consumer and for that vast army of foreign consumers whose needs are of such concern to the American Government.

Fortunately for every interest involved, the great bulk of sugar required by importing countries is provided by the Island of Cuba, but she takes no note of this "coin of vantage"; on the other hand, the Island Republic, its hacendados and farmers and manufacturers of sugar, tender, through its own Government, providing it meets with the consent and cooperation of the American Government, the entire wealth of her production under such terms as may be agreed upon by the contracting parties at a price moderate but compensating to the producer and well within the economic reach of the consumer.

This is the fundamental basis upon which our tender is made. If accepted through the continued life and active participation of your respected board, or similar body, the whole question would be greatly simplified. If, on the contrary, the opportunity to serve not the American people alone but the universal welfare, if for any reason, technical or otherwise, not availed of through one medium or another, there is not a community anywhere in America, Europe, or Asia that will not feel the consequence of our failure to provide a stable price for this most necessary article of human consumption. Cuba approaches this question with full recognition of her relations to the American people and their Government and in the spirit of comity and desire for a complete understanding.

We await with unflagging interest your reply, the subject of which we are assured is to you, as it is to us, the most momentous in the world's economy of to-day.

With assurances of great respect,

Faithfully, yours, MANUEL RIONDA.

LETTER OF CUBAN SUGAR GROWERS SENT TO THE PRESIDENT.

The Sugar Equalization Board on the 14th of August, 1919, transmitted the above letter to the President with a statement that seven out of the eight members of the Sugar Equalization Board advised the President of the propriety and advisability of buying the Cuban sugar crop.

The Cuban sugar crop could have been purchased at that time for 6½ cents per pound. The only member of the Sugar Equalization Board that did not urge the President to again order them to purchase the Cuban sugar crop was Dr. Taussig, professor in Yale University. Not hearing from the President upon this important matter, the President having his mind fully taken up with other matters he thought more important, September 20, 1919, George A. Zabriskie, president of the Sugar Equalization Board, and one of the greatest authorities upon sugar in the United States, again called the attention of the President to the great importance of acting at once in purchasing the Cuban sugar crop. The President of the United States all of this time was the sole stockholder in a corporation and had a $5,000,000 fund appropriated by Congress in his hands, besides a contingent fund of $100,000,000.

SECOND LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT URGING THE PURCHASE OF THE CUBAN SUGAR CROP.

SEPTEMBER 20, 1917.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Referring now to my letter to you of the 14th of August, inclosing the report from the board of directors of the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.), and also referring to you a letter from the representatives of the Cuban Government and producers of sugar. In reference to the Cuban sugar crop of raw sugars for the year 1919 and 1920, I desire to respectfully bring to your attention the fact that the time is fast approaching, if it has not arrived, when we will be unable to control the Cuban crop of sugar for the year 1919 and 1920 unless action is taken at once. I am informed that a considerable tonnage of Cuban sugars of the crop of 1919–20 has already been sold, and it seems entirely probable that the representatives of the Cuban sugar will withdraw their proposition unless some action is taken at once.

May I therefore respectfully ask an early determination of the policy which the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) is to pursue with reference to the matter referred to in my letter of the 14th day of August? I know the pressure you are under, and nothing but imperative necessity could make me add this matter to your burdens.

Very respectfully, GEORGE A. ZABRISKIE,
President.

This letter was received by the President and acknowledged by his executive secretary, Rudolph Forster, in the following letter:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, September 22, 1919.

MY DEAR SIR: Allow me to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 20, and to say that I shall bring it to the attention of the President at the first favorable opportunity.

Sincerely, yours,

RUDOLPH FORSTER,
Executive Secretary.

MR. GEORGE A. ZABRISKIE,
President of Sugar Equalization Board,
112 Wall Street, New York City.

At this time during September when the Sugar Equalization Board were urging the President to purchase the Cuban sugar crop before it was too late and their letters were being acknowledged by the President's executive secretary, President Wilson was going about the country abusing the United States Senate for not ratifying the League of Nations covenant without the dotting of an i and the crossing of a t.

The President, at Billings, Mont., September 11, 1919, and other places in the month of September, referred to the United States Senate as "a little group of men who looked at it with the jaundiced eyes of those who have some private purpose of their own." Fifty-six United States Senators out of the 96, representing 40 sovereign States, were characterized by the President as "contemptible quitters," and they were told to "put up or shut up," because these Senators, under their constitutional prerogatives, insisted upon American rights and that the United States should have equal representation in the League of Nations with Great Britain.

THE PROFITEER BUSY.

The sugar profiteer was busy. While the President was singing the old song of sanctimonious self-righteousness, that "the League of Nations was the hope of the world—that the league was the dearest desire of little free peoples" and his various platitudes, the sugar profiteers were busy buying up the sugar crop of Cuba at 6½ cents a pound, to later sell to the American people at from 20 to 30 cents per pound, thus reaping a harvest of over $1,000,000,000 in a single year.

TOTAL SUGAR PRODUCTION.

The total sugar production in the world is about 17,000,000 tons. Cuba produces 4,500,000 tons and only consumes one-thirtieth of what she raises. She has four and one-third million tons to sell to other countries.

The United States and her possessions—Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands—produce nearly 2,000,000 tons, leaving about 3,000,000 tons for the United States to buy outside of her own possessions.

RESPONSIBILITY OF HIGH COST OF SUGAR.

The President of the United States should have purchased the Cuban sugar crop for the year 1919 at 6½ cents per pound. Cuba had four and one-third million pounds of sugar to sell. Those who had authority to sell the Cuban sugar crop repeatedly notified the Sugar Equalization Board, who, under direction of President Wilson, had bought their crop in 1918, and urged them to buy it, and waited for their acceptance for several months. When Attorney General Palmer fixed the price of sugar at 17 and 18 cents per pound to the Louisiana sugar growers, November 8, 1919, they could not hold open the offer longer. The President of the United States was duly informed of Cuba's offer by his appointees—the president of the Sugar Equalization Board, Mr. Zabriskie, and Herbert Hoover, authorities on the subject of sugar—and was duly advised by seven out of eight members of the Sugar Equalization Board to purchase the crop at 6½ cents per pound. Cuba is only 80 miles from the United States. If the President had taken the advice of the Sugar Equalization Board, who wrote him two letters upon the subject, it would have saved the American consumer over $1,000,000,000 for the year 1920 in the cost of living.

Another factor in the high price of sugar, as shown by undisputed proof, is the fixing of the Louisiana sugar at 17 and 18 cents per pound by Attorney General Palmer, as shown by Palmer's dispatch to United States Attorney Mooney at New Orleans, La., November 8, 1919, which I have set out in full. The responsibility, therefore, of the American people being gouged by the profiteer out of over one thousand million dollars in a single year rests upon the President of the United States and the Department of Justice. A dozen or so men in the United States, by reason of President Wilson's failure to act and Attorney General Palmer's unlawfully fixing the price of Louisiana sugar at 17 and 18 cents per pound, have made in unlawful profits over one thousand million dollars, or close to $100,000,000 apiece.

If the Government of the United States, in its need for revenue to maintain itself and meet the extravagant expenditure of the war, had dared to put a consumption tax of 2 cents per pound on a recognized necessity like sugar, it would have been condemned and the administration perpetrating the outrage would have been defeated at the first election. President Wilson has made it possible for the black-flag sugar profiteers to levy a tax, not of 2 cents, but of over 10 cents, on each pound of sugar consumed, a tax in the aggregate amounting to over $1,000,000,000 on the people of the United States. Those who can will shift this burden on the man on the round of the ladder below. The salaried man and the toiling masses will be obliged to carry many times their proportionate share of this unjust, unnecessary, and outrageous burden.

BEET SUGAR INDUSTRY SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED.

The present sugar situation in the United States illustrates most forcibly the importance of the United States producing its own sugar. The Agricultural Department informs us that the sugar-beet industry is exceptionally profitable in at least eight States.

If the sugar-beet industry was encouraged and a fairly large acreage of sugar beets grown in these eight States, together with our cane-sugar industry, the United States could produce within its limits a sufficient quantity of sugar to meet the requirements of its own people and also export sugar. Under the encouragement of protection of the beet-sugar industry sugar was being produced in large quantities throughout the United States.

In 1912 and until the passage of the Underwood bill we had five large sugar-beet factories in Wisconsin and the building of many more contemplated in the very near future. When the tariff was removed from sugar by the Underwood tariff bill, passed by a Democratic Congress, four out of five of the beet-sugar factories in Wisconsin closed down and did not open until the war which made a sugar scarcity limiting the importation of sugar to the United States.

Napoleon encouraged the beet-sugar industry in France by protecting that industry, and thus made France not only independent of other countries in regard to the production of sugar but she also became an exporter of sugar.

Bismarck, another wise statesman, stated that no country was independent until it produced all the great necessaries of life that its people required; that sugar was one of the great necessaries, and the sugar industry should be encouraged. He therefore encouraged the raising of sugar beets and the production of sugar beets by a policy of protective tariff and subsidy until Germany produced all the sugar required by her people, and in addition became an exporter of sugar. If Germany had not produced its own sugar, it could not have maintained the war six months.

If the next national administration is Republican, the way I believe it will be, sugar will be protected. The great sugar-beet industry will be encouraged and the United States will soon be independent of the rest of the world for its supply of that great staple and necessity—sugar.

PROFITEERING IN WASHINGTON.

The Corby Baking Co., of the city of Washington, in the year 1919 made profits amounting to $191,392 on bread, as compared with $180,049.58 in 1918.

Notwithstanding the increase in profits, Mr. Corby and the other baking companies have increased the price of bread. They justified this increase by stating that the fair-price committee, appointed by Mr. Howard Figg, of the Department of Justice, authorized the increase in the price of bread. It is easy to understand why this committee allowed the increase when we learn the names of the persons who compose this fair-price committee of the District of of Columbia. The persons who compose the fair-price committee of the District of Columbia are: Leon Ulman, connected with Holmes & Sons, bakers; Joseph Berberich, a shoe dealer; R. P. Andrews, a paper dealer; W. G. Carter, of Golden & Co., commission merchants; Philip King, department store; John F. Wilkins, wholesale grocer; Mr. Nordlinger, ladies' furnishings; and Mr. Leese, an optician.

We find the names of no distinterested persons who compose the fair-price committee of the District of Columbia, unless it is the optician, but men interested in the baking business, retail shoe business, paper business, commission and wholesale grocery business, and department store.

These men were appointed by the Department of Justice, and by the same Mr. Figg of the Department of Justice who has been prosecuting the sugar profiteers so hard that sugar is now selling at 30 cents a pound.

The city of Washington has been a rich field for the profiteer. There has been no closed season, no one to protect the soldier boy, the Army nurse, and young girl war workers even during the war. The hunting season was open 12 months in the year and 24 hours in the day, with no restrictions.

No city in the United States afforded such opportunities for profiteering as the city of Washington, whose profiteers made the most of their opportunities. This saturnalia of profiteering took place within the shadow of the White House and the Department of Justice and in plain view of the fair-price committee appointed by the Department of Justice. The 100,000 employees of the Government who were called to work here during the war have left most of their earnings with the Washington merchants, room renters, and other profiteers. The laws on the statute books have been sufficient to protect the war workers from such outrageous exploitation. It was the imperative duty of the officials in authority to have seen that the public, especially the Government employees, were not fleeced of their earnings. From the facts revealed in the Senate examination of the bakery companies and the personnel of the fair-price committee we cease to wonder. In a letter to me from the fair-price committee E. D. Atkinson, executive secretary, dated December 20, 1919, writing from the Department of Justice, Washington, D. C., states the object of the creation of the fair-price committee as follows:

> This committee, as well as similar committees throughout the country, has been organized under the Department of Justice as a means of carrying out the provisions of the amendment to the Lever Act. Its function is to establish fair prices of foodstuffs and wearing apparel in the District of Columbia, and to take such further action as may be necessary to prevent hoarding, waste, manipulation, and profiteering in commodities coming within the classes indicated.

The record I have given shows how far the fair-price committee has fallen short of fulfilling the duties for which it was created.

OTHER PROFITEERS—WAR PROFITS EQUAL TO CAPITAL STOCK.

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, in his speech before the Senate, startled the people by making the statement that during the war the American people paid for the coal mines, steel mills, textile factories, and so forth, by paying these concerns in excessive profits more than their entire net worth. The Senator in this same speech also said that those in authority, meaning the Department of Justice, should either prosecute these profiteers and make them disgorge their unlawful profits or resign; that they should not be allowed to prey upon the public any longer. From many sources came the reply that the statement was only a general one and that these concerns were not guilty of profiteering.

The report of the Treasury Department, Senate Document No. 259, shows that the statement of Senator CAPPER is literally true. The first 360 pages of the Treasury report deals with small corporations; from page 361 to page 388 you will find the desired information.

COAL.

Coal is a basic necessity. When the price of coal is raised everybody pays not only the price but in the process of shifting it five or six times the amount of the raise.

Secretary McAdoo's statement during the coal strike, that the profits of the coal operators ranged as high as 2,000 per cent, and that profits as high as 100 per cent on capital stock were not uncommon, is borne out by this report. The Treasury Department report shows that 185 out of the 404 coal companies reported upon earned profits on their capital stock of from 100 per cent to 7,856 per cent for the year 1917. In other words, nearly one-half of the coal mines paid profits equal to their entire capital stock and one of the mines paid profits equal to seventy-eight times its capitalization. It should also be noted that practically all of the coal mines were very much overcapitalized, as will be observed by the market value on their capital stock before this time.

APPLY THIS TO THE FARMER.

If a farmer's net yearly profits amounted to as much as the value of his farm and in some cases his yearly profits were so high that he could buy 78 farms like the one he owned, he would be on the same footing as the coal operator mentioned above.

STEEL.

The United States Steel Corporation, with a capital stock of $868,583,600, in the year 1917 received a net income of $478,204,342. These figures are taken from their own report.

PACKERS.

The Treasury Department report shows that out of 122 meat packers, 30, or one out of every four, made more than 100 per cent profit on their capital stock.

WOOLEN AND WORSTED MILLS.

The Treasury reports show that out of 45 woolen and worsted mills 1 earned 1,770 per cent on its capital stock. In other words, a person having $100 worth of stock was able to draw $1,770 profit in a single year. Out of the returns of 45 woolen and worsted mills 17 reported profits of more than 100 per cent on their capital stock. Does not one wonder in the face of these figures why woolen clothing has become such a luxury that only wealthy people can afford to wear woolen clothing.

COST OF BUILDING.

We have heard a great deal about the high cost of building. The large contractors and builders have attributed this cost of building to the high cost of wages paid labor. The Treasury report shows that out of 809 large contracting and construction companies, 154, or more than 15 per cent, earned profits of over 100 per cent on their capital stock, and one earned nearly fourteen times its total capital in a single year.

FLOUR MILLS.

The Treasury report shows that out of 506 flour mills 84 report net profits of over 100 per cent on their capital stock.

BAKERY COMPANIES.

The bread and bakery companies, out of 217, made reports that 34, or one-seventh, made more than 100 per cent on their capital stock, and two-thirds made more than a profit of 20 per cent on their invested capital. Notwithstanding this unconscionable profiteering on the necessaries of life, the evidence of such profiteering within hands distance of the Department of Justice, none of these large profiteers has been prosecuted.

The Lever Act, drafted by the Department of Justice itself, as a war measure to check profiteering, was passed by Congress and approved by the President August 10, 1917, and has been on our statute books during this saturnalia of profiteering.

The President under this law has had the power at all times to encourge production, conserve the supply, and control the distribution of food products and fuel, to license dealers and fix the price of all products and materials. The President exercised that right in regard to the farmers' wheat and also in regard to the farmers' wool. The President failed to fix the price in regard to cotton, steel, and other necessities. The laws passed by Congress were ample in every way. They are on our statute books to-day. It is therefore clear that Congress has done all within its power to curb profiteering. The only reason that profiteering has gone on and the cost of living has increased to such a degree that it has almost produced a panic in the United States is that the laws on our statute books have not been enforced. The Executive department of our Government, whose duty it is to enforce the law, and the Department of Justice, always at the command of the Executive department, with its thousands of assistants, have utterly failed in their duty in prosecuting those who are most responsible for the high cost of living.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to my colleague, Mr. GOOD.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the Bureau of Efficiency has prepared for me a statement giving a summary of the acts of Congress making provisions with regard to soldiers of the late war. That statement is very illuminating and instructive, dealing, as it does, with several bills, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the record by inserting it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

APPROPRIATIONS AND OTHER RELIEF MEASURES PROVIDED BY CONGRESS FOR THE MILITARY AND NAVAL FORCES ENGAGED IN THE WORLD WAR.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

This act, approved October 6, 1917, as amended, provided three classes of relief for the military and naval forces.

1. Military and naval family allowances.

A sum not to exceed $50 a month was made payable and apportioned to members of families or other dependents of enlisted men conditioned on the compulsory monthly allotment of $15 of the enlisted man's pay for members of his immediate family and the voluntary monthly allotment of a certain portion of his pay in cases of other dependents. This allowance was payable from the date of enlistment, but not before November 1, 1917, until death in, or one month after honorable discharge from, the service but not for more than four months after the close of the war.

Total appropriations, including 1921 estimates, for this purpose are $298,615,000.

2. Compensation.

Compensation for death or disability was provided for commissioned officers, enlisted men, and members of the Army and Navy Nurse Corps (female), as follows:

(a) In case of death resulting from injury or disease, a monthly compensation of not to exceed $75 was granted and apportioned to members of the immediate family of the deceased, including dependent father and mother.

(b) Compensation in case of death resulting from injury is payable to widow until she remarries; to children until they reach the age of 18 years, or marry, unless they are incapable because of idiocy, insanity, or otherwise helpless, in which case compensation is payable during such incapacity; to dependent father or mother during dependency.

(c) A sum of not to exced $100 was provided for burial expenses and return of body to his home where death occurred subsequent to April 6, 1917, and before resignation or discharge from the service.

(d) In case of total, temporary disability, resulting from injury, a monthly compensation of not to exceed $80 was granted to the injured person, if single, or of not to exceed $100 if he has a family, except that a man with no wife but one child was allowed $5 additional for each child after the first, regardless of the number, and if there is a dependent father or mother, or both, an additional sum of $10 for each was granted. The award for a person with a family is dependent on number of persons in the family.

(e) While disability is partial and temporary, monthly compensation is to be a percentage of that payable for total, temporary disability equal to the degree of reduction in earning capacity, providing such reduction is not less than 10 per cent.

(f) While disability is total and permanent (this group to include persons who have lost both feet or both hands, or the sight of both eyes, or one foot and one hand, or one foot and the sight of one eye, or one hand and the sight of one eye, or who have become helpless and permanently bedridten) the monthly compensation of $100.

(g) For double, total, permanent disability, the monthly compensation is $200.

(h) While the disability is rated as partial and permanent the monthly compensation is a percentage of that payable for total and permanent disability, equal to the degree of reduction in earning capacity, providing such reduction is not less than 10 per cent.

(i) A schedule of ratings of reductions in earning capacity from specific injuries of a permanent nature is to be applied by the bureau. Ratings may be as high as 100 per cent, and are based upon the average impairment of earning capacity resulting from such injuries in civil occupations and not upon impairment in individual cases, so that there shall be no reduction in the rate of compensation for individual success in overcoming the handicap of a permanent injury.

(j) If injured person is so disabled as to require a nurse or attendant, an additional sum of not to exceed $20 a month was allowed.

(k) In addition to the above compensation, the injured person may receive reasonable governmental medical, surgical, and hospital services, and such supplies and appliances as wheeled chairs, artificial limbs, etc., as are determined to be useful and necessary.

(l) Injured persons may also be allowed reasonable traveling and other expenses when submitting to required medical examinations.

Total appropriations for compensation, including estimates for 1921, are $345,015,000.

3. Insurance.

Additional protection for commissioned officers, enlisted men, and members of the Army and Navy Nurse Corps (female) was provided in the form of insurance to be granted, upon proper application, in case of death or total permanent disability.

(a) Insurance to be granted in multiples of $500 for an amount not less than $1,000 or more than $10,000 upon payment of premiums prescribed.

(b) Insurance to be term insurance for successive terms of one year each during the period of the war.

(c) Provisions for maturity at certain ages, continuous installments during life of the insured or beneficiaries, or both, for cash loan, paid-up and extended values, dividends for gains and savings, and such other provisions for the protection and advantage of and for alternative benefits to the insured and the beneficiaries as might be found reasonable and practical were authorized. All calculations to be based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality, with interest at 3½ per cent per annum.

(d) At any time within five years after the close of the war insurance may be converted into ordinary life, 20-payment endowment maturing at the age of 62, or other usual forms of insurance.

(e) Yearly renewable term insurance is payable in 240 equal monthly installments. Where the insured has applied for converted insurance, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is authorized to make provision for optional settlements, the option to be elected by the insured, whereby such converted insurance may be paid either in one sum or in monthly installments covering a period of three years or more. If the insured under converted insurance has failed to select a form of optional settlement, the bureau is authorized to provide for an election by the beneficiary to receive payment of the insurance in monthly installments covering a period of three years or more. Even though the insured has exercised the right of election of the form of settlement of converted insurance, the bureau is authorized to provide that the beneficiary may elect to receive the insurance in installments spread over a greater period of time than that selected by the insured.

(f) Automatic insurance is provided in cases where a person in the active service on or after the 6th day of April, 1917, and before the 11th day of November, 1918, and while in such service and before the expiration of the time during which he could make an application for insurance has become totally and permanently disabled or has died without having applied for insurance, and also in cases where a person was inducted into the service by a local draft board after the 6th day of April, 1917, and before the 11th day of November, 1918, who while in such service and before being accepted and enrolled for active service has become totally and permanently disabled or has died without having applied for insurance. In these cases the person is deemed to have applied for and to have been granted insurance payable to himself during his life in monthly installments of $25 each, or in case of his death to his widow, child or children, mother, or father, in the order named, if and while they survive him.

(g) The United States to bear the expense of administration and the excess mortality and disability cost resulting from the hazards of war.

(h) The premium rates are net rates based upon the American Experience Tables of Mortality and interest at 3½ per cent per annum.

(i) Payments of premiums in advance are not required for periods of more than one month each, and may be deducted from pay or deposit of insured, or otherwise made as insured may elect.

Total appropriation for the above purpose was $23,000,000.

[NOTE.—A regulation has recently been promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury, whereby any insurance policy which has lapsed may be reinstated before July 1, 1920, upon the payment of only two monthly premiums.]

4. Miscellaneous provisions.

(a) Benefits provided under this act are not assignable except within the specified class of beneficiaries in cases of converted insurance, are not subject to claims of creditors, and are exempt from taxation.

(b) In case of suits brought in United States district courts by claimants under the act, the amount of the attorney's fees are restricted to not more than 5 per cent of the amount recovered, and the method of payment is prescribed so as not to work a hardship on the beneficiary.

5. Appropriations for expenses of the bureau, including estimates for 1921 are $40,525,106, making the total amount necessary to carry out the provisions of this act $707,155,706.

[NOTE.—There is now pending before Congress a measure which provides for the establishment of 14 regional offices and such suboffices as are deemed necessary for the purpose of bringing all matters pertaining to allowances and allotments, compensation, and war-risk insurance to the attention of service men, and also provides for advertising in newspapers, magazines, and periodicals such information about the work of the War Risk Insurance Bureau as will be of interest to service men. The intention is to acquaint them with the benefits and privileges in connection with war-risk insurance. For the above purpose an appropriation of $1,250,000 is requested, which would bring the total appropriation of the War Risk Insurance Bureau to $708,405,706.]

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

The vocational rehabilitation act approved June 27, 1918, as amended, charged the Federal Board for Vocational Education with the duty of furnishing without charge instruction to all disabled persons in the military and naval forces engaged in the war with Germany who had resigned or been honorably discharged. For this purpose the existing educational facilities of the country were utilized by the board.

Training under this act is separated into two classes:

1. Every person who served in the military and naval forces and who had resigned or been honorably discharged since April 7, 1917, having a disability incurred, increased, or aggravated while a member of such forces, or who later developed a disability traceable to service therein, may receive vocational training provided it is found to be necessary to overcome the handicap of his disability.

(a) This provision was intended to include those persons who were suffering from disabilities which had resulted in vocational handicaps, and is designed to fit the disabled person for new employment, his disability having prevented him from returning to his former occupation.

(b) During such period of training he shall receive support of not to exceed $80 a month, if single and without dependents, or of not to exceed $100 a month if he has dependents. This amount to be plus the several sums provided as family allowances for enlisted men, under article 2 of the war-risk insurance act, and is in lieu of any compensation to which he may be entitled under article 3 of the same act, unless the compensation to which he is entitled under article 3 is in excess of the amount paid by the board for support, in which event the Bureau of War Risk Insurance shall pay monthly the additional amount necessary to equal the total compensation due under article 3. (A bill is now pending in Congress to increase this monthly support from $80 to $100 to $100 and $120, respectively.)

2. Courses of free vocational training are made available for all other members of the military and naval forces who have resigned or been honorably discharged, and who are not included in the first group, but who are entitled to compensation under article 3 of the war-risk insurance act.

(a) This provision was intended to furnish training in the nature of job-improvement instruction, and is designed for men of minor disabilities who are not prevented by their injuries from returning to gainful occupations.

(b) Such persons are not entitled to support other than the compensation above referred to, but may be furnished tuition, books, and supplies free of charge.

3. In addition to the above provisions for training the duties of the board extend to placing rehabilitated persons in suitable and gainful occupations and the services of all national and State placement agencies are utilized for that purpose.

4. Persons who have taken courses in vocational training may also be granted:

(a) Such supplies, equipment, and clothing as are required for their employment when ready for employment; and

(b) Traveling expenses to places of employment.

5. The board also acts in an advisory capacity to the War and Navy Department wherever training during convalescence is undertaken as a therapeutic measure and similarly the War and Navy Departments act in an advisory capacity to the board in the care of the health of the soldier or sailor after his discharge.

Total appropriations, including estimates for 1921, for vocational rehabilitation are $165,000,000.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

The act approved March 3, 1919, directed the Secretary of the Treasury to provide additional hospital and sanatorium facilities for the care of discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, and Army and Navy nurses. For this purpose he was authorized:

1. To transfer to the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service certain hospitals and their equipment which had previously been under the supervision of the War Department.

2. To take over supplies from other Government departments where necessary.

3. To contract with any existing hospital or sanatorium for services.

4. To purchase or build such hospitals and sanatoriums as were necessary.

The total appropriations required to carry out the provisions of this act, including estimates for 1921, are (from statement of Representative GOOD, p. 5905, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Apr. 20, 1920):

Hospital construction	$93,950,000
Care and maintenance of patients	57,166,187
Total	151,116,187

BONUS.

The act approved February 24, 1919, granted a bonus of $60 to all persons in the military and naval forces who had since April 6, 1917, or before termination of term of service or enlistment, resigned or been honorably discharged or placed on inactive duty. The amount necessary to meet this expenditure is estimated at $250,000,000.

Total appropriations for all of the foregoing services are $1,274,521,893.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' CIVIL RELIEF ACT.

This act, approved March 8, 1918, provided for the temporary suspension of legal proceedings and transactions which might prejudice the civil rights of persons in the military and naval service during the continuation of the war.

1. In any action of proceeding commenced in any court against persons in the military service who were unable because of such service to appear, or whose rights would be affected by such service, the court was authorized to—

(a) Stay execution of any judgment or order in the case.

(b) Vacate any attachment or garnishment of property, money, or debts in the hands of another.

(c) Stay any proceedings for a period of three months where an order had been entered for eviction from property occupied by families of persons in the military service for nonpayment of rent, if such rent was not more than $50 a month. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy were authorized to make an allotment of pay for payment of rent of quarters occupied as dwellings by dependents of persons in the service where necessary.

(d) Stay proceedings where forfeiture of property purchased under installment contracts is threatened because of failure to pay such installments falling due while in the service; or the court may order the repayment of prior installments as a condition to termination of the contract.

(e) Stay proceedings commenced for foreclosure of mortgages, trust deeds, etc., executed upon real and personal property as security for obligations in case of failure to make payments falling due while in the service.

2. Insurance.

Provided against the lapse of any kind of insurance policy or policies having a total face value of not to exceed $5,000 held by persons in the military or naval forces because of nonpayment of premiums during their period of service by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit monthly with the insurer United States bonds in proper amounts as security for such defaulted premiums with interest until paid by the insured or until such times as other prescribed settlements were made. This authorization was conditioned on a proper application of the members of the military and naval forces holding such policies and upon the receipt of prescribed monthly data from the insurer.

However, the foregoing provision did not apply to any policy on which premiums were due and unpaid for a period of more than one year at the time of application or on which there is outstanding indebtedness equal to or greater than 50 per cent of the cash surrender value.

3. Taxes and public lands.

Provided:

(a) Against sale by tax collector of real estate owned and occupied for dwelling or business purposes by a member of the military or naval forces, or his dependents, because of nonpayment of taxes or assessments falling due during the period of service, except by order of the court. In case such sale was ordered, such person had the right to redeem the property at any time within six months after the termination of his service, but not more than six months after the close of the war.

(b) That no rights to public lands initiated or acquired under any of the land laws of the United States prior to entering military service were to be forfeited by reason of absence from such lands or other failure to meet the requirements prescribed by law.

PREFERENCE IN CIVIL-SERVICE APPOINTMENTS.

1. The act approved March 3, 1919, provided that preference in making appointments to clerical and other positions in the executive branch of the Government in the District of Columbia and elsewhere shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, or widows of such, and to wives of injured soldiers, sailors, and marines who themselves are not qualified but whose wives are qualified to hold such positions.

2. The act approved March 1, 1919, provides that the period of time during which soldiers, sailors, and marines who had a civil-service status prior to entering the service, or whose names appear on eligible lists, were in the service shall not be counted in determining their eligibility for reinstatement or appointment.

[NOTE.—A bill is now pending before Congress which extends the preference to be granted in civil-service appointments considerably and also charges the Board for Vocational Education with the duty of providing special training for disabled members of the military and naval forces for positions in the civil service.]

PREFERENCE IN PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

1. This act, approved September 29, 1919, provides that every person who, after discharge from the military or naval service, is furnished a course of vocational rehabilitation, and who before entering upon such course has made entry upon or application for public lands of the United States under the homestead laws, shall be entitled to leave of absence for the time necessary to pursue such course of training, and such absence shall be regarded as constructive residence; providing, however, that he must reside on the homestead claim not less than one year before patent may issue for it.

2. The act approved February 14, 1920, provided that for a period of two years all public lands which are to be opened for entry shall be open to members of the military and naval forces who served in the war with Germany and who have resigned or been honorably discharged 60 days prior to the time fixed for general opening to the public.

LABOR FOR CONSTRUCTION OF RURAL POST ROADS.

The act to provide aid to the States in the construction of rural post roads was amended February 28, 1919, to provide that preference be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines in the employment of labor for road building.

(d) Suspension during the World War of legal proceedings involving (act approved Mar. 8, 1918):
1. Execution of any judgment, or order, attachment or garnishment of property, money, or debts.
2. Eviction from property for nonpayment of rent.
3. Forfeiture of property purchased under installment contracts.
4. Foreclosure of mortgages, trust deeds, etc., for failure to make required payments.
5. Lapse of insurance policies because of nonpayment of premiums.
6. Sale of property for nonpayment of taxes.
7. Forfeiture of public lands because of absence or other failure to meet the requirements.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CANNON. As time seems to be precious, I want to ask unanimous consent to print remarks in the RECORD on the state of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have only five minutes remaining, and in that time I will not undertake to explain all the provisions of the bill. I hope to do this as each paragraph is reached. I will at this time undertake merely to point out what changes have been made, without in all cases undertaking to show just how those changes would affect the law. This bill is to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918. A large number of amendments have been proposed to the revenue act of 1918, some of them far-reaching in importance, but in this bill the committee has presented only those matters which they thought would meet with no objection and which would be useful in simplifying the law and would aid the Government in obtaining more revenue. Having limited the bill in this manner, it has received the unanimous approval of all the members of the Committee on Ways and Means. The first section of the bill relates to the basis for determining gain or loss. Now, the only change that is made by that section is in reference to cases where a gift has been received, which has subsequently been sold, and I will explain the effect of that as this provision is reached. The second section merely incorporates a Treasury regulation for the purpose of determining the basis of computing the net income in the cases of sales of stock on which there have been stock dividends. And I want all Members present to understand that it has no reference to the much-disputed question with reference to the taxation of stock dividends. This only applies in cases after a man has received a stock dividend and he sells either some of the stock dividend which he has received or some part of the original stock which he has held.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose he gives it away? Suppose the donee sells?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Unless the donee sells there will be no tax imposed. In case the donee sells, if there is a profit an income tax will be paid.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. On what?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. On the profits.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. If it were a gift how would you measure the profits?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will explain that very fully when that section is read; my time is precious, as I have only five minutes. Section 3 is a provision in reference to extraordinary net income. There has been a great deal of dispute as to the manner of applying the income tax in case a man receives an extraordinary amount of income in one year—for example, where a lawyer receives a fee in a case he has been working on for several years, or a man sold some property which has been gradually mounting in price during a number of years. This section applies to cases of that kind. Section 4 is so slight an amendment I will not stop on that, my time being so limited. Section 5 is a very important provision in reference to the final determination of tax claims and assessments, and it is deemed by the Treasurer to be of utmost importance. I may say that all the provisions of the bill are approved by the Treasury, and the Treasury is very desirous that they should be speedily enacted into law. This provision authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the consent of the taxpayer, to make final determination and accept payment on any tax claim or——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, all time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

BASIS FOR DETERMINING GAIN OR LOSS.

That subdivision (a) of section 202 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) That for the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived or loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, the basis shall be—

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest a few moments ago to the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE], in which he entered upon a criticism of the President of the United States for not exercising an authority conferred on him by a war act in the matter of the purchase of the Cuban crop of sugar, and unavoidably my mind went back to the discussion upon the floor of the House just a few days ago when two gentlemen from Ohio urged upon the House that the real reason for the Congress interfering in the matter of undertaking to make peace was that they might repeal the war-time power acts.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for me to make a statement?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall not object to the line of argument in which the gentleman from Tennessee is proceeding, although it has nothing to do with the bill, but if we are to get through with this bill this evening I shall have to object to anything further at the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. GARRETT. I am not proceeding in order, and I thank the gentleman for his courtesy in not making the point of order. It seems to me that gentlemen upon that side of the House place themselves in a very remarkable situation when continuously and repeatedly, as has been done here for months, leading gentlemen arise and criticize the President of the United States for not exercising the power which was conferred by this war act, conferred to be exercised in his discretion, and then leaders upon that side declare that the real purpose of interfering in the matter of peace is to repeal every act that conferred any sort of power upon the President of the United States. That much for that proposition.

One other thing the gentleman from Wisconsin referred to, and that is he repeated what has been stated on this floor again and again, what has been disproved again and again upon the floor and before the Judiciary Committee, namely, that the Attorney General of the United States fixed the price of Louisiana sugar. He did nothing of the sort; never undertook to do anything of the kind; never had any power to do such a thing. And the gentleman might profit by going to his own colleague on the Judiciary Committee, who have investigated this question, and find out what exactly was the Attorney General's power to act and what the Attorney General actually did.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I would like to read the telegram that Attorney General Palmer sent to his assistant in Louisiana.

Mr. GARRETT. I am perfectly familiar with the telegram, and know exactly what it means. The meaning of that telegram was that under the facts the Department of Justice did not believe if the Louisiana sugar producers charged 17 cents a pound they would be subject to prosecution under the Lever Act.

Mr. MONDELL. Did not that fix the price?

Mr. GARRETT. Why, of course not.

Mr. MONDELL. Then why did the price advance to that figure?

Mr. GARRETT. The price went down. The gentleman from Wyoming is a good lawyer. Will the gentleman say that that fixed the price or that that was an effort by the Department of Justice to fix the price?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] will withhold his objection to speaking out of order for just a moment, I do not want to delay the passage of his bill, but I think one or two of the observations made by my friend the gentleman from Tennessee are entitled to attention.

The gentleman refers to Congress having interfered with the making of peace. I do not know just what the gentleman means. Under the Constitution the Senate is charged with equal responsibility with the President in the matter of making treaties. Do I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], good Democrat that he is, to take the position that the President alone has the authority to negotiate treaties and settle the terms of peace and that the Senate of the United States has no responsibility or authority in the matter? I am sure he would not say that. The language of the Constitution is clear, definite, explicit, and no Democrat as good a Democrat as the gentleman from Tennessee is will deny the mandates of the Constitution, I am sure.

The President insisted on being the "whole thing." He ignored the Senate absolutely in the first instance and then endeavored to coerce the Senate in the consideration of the treaty, with the result that we were compelled to take the rather unusual course of passing a resolution officially establishing a condition of peace. So much for that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What power may now prevent this country being at peace? Will it be congressional or Executive power?

Mr. MONDELL. Only Executive power can now stand in the way of the establishment of a condition of peace.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman says the Executive is responsible for us not making peace. Has the Senate ever ratified any treaty and put it up to the President?

Mr. MONDELL. Has the Senate ratified the treaty?

Mr. BLACK. Yes. Have they ever ratified any treaty with Germany?

Mr. MONDELL. The President, to take the word of a Senator of the Democratic faith in that regard, has prevented the Senate from ratifying the treaty.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. MONDELL. If I may quote a statement made in the Senate and still be in order, a very distinguished Democrat stated on the floor of the Senate that if the President would allow them to do so they would ratify the treaty with the Lodge reservations. The President declared the treaty must be ratified as he wrote it or not at all.

Mr. BLACK. Now will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not a fact that, with the Republican Members of the Senate who voted against ratification and voted an affirmative vote on the ratification with the Lodge reservations, that vote, coupled with the Democrats and Republicans that did vote for it, would have ratified the treaty?

Mr. MONDELL. Everybody knows what the facts are. No amount of quibbling will obscure the issue in the long run. Everybody knows that if the Senate, unmindful of its duties to the American people, had been willing to do exactly what the Executive demanded of it, the Executive might have succeeded in being the autocrat he desired to be—might have successfully been an autocrat—to the infinite harm of the American people and contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. But the Senate assumed the duty the Constitution laid upon it and insisted upon having something to say with regard to the form of the treaty. The President said that unless the treaty could be ratified just as he wrote it it must not be ratified at all, and, a considerable part of the Senators of his party following him, the treaty was not ratified. And it became necessary for us, in that situation, to pass a resolution establishing peace.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Let him get a little sugar into it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the numbering of this section has been inadvertently omitted. I ask unanimous consent to amend line 4, page 1, by inserting before the word "that" the usual abbreviation for the word "section" and the figure "1," making it read, "Sec. 1. That subdivision (a)," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to amend in the manner indicated. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, page 1, before the word "that," insert the abbreviation for the word "section" and the figure "1."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, we never put in section 1.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(1) In the case of property acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property, as of that date.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do that simply for the purpose of saying that these two paragraphs at the end of page 1 are exactly the same as the present law. There is no change.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(2) In the case of property acquired (except by gift, bequest, devise, or descent) on or after that date, the cost thereof; or the inventory value, if the inventory is made in accordance with section 203.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the only change made in this subdivision 2 is that the words in parentheses, "except by gift, bequest, devise, or descent," are inserted. Those are made necessary by the new provisions of sections 3, 4, and 5, which I will explain when we reach them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(3) In the case of property acquired by gift since February 28, 1913, the same basis that it would have in the hands of the donor or the last preceding owner, by whom it was not acquired by gift.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This entire subdivision 3 is new. It is made necessary by an oversight in the revenue law of 1918. Property received as a gift is not classed as income. We made that provision in the law of 1918 and overlooked the fact that——

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Iowa is not discussing his amendment. His amendment was to strike out the last word. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Let me inquire of my friend if he is serious about that. I think my friend will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. TINCHER. I will withdraw it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We overlooked the fact that this provision exempting gifts from income tax without any further provision might lead to evasions and fraud upon the Government in this way: A man has a piece of property which has greatly enhanced in value. Now, if he sells that he will himself, of course, have to pay a tax on the profit that he has gained, but under the present law if he gives it to his wife she could sell the property without paying any income tax, and this provision is inserted for the purpose of preventing that method of evading the law. The Treasury officials inform the committee that it has become quite common where a large profit has been derived upon a block of stock for the person who has derived that profit, instead of selling the stock himself, in which case he would be obliged to pay an income tax on the profit, to turn it over to his wife or a relative, and when the donee sells it, then, under the present law, no tax is derived.

Mr. CANNON. But they pay it just as the donor would if he had sold it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They stand in the donor's shoes; that is all. There must be a sale before there can be any tax on the profit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(4) In the case of the sale or exchange of property acquired by gift, the entire amount received therefor shall be included in the gross income of the donee, unless the donee submits with his return evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the basis to the last preceding owner who acquired the property other than by gift.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he will explain what the language means in lines 12, 13, and 14, "evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the basis to the last preceding owner who acquired the property other than by gift." The basis of what?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The basis for ascertaining the gain or loss. In other words, that would mean, in connection with the other provisions of the law, the original cost of the property in the hands of the donor.

Mr. WALSH. The language says "showing the basis to the last preceding owner."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The word "basis" has a definite meaning in the law. It is used, as the gentleman from Massachusetts will observe, in subdivision (3) and also in the very first paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I appreciate that, but I am not familiar with this law, and I am unable to make any sense out of this subparagraph. It says:

(4) In the case of the sale or exchange of property acquired by gift, the entire amount received therefor shall be included in the gross income of the donee, unless the donee submits with his return evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the basis to the last preceding owner who acquired the property other than by gift.

I do not think "evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the basis to the last preceding owner" makes any sense, and I should like to have the gentleman explain it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman will observe that in the paragraph preceding that the word "basis" is used in the same sense.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I notice that, but this says:

Showing the basis to the last preceding owner.

Now, there was not any basis to the last preceding owner.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not understand the difficulty in which my friend from Massachusetts finds himself. The word "basis" means the test for profit or loss, as the case may be.

Mr. LONGWORTH. For ascertainment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And it is used in this bill and used all through the law in that sense.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Along the line of the criticism, would it not help the paragraph if the word "basis" were omitted and the words "market or actual value to the last preceding owner" were substituted?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. That would entirely change the effect of the section. It is not necessarily even the original cost, although in most cases it would be the original cost. It is the original cost to the donor if acquired since March 1, 1913. Otherwise it is the value of the property March 1, 1913.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Let me ask another question, if the gentleman will permit: Do you mean to tax the total amount of the property as income that is acquired by gift, devise, or descent?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; this provision will only tax the difference between its original cost to the donor and the selling price if the donee sells it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. But ought not that to be limited to its value at the time the devise, gift, and so forth, took effect?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for three minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] will reflect for a moment, he will see that if it was made the value at the time the donee got it, we would simply come right back to the situation that we are in under the present law, and no profit would be taxed.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. If you will pardon me, not exactly in the same situation. If you relate to the cost to the original party, the dead man, why it may have been say $5,000, but during the years that he held it it may have grown in value until it was worth $10,000, and at the time of the devolution of the estate to the recipient, you are going to tax what? He makes a sale. Are you going to tax the difference between $5,000 and the price he got for it, or $10,000 and the price he got for it? That is the difficulty in my mind.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In the case of property acquired by gift, we are going to put the donee in the shoes of the donor. In the case of property acquired by bequest or descent, we do not change the present law.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I will ask the gentleman if he expects to pass this bill to-night?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is my great desire.

Mr. SNELL. If not, it seems to me it is time to adjourn.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit a suggestion? Would it not clear up that language, and would it affect it at all seriously, if instead of the word "to" after the word "basis" you substituted the words "in the hands of," so that it would read:

Showing the basis in the hands of the last preceding owner.

Would not that clarify that language?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not see any harm in that, if the gentleman wants to make that change.

Mr. WALSH. I think that would clarify it—

Showing the basis in the hands of the last preceding owner.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that.

Mr. WALSH. Then I offer an amendment in line 13, page 2, to strike out the word "to," after the word "basis," and to insert the words "in the hands of."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 13, after the word "basis," strike out the word "to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in the hands of."

Mr. WALSH. That would make the reading as follows:

Showing the basis in the hands of the last preceding owner who acquired the property other than by gift.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection, and I think the committee has no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I was on the floor and addressed the Chair with reference to subparagraph (4), as to which I desire to make a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out paragraph (4), in order that I may have a chance to gain an understanding of the language, for certainly to my mind it is not quite clear. It does not carry with it an expression which indicates what the intention of the law is. The word "basis," that has been criticized by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is ambiguous in itself. What does it mean? What basis? The gentleman from Iowa, in arguing the matter, said we want to get the cost in the hands of the original owner. Are you going to tax the difference between the cost to the testator whose will is being executed and the amount that the devisee gets for it when he sells it? If that is so, it is not fair nor right. The difference between what the value of the property was at the time the devise takes effect and the price for which it is sold might be taxable as income received by the heir, and any other disposition or attempt, no matter whether it is called income or not, would in my judgment be unconstitutional, because the only power given to this Congress to tax directly is to tax income, and you can not make fictitious income in that way. That was no income to this devisee. You may tax the income between that property in the hands of the testator when it is devised and the price at which it is sold by the devisee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is usually so careful and accurate that I am surprised at the statement that he is making. We could tax this whole gift, every cent of it, as income if we desired to, yet the gentleman tells us that we can not take part of it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have ventured to express an opinion, to which I adhere. I question your right to tax a gift as income under the amendment to the Constitution by which alone you are permitted as a National Government to tax income. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the trouble with my friend—and it is not at all surprising—is that this matter is extremely technical, and one needs to be quite familiar with the revenue law. As Members of the House will observe, we started out in this bill with a heading, "Basis for determining gain or loss." Then we define what that basis shall be, and fix the meaning of the word. After that we continue to use the term "basis," having reference to the meaning prescribed in the previous paragraphs. Obviously, the term "basis" would not be definite by itself. For its meaning we must go back to the definition that we have given it in the beginning of the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I want to know what the intention of the law is?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was withdrawn.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of answering the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. We are proceeding rather informally anyway.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He asked a question that I failed to answer. The purpose of the bill is to take the profits which are made when the gifts are sold just the same as we take the profits if the donee had kept the property and sold it.

Mr. SABATH. Is not that due to the fact that the gifts are fictitious?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. What is to be the thing subtracted from the price that the man receives? This thing called the basis, is it to be the value of the property at the time the bequest was made to this person, or is it the difference between the selling price and the cost to the testator?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope my friend will not keep mixing gifts with bequests, because there is no tax in case of bequests. The basis for gifts will be as stated on page 1, in case the property was acquired before March 1, 1913—the appraised value of that property in the hands of the donor.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment on the desk offered by the gentleman from Iowa, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "acquired," insert "after February 28, 1913."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is simply for the purpose of making the language a little more clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet asking for recognition at the time the committee was considering paragraph 4 of the bill, and I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill concerning paragraph 4. I am not quite satisfied with that provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. PARRISH. Yes; in order that I may ask a question about the preceding paragraph. If I understand the provisions of paragraph 4, if A buys a piece of land to-day at $10 an acre, and in six months from that time its value has increased to $100 an acre, and he then gives it to his son, and the son sells it shortly thereafter, the son has got to account as income for the difference between the price the parent paid for it and what the son sold it for; in other words, $90 an acre.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; and we think that is absolutely fair; otherwise it would be easy for the income-tax provision to be evaded. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. PARRISH. Does not the gentleman think that that provision should be changed as far as the sale of real estate is concerned; and does he not think we should permit the department to determine the good faith of the gift instead of passing legislation which even if we have the right to pass it will prevent a man giving property to his children in good faith?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is a question of profit on gifts, and the information of the committee is that the transfer is often made, not in good faith, but to evade the income tax. If the donor kept the property and sold it himself and then turned the cash over to his son he would have to pay the income tax upon it.

Mr. PARRISH. That is true, but we are undertaking to pass legislation so that the man can only give cash and could not give land.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We are undertaking to say that a man shall not use the liberal provisions in the income tax law which places no tax upon a gift for the purpose of evading his income tax.

Mr. PARRISH. But the Ways and Means Committee still intend that a bona fide gift is not taxable.

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me say to the gentleman, suppose the father gave to his son a piece of property; the son is placed in his father's shoes as far as the profits in that property is concerned. Suppose I want to give my son a piece of property which I may have purchased in times past. If I sold the property I would have to pay the income tax. We felt that it was fair that the son should pay the same tax that the father would have paid if he had sold it and not given the property to his son.

Mr. PARRISH. That is simply saying that the father can not give the son a gift of land.

Mr. FORDNEY. Not at all; he could give the land to the son, but whatever profit there may have been in that for the father over and above the price he paid for it, the son must pay the tax that the father would have had to pay. By giving it to the son we thought it only fair that the son should be placed in the father's shoes when he came to dispose of it. Suppose I bought a piece of property for $10,000 and gave it to my son to-day and it is sold for $15,000. The difference between the cost price and the selling price is profit. If I retained it I would pay a tax on the $5,000, and if my son sells it at the same price he ought to pay the same tax on it that I would have paid.

Mr. PARRISH. I see the point of the committee, but I am taking issue, as far as I am concerned, with the justice of this provision so far as it relates to a gift. I believe if A gives B, his son, a piece of land, and if B holds it for five years and sells it, if it is a gift to his son the son ought to get it as of value of the date he received it. If he sold it the next day it is no matter, there is no income; but if he sold it in five years and there was an income or an increase of value that he ought to pay on that income.

Mr. FORDNEY. Right there, if the gentleman pleases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I ask that the gentleman have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks that the gentleman from Texas have an additional minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FORDNEY. Under existing law property acquired prior to March 1, 1913, can be valued as of March 1, 1913. Now, if it is sold at any date subsequent to that date the difference between the value of March 1, 1913, and the value of the property obtained would be profit, and so if the father conveyed to his son a piece of property he must then obtain the value of that property at the date it was given to him or the date of March 1, 1913. It does not change existing law and it does not make the son pay any tax on profits the father would not have paid had he retained and sold the property the same as the son. It does not change existing law at all.

Mr. PARRISH. No; I see it does not change existing law, but it looks to me as if it denies the father the right to give to the son land free as of date of the gift.

Mr. FORDNEY. Well, it does, except that whatever profit there is pays a tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

(c) In the case of stock dividends paid after February 28, 1913, the cost to the taxpayer of each share of old and new stock shall be the cost of the old shares of stock (or the market price or value thereof as of March 1, 1913, if acquired prior thereto) divided by the total number of old and new shares of stock: Provided, That in cases in which the old and new shares of stock differ materially in character or preference, the cost of the old shares of stock (or the market price or value thereof as of March 1, 1913, if acquired prior thereto) shall be apportioned between the old and new shares of stock as nearly as may be in proportion to the respective values of each at the time the new shares of stock were acquired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the gentleman from Iowa just give a simple explanation of how this is going to work? Is this made necessary by the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; this has no reference whatever to that matter. This is simply a Treasury regulation that has been in force for some time, and it was thought it better be made a matter of law. I can perhaps explain that by a simple illustration: Suppose a person had 10 shares of stock in a certain company that cost him a thousand dollars. The company issues a stock dividend of 10 more shares, so he has 20 shares. Then of those 20 shares he sells 5 shares. The tax does not apply until some of this stock is sold. Now, the question for the Treasury is to determine what would be the basis for that 5 shares. He now has 20 shares that cost him $1,000 to begin with, so we apply this provision you see beginning at the bottom of page 2, which reads, "the cost of the old shares of stock divided by the total number of old and new shares of stock" to ascertain the cost per share. Dividing $1,000 by 20, we find the cost of the stock would be estimated at $50 a share. Then, if he sold those 5 shares for $75 a share, he would be taxed on $25 profit per share.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is manifest that the gentleman can not complete his bill to-night with so extensive a discussion——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am trying to get along as fast as I can. I hope my friend will let us work for some time.

Mr. CRAMTON. But the gentleman can not possibly complete his bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have got as many people here as I could, get to stay and listen to anything so technical as this matter is——

Mr. WALSH. And the gentleman deferred his explanation of these paragraphs until under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did so because I was obliged to do so, as I did not give any time to this side.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope my friend will not do that. Let us proceed until 6 o'clock, and if the gentleman wants to get away by the 5th of June I think——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Thirty-six gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAVIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 14198, had come to no resolution thereon.

OFFICIAL RESIDENCE FOR AMBASSADOR IN LONDON (H. DOC. NO. 793).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit, for your consideration, a report from the Secretary of State announcing that Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, of New York City, offers to the Government of the United States, as a gift to the Nation for use by the ambassador of the United States in London as an official residence, the house property situated in that city known as Nos. 13 and 14 Prince's Gate, Hyde Park.

The attention of the Congress is invited to Mr. Morgan's statement that the house is now vacant and that consequently he would be glad to learn, as soon as possible, whether the Government of the United States will be disposed to accept his offer.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
25 May, 1920.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MANSFIELD, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on postal salaries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are these the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. MACGREGOR. They are, absolutely.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns this evening it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. I make this request because of the fact that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which has business before the House to-morrow, has a number of rather important bills that it is anxious to dispose of, and which I think could be disposed of to-morrow if we could meet early and the legislation proceeded with without much interruption.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me just a word further I will.

Mr. Speaker, on to-morrow, unless in the meantime there shall seem to be a good deal of opposition to it, I shall submit a unanimous-consent request that the House meet at 11 o'clock from now on.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, I am not going to raise any fuss about meeting at 11 o'clock from now on——

Mr. MONDELL. I shall not submit that request now.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (continuing). If the gentleman will give some assurance or statement as to when the House is going to adjourn or take a recess.

Mr. MONDELL. I have said repeatedly that I hoped the House would adjourn on the 5th of June. I am still of the opinion that Congress should adjourn, and I am still hopeful that the Congress will adjourn, on the 5th of June.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. To-morrow is Calendar Wednesday. Are these bills to be disposed of on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. MONDELL. They are.

Mr. SABATH. That committee is going to be reached?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, is it the gentleman's expectation that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will be able to pass more than one of its bills to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. I hope so.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know that one of the bills that it is proposed to take up is one in reference to the claims of the wood-ship builders?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I think the committee intends to bring that bill up; that it is the first bill they intend to present. Of course, it may take the entire day.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to the request.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The conference committee on the budget have agreed unanimously. The report will be taken up in the Senate first, and probably to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will yield a moment. Did the Chair submit my request?

The SPEAKER. Not yet.

Mr. GOOD. Just wait. There is a resolution pending to change the rules of the House, and I am very anxious to have that matter considered, and I wanted to ask the gentleman whether or not we might not take up that resolution on Thursday morning—and by that time I think the conference report will be back to the House—and take the day with that program. We have now a deficiency bill, and that will have to go to conference, and the sundry civil bill will have to go to conference. I am anxious to be in as many places at the same time as possible, but I can not very well be in more than one at a time.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sure we would all like to accommodate the gentleman from Iowa, but it does not seem to me entirely logical we should take up the resolution to which he refers until we have adopted the budget, and, of course, we shall not have adopted the budget until we have agreed to the conference report.

Mr. GOOD. I think we will be able to act upon that on Thursday, and I know that some of the Members who are opposed to that ought to know when it is coming up.

Mr. MONDELL. I think everyone should realize that the budget report will be taken up as soon as possible after it is agreed to and filed.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman have any objection to an arrangement whereby the resolution that is pending, changing the rules of the House, may be taken up for consideration immediately following the consideration of the conference report on the budget?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What changes do you propose in the rules?

Mr. GOOD. The Select Committee on the Budget has reported a resolution changing the rules of the House by providing for one Committee on Appropriations of 35 members and providing that other committees that now have authority to report out appropriation bills shall not have such authority.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. About how long does the gentleman think it will take to pass that change of the rules?

Mr. GOOD. It ought not to take long. The Democratic national convention unanimously placed that in their platform.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It does not make any difference what the Democratic national convention placed in the platform. Seven times 21 is 147. You have got that many to fight to start on. How many they will pick up in the scrimmage I do not know.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think they are going to pick up very many. I think the gentleman's side of the House is practically a unit for this change in the rules.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I am justified at this time in giving any assurance in regard to so important a matter. We want to dispose of the budget conference report as soon as it is in, and then we will have to consider these other important matters. There are quite a number of them.

Mr. SABATH. For instance, the bonus bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do not mention that.

Mr. McARTHUR. Have a heart. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Will the Chair please submit my unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, if the House will permit me for about a minute and a half, this extreme change that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is talking about in the rules of the House ought not to be passed here in jig time.

Mr. GOOD. I agree with the gentleman. That is why I——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is a revolutionary proposition. I do not say whether I am for or against it.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think it is a revolutionary proposition, but I do think, with the gentleman from Missouri, that Members of the House ought to have a little notice of it in time to be here when the matter comes up. We can just as well agree as to when that matter shall come up. I am ready to bring it up at any time if I can get an agreement to bring it up.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that that resolution may be in order on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the resolution referred to be in order on Thursday. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Unless the gentleman gives assurance that there will be reasonable time for discussion of it I shall object. If he will give that assurance, I will not object.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I think that one day should be given to that matter and free opportunity given to discuss and amend it.

Mr. McARTHUR. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman propose to call this resolution up before he calls up the conference report on the budget?

Mr. GOOD. The conference report on the budget has been unanimously agreed to. I think it will meet with the unanimous approval of the House, and I hope to call it up at that time.

Mr. McARTHUR. Is it the intention to call up the conference report on the budget before the gentleman calls up the resolution?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. Is not that privileged?

Mr. GOOD. I think not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not considered that question, and would not like to rule on it without considering it.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, there was a question about the jurisdiction. I think it was very properly referred to the gentleman's committee. I have no objection to that. If it would come from the Committee on Rules, of course, it would be privileged, and the wonder in my mind was whether, having been referred to the Committee on the Budget, that reference carried with it the privileged atmosphere that it would have if it had been referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say offhand that it was not privileged, but the Chair would not wish to be bound by that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the matter referred to is so important that it does not seem to me that we would be justified, with so few Members present, in agreeing to the gentleman's request. I think it would be hardly fair, in view of the importance of the matter presented, to allow a request of that kind to be granted.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman will consider the position that I have been placed in in the matter, with so many things crowding when we are trying to complete the work and realize the necessity of having some arrangement as to how some of these things are to be disposed of in some order. I must have a little time in which to arrange these bills that I must present, and if Thursday is not agreeable, or if the gentleman then has anything else on hand, I ask that he suggest Friday or Saturday, so that the day may be fixed definitely.

I do not care to take advantage of anyone with regard to this measure. It is a measure that every Member of the House is interested in. I think the country is interested in it, and I do not want to call up this resolution and have some one come on the floor and say that we have taken snap judgment on him; because it is of such vital importance, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has well expressed it, that we ought to have every opportunity to discuss it, and I think we ought to have an opportunity to know a little while in advance when the matter is going to be brought up.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think that is all right, but I want to ask the gentleman if he is not getting the cart before the horse in undertaking to pass this resolution changing the rules, which goes to the subject of the budget, before he gets the budget? I have no doubt he will get it.

Mr. GOOD. No; it would apply with equal force if we had no budget at all. The resolution changes the rules, and would be applicable under the present plan of appropriations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You could not get it through the House to save your life unless this budget business was intended.

Mr. GOOD. I think the budget bill will be passed by that time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of very great importance, and I have never assumed the responsibility of fixing the order of procedure in the House without consulting the Members of the House quite generally.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I have never been consulted about any of these arrangements, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Iowa has been very frequently consulted, as he knows, and very great pains have been taken to give him the right of way, as he was entitled to it when his bills were ready.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman then agree to Friday or Saturday?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not feel at this time, without having the matter considered at all by the Members who are interested, that I would be justified in fixing any time.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. MONDELL. I am compelled to object.

Mr. GOOD. I then make the same request that Friday be set aside as the day for consideration of that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that Friday be set aside.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, for the present I shall have to object to any such request.

Mr. GOOD. Then I ask that Saturday be set aside.

Mr. MONDELL. I shall object, Mr. Speaker, to the fixing of any date at this time.

Mr. PARRISH. Was the request agreed to that the House meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. Yes; that was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 1223. An act for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower and for the relief of passengers on board said steamer; to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 26, 1920.

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1920.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, so recorded on the calendar, the conference report on House bill 3184, the water power bill, be laid aside, that we may proceed with the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13870, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Treasury Department," subhead "Quarantine stations," on page 5, line 5, after the word "station," to insert "and all other maritime quarantine stations," so as to make the clause read:

> The schedule of fees and rates of charges in effect at the New York quarantine station at the time of the transfer of the title thereto to the United States shall be adopted and promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury as the schedule of fees and rates of charges for the operation of the said station and all other maritime quarantine stations under the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. GAY. I wish to make a point of order against that amendment. This is general legislation; it is new. I will state that it is the same amendment that was offered in the House, and a point of order was made against it there.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The House rule and the Senate rule are different.

Mr. GAY. The point of order was sustained by the Chair in the House. The effect of this amendment would be to make all quarantine stations in the country charge the same rates that are charged in New York, where, I understand, the present rates are higher than they are at some other points. I think it would be discriminatory, and I therefore make the point of order against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule of the Senate and the rule of the House are different. The rule of the House is that no new legislation may be added to an appropriation bill. The rule of the Senate is that no general legislation may be added to an appropriation bill.

Mr. GAY. This is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there a statute on the subject of fees?

Mr. GAY. There is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it admitted by the chairman of the committee that there is a statute fixing the fees?

Mr. WARREN. The matter, I think, does not transgress the rule, but if the Senator from Louisiana wishes to have it stricken out, I shall not contend against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, of course, the Chair will sustain the point of order and let it go at that.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings, repairs, equipment, and general expenses," on page 8, line 20, after the word "for," to insert "additional salary of $1,000 for the Supervising Architect of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1921," so as to read:

General expenses: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to execute and give effect to the provisions of section 6 of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 537): For additional salary of $1,000 for the Supervising Architect of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1921; foremen draftsmen, architectural draftsmen, and apprentice draftsmen, at rates of pay from $840 to $2,500 per annum; structural engineers and draftsmen, at rates of pay from $840 to $2,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coast Guard," on page 15, line 15, after "$5,776,000," to insert ": Provided, That not more than 10 enlisted men at one time may be detailed to duty in the District of Columbia," so as to make the clause read:

For pay and allowances prescribed by law for commissioned officers, cadets and cadet engineers, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired, temporary cooks and surfmen, substitute surfmen, and one civilian instructor, $5,776,000: Provided, That not more than 10 enlisted men at one time may be detailed to duty in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 17, to insert:

Titles of commissioned officers of the Coast Guard are hereby changed as follows: Senior captain to commander, captain to lieutenant commander, first lieutenant to lieutenant, second lieutenant to lieutenant, junior grade, third lieutenant to ensign, captain of engineers to lieutenant commander (engineering), first lieutenant of engineers to lieutenant (engineering), second lieutenant of engineers to lieutenant, junior grade (engineering), and third lieutenant of engineers to ensign (engineering): Provided, That all laws applicable to the titles hereby abolished in the Coast Guard shall apply to the titles hereby established.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 9, to insert:

For expenses incident to establishing and maintaining buoys to mark anchorage grounds in the harbors of New York and Hampton Roads, $31,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of War Risk Insurance," on page 21, line 1, after the words "by the," to strike out "Bureau of War Risk Insurance" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury"; in line 4, after the word "Service," to strike out "and"; and in line 6, after the word "Soldiers," to insert "and the War and Navy Departments," so as to make the clause read:

Medical and hospital services: For medical, surgical, and hospital services, medical examinations, funeral expenses, traveling expenses, and supplies, for beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, including court costs and other expenses incident to proceedings heretofore or hereafter taken for commitment of mentally incompetent persons to hospitals for the care and treatment of the insane, $46,000,000. This appropriation shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Treasury and such portion thereof as may be necessary shall be allotted from time to time to the Public Health Service, the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and the War and Navy Departments and transferred to their credit for disbursement by them for the purposes set forth in this paragraph. The allotments to the said board of managers shall also include such sums as may be necessary to alter or improve existing facilities in the several branches under its jurisdiction so as to provide adequate accommodations for such beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance as may be committed to its care.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Treasury Department," on page 24, line 15, after the words "United States," to strike out "$375,000" and insert "$400,000," so as to read:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign Governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign Governments, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, and for the enforcement of section 18 of the War Finance Corporation act; hire and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary; per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for no other purpose whatever, except in the protection of the person of the President and the members of his immediate family and of the person chosen to be President of the United States, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Customs Service," on page 25, line 16, after the word "revenue," to strike out "$10,300,000" and insert "$12,300,000"; and in line 18, after the word "appropriation," to strike out "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury, in the expenditure of this sum, shall allot to the customs districts of the United States on the Mexican border such amounts as will enable those districts to perform adequately the duties authorized and required by law," so as to make the clause read:

For collecting the revenue from customs, including not exceeding $200,000 for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue, $12,300,000: Provided, That not more than one appraiser for the port of Baltimore shall be paid from this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 6, to insert:

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Enforcement of the national prohibition act: For the employment of additional officers, traveling and other necessary miscellaneous expenses to guard intoxicating liquors in bonded and other warehouses, and prevent violations of the national prohibition act, $1,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health Service," on page 28, line 11, after the word "vehicles," to insert "court costs and other expenses incident to proceedings heretofore or hereafter taken for commitment of mentally incompetent persons to hospitals for the care and treatment of the insane," so as to make the clause read:

For medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for beneficiaries (other than war-risk insurance patients) of the Public Health Service, including necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, printing, freight, transportation and travel, maintenance and operation of passenger motor vehicles, court costs and other expenses incident to proceedings heretofore or hereafter taken for commitment of mentally incompetent persons to hospitals for the care and treatment of the insane, and reasonable burial expenses (not exceeding $100 for any patient dying in hospital), $4,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. In line 17, on page 28, I move to strike out "Bureau of War Risk Insurance" and insert in lieu thereof "Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 11, after the word "pellagra," to strike out "$32,500" and insert "$16,250: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be available for expenditure after December 31, 1920," so as to make the clause read:

Pellagra: For rental, equipment, and maintenance of a temporary field hospital and laboratory, including pay of personnel, for special studies of pellagra, $16,250: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be available for expenditure after December 31, 1920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 17, after the word "service," to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

Biologic products: To regulate the propagation and sale of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products, and for the preparation of curative and diagnostic biologic products, including personal service, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to page 34, line 4.

Mr. WARREN. After the words "per annum," line 4, page 34, I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the unexpended balance of the $32,000 heretofore appropriated for liquidating the affairs of the Committee on Public Information is hereby reappropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board," on page 37, after line 3, to insert:

The duties and powers conferred upon the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board by chapter 15 of the Army appropriation act approved July 9, 1918, with respect to the expenditure of the appropriations made therein are extended and made applicable to the appropriations for similar purposes made in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 22, to insert:

For allotment to the various States for the prevention, treatment, and control of venereal diseases, $450,000; and the unexpended balance on June 30, 1920 (approximately $300,000), of the appropriation heretofore made for this purpose is continued and made available during the fiscal year 1921: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be allotted to any State unless such State, in a manner satisfactory to the board, shall have complied with, and shall have given assurance of continued compliance with, the conditions and regulations governing such allotments and the expenditures that may be made therefrom.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 9, to insert:

For payment to universities, colleges, and other suitable institutions, for scientific research for the purpose of discovering more effective medical measures in the prevention and treatment of venereal diseases, $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 13, to insert:

For payment to universities, colleges, and other suitable institutions and organizations for the purpose of discovering and developing more effective educational measures in the prevention of venereal diseases, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 17, to insert:

No part of the respective sums contained in the two preceding paragraphs shall be paid to any university, college, institution, or organization which does not set aside an additional sum for the same purpose at least equal to the amount to be received from the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 23, after the word "Board," to strike out "$230,000," and insert "$1,015,000," so as to make the clause read:

In all, Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, $1,015,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 12, to insert:

RAILROAD LABOR BOARD.

For nine members of the board, at $10,000 each; secretary, $5,000; in all, $95,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 15, to insert:

For all other authorized expenditures of the Railroad Labor Board in performing the duties imposed by law, including personal and other services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, supplies and equipment, law books and books of reference, periodicals, printing and binding, traveling expenses, per diem in lieu of subsistence not to exceed $7, rent of quarters in the District of Columbia if space is not provided by the Public Buildings Commission, rent of quarters outside the District of Columbia, witness fees, and mileage, $355,000, of which sum $50,000 shall be available for the fiscal year 1920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Emergency shipping fund," on page 45, line 25, after the words "Fleet Corporation," to insert "but nothing in this proviso shall affect, modify, or repeal any provision of the 'shipping act, 1920,'" so as to make the clause read:

The expenses of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, for administrative purposes, the payment of claims arising from the cancellation of contracts, damage charges, and miscellaneous adjustments, maintenance and operation of vessels, and the completion of vessels now under construction shall be paid from the following sources: (a) The amount on hand July 1, 1920; (b) the amount received during the fiscal year 1921 from the operation of ships; (c) not to exceed $15,000,000 from deferred payments on ships sold prior to the approval of this act; (d) not to exceed $25,000,000 from plant and material sold during the fiscal year 1921; and (e) not to exceed $30,000,000 from ships sold during the fiscal year 1921: Provided, That after the approval of this act no contract shall be entered into or work undertaken for the construction of any additional vessels for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, but nothing in this proviso shall affect, modify, or repeal any provisions of the "shipping act, 1920."

Mr. WARREN. I move to amend the amendment of the committee on page 46, line 2, by striking out the word "shipping" and inserting in lieu thereof "merchant marine."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Smithsonian Institution," on page 48, after line 9, to insert:

National Gallery of Art: For the administration of the National Gallery of Art by the Smithsonian Institution, including compensation of necessary employees and necessary incidental expenses, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 49, to insert:

For the purchase, by condemnation or otherwise, of all of the following lots, pieces, or parcels of land lying between the present western boundary of the National Zoological Park and Connecticut Avenue, now known or described on the records of the surveyor of the District of Columbia as parcels Nos. 54 over 5, 54 over 6, 55 over 60, 55 over 61, the portion of parcel known as No. 54 over 4 that lies between the south line of Jewett Street and a line parallel to and 300 feet distant south from said south line of Jewett Street, and the portion of parcel No. 55 over 58 that lies between the north line of Jewett Street and a line drawn parallel to and 300 feet distant north from said north line of Jewett Street, $80,000, or such portion thereof as may be necessary, to be available till the termination of the proceedings herein authorized. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to purchase any of said land that he can obtain by agreement with the owners thereof at prices not in excess of the valuation placed on said land by the jury and approved by the court in the condemnation proceedings had under authority of the provisions of the sundry civil act approved June 23, 1913: Provided, That the price of the portion of a parcel of land shall be pro rata of the valuation of the entire parcel, based on area, except that the price of the portions hereinbefore described of parcel No. 55 over 58 shall be pro rata of the valuation of parcel No. 54 over 4; and the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized and directed to institute proceedings (under provisions of sundry civil act approved June 23, 1913) for the condemnation of any of the land hereinbefore described that he may be unable to purchase by agreement with the owner or owners thereof. The land acquired under the provisions of this act, together with the included highways (Jewett Street from the National Zoological Park to Connecticut Avenue, and the new highway connection therewith established under the provisions of public act No. 203, approved April 28, 1904, for a distance of 250 feet north from Jewett Street and 250 feet south from Jewett Street), shall be added to and become a part of the National Zoological Park: Provided, That such portion of said land as may be necessary may be used for a highway not more than 50 feet wide adjacent to the north line of the land taken from parcel No. 55 over 58 and a highway not more than 50 feet wide adjacent to the south line of the land taken from parcel No. 54 over 4, said highways to extend from Connecticut Avenue to the new highway hereinabove mentioned, and to be under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 150, line 4, after the words "office force," to strike out "$307,770" and insert "$310,570," so as to read:

In all, pay of office force, $310,570.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Standards," on page 164, after line 10, to insert:

The Bureau of Standards is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation as to the comparative cost and quality of gas furnished the Government and private consumers in the District of Columbia and report the result of said investigation to Congress on or before the first Monday in December, 1920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Labor," subhead "Immigration stations," on page 165, after line 6, to insert:

Philadelphia, Pa.: The unexpended balance in the appropriation for the construction of an immigration station for the port of Philadelphia, Pa., is hereby made available for the remodeling of the detention house and administration building at said station, under the direction of the Secretary of Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Immigration Service," on page 167, after line 3, to insert:

Nothing in the proviso contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of March 3, 1917, relative to augmenting salaries of Government officials from outside sources shall prevent receiving reimbursements for services of immigration officials incident to the inspection of aliens in foreign contiguous territory, and such reimbursement shall be credited to the appropriation, "Expenses of regulating immigration."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 167, after line 11, to insert:

The limitation specified in the act approved August 1, 1914 (38 Stat., p. 666), upon the compensation of the Commissioner of Immigration at the port of New Orleans, La., is hereby removed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States Housing Corporation," on page 170, line 17, after the word "others," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$89,425," so as to read:

WOMEN IN INDUSTRY.

To enable the Secretary of Labor to continue the investigation touching women in industry, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 172, after line 6, to insert:

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE.

To perfect an organization that can adequately mobilize and direct the workers required to harvest the wheat crop in Oklahoma, Nebraska, Kansas, and the Dakotas, $15,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment. On page 172, in lieu of the committee amendment in lines 7 to 10, inclusive, I move to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of Labor to foster, promote, to develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, to advance their opportunities for profitable employment by maintaining a national system of employment offices in the several States and political subdivisions thereof, and to coordinate the public employment offices throughout the country by furnishing and publishing information as to opportunities for employment and by maintaining a system for clearing labor between the several States, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official station together with their per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, supplies and equipment, telegraph and telephone service, and printing and binding, $400,000: Provided, That the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended to perfect an organization that can adequately mobilize and direct the workers required to harvest the wheat crop in Oklahoma, Nebraska, Kansas, and the Dakotas.

Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations has made no provision in this bill for the Employment Service except that embraced in the amendment for which my amendment is offered as a substitute. The provision reported by the committee creates a fund of $15,000, and limits its application to the organization and mobilization of a force to harvest the wheat crop in five States.

I believe that conditions throughout the country respecting employment, production, and manufacture justify and make necessary some provision for the Employment Service. A large number of Senators are interested in this provision, and have asked me to notify them in the event the controversy should be reached. Unless the chairman of the committee feels justified in accepting the amendment, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum in order to give those Senators the opportunity to be present during the discussion before presenting fully my views regarding the amendment.

This whole matter was very fully discussed more than once last year. The Senate at that time indicated its opposition to the abolishment of the Employment Service by an overwhelming vote, practically a unanimous vote. Unless, therefore, the Senator feels himself in a position to indicate his acquiescence in this amendment, in order that Senators who have expressed a desire to be present and participate in the discussion may have an opportunity, I shall be compelled to suggest the absence of a quorum; and I will do that before continuing my remarks on the amendment, in order that Senators who may come in hereafter may have an opportunity of hearing the discussion.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senator will not insist on offering the amendment as a substitute for the amendment referred to, because that amendment was offered at the request of the department, and was requested as an addition to the amount recommended by the House committee.

I think I may say, without any breach of the rules, that in the committee I urged the inclusion in the bill of the amendment which I suppose the Senator has offered. I have been out on a conference committee, and do not know just what has been offered.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? The Senator was in favor of an amendment on the subject, as was the chairman of the committee, but not as presented.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know what the Senator has presented, but I was in favor of a provision in the bill to maintain this farm labor organization; but the amendment I offered was offered in addition to the general one in order to help in the five States referred to, the conditions there being such that the department said this separate amount would be required and sent up an estimate for it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered does not prejudice the proposition of the Senator from Kansas; for, in fact, it embraces the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. My amendment goes much further and is much more comprehensive than the provision which the Senator from Kansas, I understand, is responsible for, and which is the provision for which I have offered my amendment as a substitute.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator the amount carried in his amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON. The amount carried in my amendment is $400,000, the amount which was appropriated last year.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator suggests the acceptance of the amendment. Of course the chairman of the committee has not the slightest objection to having the roll called and having a full attendance of the Senate, but I think it would be well if the Senator would let us pass over that amendment and take it up when we finish the reading of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to doing that. I think that would be a very good course to pursue.

Mr. WARREN. In the meantime perhaps I shall have an opportunity to discuss the matter with the Senator. I do not believe the committee has a disposition to oppress unduly any branch of the Government; but, of course, conditions change a little from year to year. I think, whatever is done in this respect, we ought to give it a little consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming and the possibility that an informal agreement may be reached which will hasten the conclusion of the consideration of this bill and the disposition of this matter, I have no objection whatever to passing over this amendment to a future time.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have no objection to passing it over, but I wanted to make this statement, because I shall probably be absent on a conference and shall not be able to attend the session this afternoon.

Personally, I hope the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Arkansas may reach an agreement, and if they can not, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. I want to make that statement for fear I shall not be here when the vote is taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 172, after line 10, to insert:

Department of State: Not exceeding $50,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the War Trade Board for the fiscal year 1920 is made available for the fiscal year 1921 for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 173, after line 2, to insert:

Capitol police: For purchasing and supplying uniforms to Capitol police, $8,000, one-half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate, and one-half by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 173, after line 18, to insert:

Senate, contingent expenses: For repairs, improvements, equipment, and supplies for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended from the contingent fund of the Senate, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, $41,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 174, to insert:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 174, after line 5, to insert:

For the Capitol: For continuing the work of restoring the decoration on the walls of the first-floor corridors in the Senate wing of the Capitol, to be expended under the direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 174, after line 10, to insert:

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items, and supplies, and for all necessary personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 174, after line 15, to insert:

For furniture for the Senate Office Building and for labor and material incident thereto and repairs thereof, window shades, awnings, carpets, glass for windows and bookcases, desk lamps, window ventilators, name plates for doors and committee tables, electric fans, and so forth, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 191, line 5, after the word "buildings," to insert "in the District of Columbia," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That hereafter it shall be the duty of the head of each department and independent establishment of the Government to submit to Congress annually in the Book of Estimates, a statement giving for each of the Government-owned buildings in the District of Columbia under their respective jurisdiction the following information for the preceding fiscal year: The location and valuation of each building, the purpose or purposes for which used, and the cost of care, maintenance, upkeep, and operation thereof per square foot of floor space.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 191, after line 10, to insert:

SEC. 4. Any journal, magazine, periodical, or similar publication which is now being issued by a department or establishment of the Government may, in the discretion of the head thereof, be continued, within the limitation of available appropriations or other Government funds, until June 30, 1921, when, if it shall not have been specifically authorized by Congress before that date, such journal, magazine, periodical, or similar publication shall be discontinued; hereafter no other journal, magazine, periodical, or similar publication shall be issued in any form by any department or establishment of the Government without specific authority therefor from Congress; all such journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications shall be devoted exclusively to the work which the department or establishment issuing the same is required by law to do and shall not contain any commercial advertisements.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 192, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 5. Paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of section 210 of the transportation act of 1920 approved February 28, 1920, are hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 210. (a) For the purpose of enabling carriers by railroad subject to the interstate-commerce act properly to serve the public during the transition period immediately following the termination of Federal control, any such carrier may, at any time after the passage of this act, and before the expiration of two years after the termination of Federal control make application to the commission for a loan from the United States to meet its maturing indebtedness, or to provide itself with equipment or other additions and betterments, setting forth the amount of the loan; the term for which it is desired; the purpose of the loan and the use to which it will be applied; the present and prospective ability of the applicant to repay the loan and meet the requirements of its obligations in that regard; the character and value of the security offered; and the extent to which the public convenience and necessity will be served. The application shall be accompanied by statements showing such facts in detail as the commission may require with respect to the physical situation, ownership, capitalization, indebtedness, contract obligations, operation, and earning power of the applicant, together with such other facts relating to the propriety and expediency of granting the loan applied for, and the ability of the applicant to make good the obligation as the commission may deem pertinent to the inquiry.

"(b) If the commission, after such hearing and investigation, with or without notice, as it may direct, finds that the making, in whole or in part, of the proposed loan by the United States, for one or more of the aforesaid purposes, is necessary to enable the applicant properly to meet the transportation needs of the public, and that the prospective earning power of the applicant and the character and value of the security offered are such as to furnish reasonable assurance of the applicant's ability to repay the loan within the time fixed therefor, and to meet its other obligations in connection with such loan the commission shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury its findings of such facts; also the amount of the loan which is to be made; the time, not exceeding 15 years from the making thereof, within which it is to be repaid; the terms and conditions of the loan, including the security to be given for repayment; that the prospective earning power of the applicant, together with the character and value of the security offered, furnish, in the opinion of the commission, reasonable assurance of the applicant's ability to repay the loan within the time fixed therefor and reasonable protection to the United States; and that the applicant, in the opinion of the commission, is unable to provide itself with the funds necessary for the aforesaid purposes from other sources.

"(c) Upon receipt of such certificate from the commission the Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately, or as soon as practicable, make a loan of the amount recommended in such certificate out of any funds in the revolving fund provided for in this section and accept the security prescribed therefor by the commission. All such loans shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to be placed to the credit of said revolving fund. The form of obligation to be entered into shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the time, not exceeding 15 years from the making thereof, within which such loan is to be repaid, the security which is to be taken therefor, and the terms and the conditions of the loan shall be in accordance with the findings and the certificate of the commission."

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to make an inquiry concerning this section, as to whether there is any change in existing law other than extending the time from 5 years to 15 years for the repayment of these loans?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it is an exact copy of the bill which was reported from the Committee on Commerce by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] in behalf of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and I understand that it changes existing law by extending the time from 5 years to 15 years.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator understands there is no other change?

Mr. SMOOT. That is all, I understand.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask that it be passed over until I can have an opportunity to look it up.

Mr. WARREN. I think that is all it amounts to. I understand it was passed on by the committees both of the House and the Senate, and we only propose to carry out what is the desire and what seemed to us to be right.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no question about it, but I would like to have a chance to look it over.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 194, after line 19, to insert:

SEC. 6. The heads of the several executive departments and other governmental establishments in the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to furnish to such civilian employees under their respective jurisdiction as have come to the District of Columbia since April 6, 1917, whose services are no longer required and whose employment may be terminated by the Government without delinquency or misconduct on their part, or who may resign from their positions, from the day of the passage of this act to July 1, 1920, inclusive, a railroad ticket only from the District of Columbia to the place from which they accepted employment or to their legal residence, as the employee may elect. Such transportation must be applied for within 10 days after the termination of service and shall be used within 5 days after issuance unless an extension of time on account of illness be granted by the proper authority. Any person who shall sell, exchange, or transfer such transportation for the use of another, or any person who shall unlawfully receive or accept such transportation, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100. The expenses authorized by this act shall be paid from the appropriations for the support of the services in which such persons are employed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 195, after line 17, to insert:

SEC. 7. Hereafter no department or other Government establishment shall dispose of any typewriting machines by sale, exchange, or as part payment for another typewriter that has been used less than three years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 195, after line 21, to strike out:

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

SEC. 4. PAR. 1. That (a) there is created in the office of the President a bureau of the budget. There shall be in the bureau a director and an assistant director, who shall be appointed by the President and receive salaries of $10,000 and $7,500 a year, respectively. The assistant director shall perform such duties as the director may designate, and during the absence or incapacity of the director or during a vacancy in the office of director he shall act as director.

(b) The director, with the approval of the President, shall appoint and fix the compensation of such employees and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, furniture, office equipment, other supplies, and necessary expenses of the office as may from time to time be provided for by Congress. All employees in the bureau whose compensation is less than $5,000 a year shall be appointed from lists of eligibles furnished by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations: Provided, however, That honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines shall be given a preference in the making of appointments.

(c) No person appointed by the director shall be paid a salary in excess of $5,000 a year, and not more than three persons appointed by him shall be paid a salary at that rate.

PAR. 2. (A) The bureau of the budget shall assist the President in the performance of the powers conferred upon him by this act. The bureau shall also make a careful investigation of all provisions of law dealing in any way with the preparation and transmission to Congress of estimates, and the preparation and submission to Congress of financial data of any character, in order to determine what changes should be made in such provisions of law to the end that all requirements in respect to the reporting to Congress of financial data and estimates shall be brought together in one place, coordinated, revised, and brought into harmony with the alternative budget which the President is by paragraph 6 required to submit to Congress. The results of such investigation shall be embodied in a report or reports to the President, who may transmit to Congress such report or reports, or any part thereof, with such recommendations regarding the action which in his opinion should be taken upon the matters covered by such reports.

(b) All departments, bureaus, boards, commissions, offices, agencies, or other establishments of the Government, except the legislative branch and the Supreme Court, shall furnish to the President such information regarding the powers, duties, activities, organizations, financial transactions, and methods of business of their respective offices as he may from time to time require of them, and the director of the bureau of the budget, or any of his assistants or employees, when duly authorized by the President, shall, for the purpose of securing such information, have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department, bureau, board, commission, office, agency, or other establishment.

PAR. 3. On a date to be fixed by the President the heads of the several executive departments and all other officers, now or hereafter required or authorized to make estimates for the public service, shall annually submit their estimates to the President instead of to the Secretary of the Treasury, and at the same time the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to the President his estimates of the needs of his department, and for the permanent appropriations not otherwise estimated for, and such estimates of the public revenues and the condition of the Treasury as the President may direct.

PAR. 4. The President shall transmit to Congress on the first day of each regular session a document to be known as the budget, which document shall contain balanced statements of the revenues and expenditures of the Government for the preceding fiscal year and of the resources and liabilities of the Treasury at the close of the year, his estimates of the revenues and expenditures of the Government for the current fiscal year and of the resources and liabilities of the Treasury at the close of the year, his estimates of the revenue and expenditure needs of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year, and how, in his opinion, these needs should be met. The estimates of expenditures for the legislative branch of the Government and the Supreme Court shall be those submitted to the President. The President shall transmit with such budget such further data regarding the financial affairs of the Government and such recommendations in relation thereto as he deems proper.

PAR. 5. Except as otherwise provided in this act, the statutes governing the contents, order, and arrangement of the estimates of appropriations and receipts, and the notes and other data submitted therewith, shall apply to the estimates submitted to the President under paragraph 3, and to the estimates for the expenditure needs of the Government when transmitted by the President under paragraph 4.

PAR. 6. The President, in addition to the budget herein required to be transmitted, shall transmit at the same time and for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, only, an alternative budget prepared in such form and according to such system of classification and itemization as is, in his opinion, most appropriate, with such explanatory notes and tables as may be necessary to show where, in such budget, the various items embraced in the budget provided for in paragraph 4 are contained. The alternative budget shall also make known the essential facts regarding the condition of the Treasury, revenues, and expenditures, appropriations, and what, in the opinion of the President, are the revenue and expenditure needs of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year, and how these needs should be met.

PAR. 7. After June 30, 1920, no estimate or request for any appropriation, and no recommendation as to how the revenue needs of the Government should be met, shall be submitted to Congress by any officer of the executive branch of the Government except the President, unless at the request of either House of Congress.

PAR. 8. After June 30, 1920, special and additional estimates may be transmitted by the President to provide (a) for expenditures under any laws passed since the transmission of the regular estimates contained in the budget and (b) for appropriations which, in his judgment, are necessary for the public service, and he shall accompany such estimates with a statement of the reasons therefor.

PAR. 9. There is created a department to be known as the accounting department, which shall be an establishment of the Government independent of the executive departments and under the control and direction of the comptroller general of the United States. The offices of Comptroller of the Treasury and Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury are abolished, to take effect July 1, 1920. All other officers and employees of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become officers and employees in the accounting department at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1920, and all books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become the property of the accounting department.

There shall be in the accounting department a comptroller general of the United States and an assistant comptroller general of the United States, who shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive salaries of $10,000 and $7,500 a year, respectively. The assistant comptroller general shall perform such duties as may be assigned to him by the comptroller general, and during the absence or incapacity of the comptroller general, or during a vacancy in that office, shall act as comptroller general. The comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general shall hold office during good behavior, but may be removed at any time by concurrent resolution of Congress after notice and hearing, when, in their judgment, the comptroller general or assistant comptroller general has been inefficient, or guilty of neglect of duty, or of malfeasance in office, or of any felony or conduct involving moral turpitude, and for no other cause and in no other manner except by impeachment.

Any comptroller general or assistant comptroller general removed in the manner herein provided shall be ineligible for reappointment to that office.

When a Comptroller General or Assistant Comptroller General attains the age of 70 years, he shall be retired from his office.

The provisions of this act relating to the Accounting Department shall be effective on July 1, 1920.

PAR. 10. All powers and duties now conferred or imposed by law upon the Comptroller of the Treasury or upon the Auditor for the Treasury Department, the Auditor for the War Department, the Auditor for the Interior Department, the Auditor for the Navy Department, the Auditor for the State and Other Departments, or the Auditor for the Post Office Department shall, so far as not inconsistent with this act, be vested in and imposed upon the Accounting Department and be exercised without direction from any other officer, and the balances certified by the Comptroller General shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government. The revision by the Comptroller General of settlements made by the six auditors referred to in this paragraph shall be discontinued, except as to settlements made before July 1, 1920.

Section 236 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 236. All claims and demands whatever by the United States or against them, and all accounts whatever in which the United States are concerned, either as debtors or creditors, shall be settled and adjusted in the Accounting Department."

PAR. 11. The offices of the six auditors enumerated in paragraph 10 shall be abolished, to take effect July 1, 1920, but the then incumbents of those offices shall be transferred, at their present salaries, to become officers of the Accounting Department. All other officers and employees of these offices shall become officers and employees in the Accounting Department at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1920. All books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of these offices shall become the property of the Accounting Department. The Accounting Department shall occupy the rooms now occuped by the Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors referred to in paragraph 10 until otherwise provided.

PAR. 12. The Comptroller General shall appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees in the department as may from time to time be provided for by Congress, and perform all other duties of a head of an independent Government establishment. All such appointments, except to positions carrying a salary of $5,000 a year, shall be made from lists of eligibles furnished by the Civil Service Commission, and in accordance with the civil service laws and regulations: Provided, however, That honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines shall be given a preference in the making of appointments. No person appointed by the Comptroller General shall be paid a salary in excess of $5,000 a year, and not more than three persons appointed by him shall be paid a salary at that rate. Until March 5, 1921, no person who at the time of the passage of this act holds office as one of the six auditors referred to in paragraph 10, and who in pursuance of paragraph 11 is transferred to the Accounting Department, shall be removed from office or have his compensation reduced, except for cause. All officers and employees of the department, whether transferred to the department in pursuance of paragraph 11 or appointed by the Comptroller General, shall perform such duties as may be assigned to them by the Comptroller General. The Comptroller General shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying on the work of the department.

PAR. 13. The Comptroller General shall investigate, at the seat of government or elsewhere, all matters relating to the receipts and disbursement of public funds, and shall make to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the Accounting Department, containing recommendations concerning the legislation he may deem necessary to facilitate the prompt and accurate rendition and settlement of accounts and concerning such other matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds as he may think advisable. In such regular report, or in special reports at any time when Congress is in session, he shall make recommendations looking to greater economy or efficiency in public expenditures. He shall make such investigations and reports as shall be ordered by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenue, appropriations, or expenditures. The Comptroller General shall also, at the request of any such committee, direct assistants from his office to furnish the committee such aid and information as the committee may request. The Comptroller General shall specially report to the Congress every expenditure or contract made by any head of a department in any year in excess of the appropriation to such department and in violation of law.

All departments, bureaus, boards, commissions, offices, agencies, or other establishments of the Government, except the legislative branch and the Supreme Court, shall furnish to the Comptroller General such information regarding the powers, duties, activities, organization, financial transactions, and methods of business of their respective offices as he may from time to time require of them; and the Comptroller General, or any of his assistants or employees when duly authorized by him, shall, for the purpose of securing such information, have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department, bureau, board, commission, office, agency, or other establishment. The authority contained in this paragraph shall not be applicable to expenditures made under the provisions of section 291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

PAR. 14. The Civil Service Commission shall establish an eligible register for accountants for the Accounting Department, and the examinations of applicants for entrance upon such register shall be based upon questions approved by the Comptroller General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill has been completed. Are there any further committee amendments?

Mr. WARREN. The committee has one or two amendments. On page 120, line 4, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 120, line 4, after the word "improvement," insert the following:

Including not exceeding $2,500 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of a motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicle for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work.

So as to make the paragraph read:

Rocky Mountain National Park, Colo.: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement, including not exceeding $2,500 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of a motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicle for use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. There was one amendment laid over in order that the chairman of the committee and I might have an opportunity of conferring regarding it. We have not had that opportunity yet, and there are some amendments which I desire to offer to the bill relative to other subjects. I suppose we might proceed now to the consideration of other amendments, leaving that committee amendment for future consideration.

Mr. WARREN. Possibly some of those amendments might affect those laid over.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendments I desire to offer relate to the appropriation respecting the Panama Canal, and I do not think any matter has been laid over concerning that subject.

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. ROBINSON. On page 188, line 5, I move to strike out "$7,531,851" and to insert in lieu thereof "$9,094,141."

Mr. President, this amendment relates to the provisions in the bill for the maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal. The estimate submitted was for $15,601,407, and it embraced a large number of new projects, which the governor of the Canal Zone and others charged with responsibility in connection with the maintenance and operation of the canal thought were essential for the proper conduct of the affairs of the canal.

The amendment which I offer eliminates all new projects except two. The first of those projects is a filtration plant at Gatun, and the second is for the construction of an oil crib and lines. The first new project, the filtration plant, it is estimated, will cost $1,074,290. The second project, it is estimated, will cost $488,000, making a total of $1,562,290, which my amendment, if agreed to, would add to the item for maintenance and operation of the canal.

It is to be observed that this eliminates items for new projects estimated for aggregating approximately six and a half million dollars.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that the matter he speaks of was considered by the committee, and I understand perfectly what the Senator alludes to. The House thought that possibly it could go over for a year; in fact, they insisted on putting in the smaller figures. The Senate committee felt justified in accepting the figures from the House for the present year; but if the Senator from Arkansas thinks the amendment should go in, I shall not object to it. I am willing that it shall go in, and we shall do the best we can with it in conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator. I feel sure that it should go in. In view of the statement of the Senator from Wyoming, I do not want to take the further time of the Senate in discussing this item, except to say that the existing filtration plant there is totally inadequate to meet the requirements of a military post and other public uses which have been laid upon the plant, and that, in my judgment, it is indispensable to the proper operation of the canal. I thank the Senator.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, another amendment which I desire to suggest is in respect to sanitation. The appropriation carried in the bill for sanitation is $850,000. The estimate was $1,265,406. I desire to offer an amendment increasing the amount available for sanitation from $850,000 to $1,000,000, an increase of $150,000.

I think the Senator from Wyoming is familiar with the facts which were fully set forth in the hearings respecting this amendment, and I hope that he will pursue the same course regarding it that he did with the amendment last agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that in the hearings upon this item of sanitation, quarantine, hospitals, and medical aid and support of the insane and of lepers, it was clearly developed that the estimate of $1,265,406 was not necessary, and the department itself said they could get along with a million dollars.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. But even in the statements made that there should be an increase from $850,000 to $1,000,000 it did not appear to the committee that it was a real necessity. It was for that reason that the committee agreed to the amount of $850,000, as provided by the House.

If the Senator has any additional evidence that was not before the committee it would be well to present it; but it did not seem to me that the case was an urgent one, and as long as we were trying to keep appropriations down as much as possible the committee decided that $850,000 was ample for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. ROBINSON. In addition to the testimony that was submitted to the committee, with which the Senator from Utah and the Sentaor from Wyoming are, of course, familiar, I wish to call attention to the statement made by the governor of the Canal Zone, who, in expressing the opinion that a million dollars will be adequate or scarcely adequate for the purpose, makes this statement:

> The proposed appropriation of $850,000 for sanitation gives nothing to cover increased cost of both subsistence and medical supplies or to cover increased salaries which have been essential to keep doctors and nurses at the Isthmus. Minimum amount with which the sanitation department can furnish hospital, medical, sanitary, and quarantine service is $1,150,000, of which $1,000,000 should be appropriated this year, and $150,000 will be obtained through payment of its bills by the Republic of Panama.

In view of that statement, considered in connection with the evidence which was before the committee, I think that the amendment ought to be agreed to. It is not a very large item, speaking comparably, and it is for the maintenance of a service there that is not only indispensable but is remarkably efficient. I think that the sanitation service on the Canal Zone, and particularly that which relates to the hospital service, is the equal of any that is maintained anywhere in the world, if it is not the very best in the world. It has done a great deal toward bringing about satisfactory living conditions among the people who reside there and who are employed by the Government in the conduct of Government operations.

I hope the Senator from Utah will not oppose this small amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. All that the Senator says about the sanitation and the hospital regulations on the Panama Canal Zone is known by everyone who has visited the canal. Not only that, but I think it is acknowledged by every country in the world that it has been a remarkable accomplishment.

Another reason why the committee did not increase the amount from $850,000 to a million dollars was that $850,000 was the amount that was appropriated for the present fiscal year. The work has been carried on under the increased cost of everything for this year with the $850,000. The time has arrived when we must not increase appropriations. The House thought, and also the Appropriations Committee of the Senate thought, that it was treating the government of the Panama Canal Zone just as well as it was possible to do to give them the same appropriation they had last year.

I acknowledge that they have done a wonderful work and the results have been remarkable, but it has been done on a less appropriation than $850,000. Last year we did raise it to $850,000 on account of the additional cost and expense that not only falls upon the Panama Canal but upon all the other agencies of the Government.

Really, I hope the Senator from Arkansas will not press this matter. I feel that if I were going to be favorable to increase of appropriations at all, it would be on just such items as this, and particularly upon the Panama Canal Zone; but I have been convinced beyond question of doubt that they can get along with $850,000, and if they can do so we should not increase the amount.

Mr. ROBINSON. While the conclusion of the Senator from Utah differs from my own conclusion, the facts stated in his argument for the amendment, when analyzed, are even more persuasive than my own. The sole argument that he makes in justification of opposition to this increase is that the amount appropriated last year was $850,000, and that he does not want to increase the appropriation.

If it had been the policy of the committee to limit all appropriations this year to the amount appropriated last year in making provision for the various departments of the Government, there would be force in his suggestion; but to pick out the most meritorious service and penalize it and make it sustain the increased cost of subsistence and materials while increasing appropriations for other less beneficial purposes, it seems to me is questionable, if not objectionable, policy.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. We have in a great many cases cut amounts to less than last year, and our endeavor has been absolutely to cripple no industry, but to cut down to actual necessities in the most economical way in carrying on these various projects.

If the Senator thinks that a million dollars is necessary for this, and we are able in conference to convince the House that the amount should be made a million dollars, I have not the slightest objection to accepting it, so far as I am concerned. I do not wish the Senator to be cut off in his statement, because we may have to turn to the RECORD to the Senator's remarks; so if he has anything further to say on this subject, I do not wish to cut him off.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think I have stated fairly clearly the substance of the argument in favor of the amendment and I am ready for a vote upon it.

Mr. WARREN. I will accept the amendment on the part of the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the chairman of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. There are two other amendments that I wish to suggest to the chairman of the committee. I am sure he is familiar with the appropriation respecting the civil government of the Canal Zone. The estimate for that was $1,265,406. The appropriation carried is $900,000. The authorities responsible for the conduct of affairs of the civil government in the Canal Zone say that they need at least $1,045,000, which is an increase of $145,000 over the amount carried in the bill.

The governor of the Canal Zone, after being informed that the committee had retained the House item, makes this declaration respecting the amendment:

> If reasonably satisfactory service is to be rendered, it is essential that the appropriation for civil government be increased to $1,045,000 and appropriations for sanitation to $1,000,000. The additional $145,000 for civil government will permit the retention of present police force at salaries now received, based on pay of Washington police force; permit establishment of double-platoon system for firemen, as found necessary in Washington, and just as essential here, with compensation of force based on Washington compensation as authorized by Panama Canal act; permit increase in number of school-teachers, required for additional pupils next year, with increased pay following increases included in District bill. This amount, however, will require cutting out of all equipment and reducing to minimum all incidental expense items.

That is the only additional information I have with respect to that item, save what was submitted to the committee.

Mr. WARREN. I do not feel that I can accept that on the part of the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. In view of the statement of the chairman of the committee and other statements by Senators about me, I withdraw the amendment.

I have one further amendment to offer. On page 188, after line 19, I move to strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "to be available until expended."

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator wish to have that available until expended, or does he wish to have it immediately available?

Mr. ROBINSON. To be available until expended. This is an important amendment. The Senator from Wyoming well understands its effect.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Beginning with line 22, page 8, it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 9 on page 9, and to insert the following:

Foremen draftsmen, architectural draftsmen, and apprentice draftsmen, structural engineers and draftsmen; mechanical, sanitary, electrical, heating and ventilating, and illuminating engineers and draftsmen; computers and estimators, supervising superintendents, superintendents and junior superintendents of construction, and inspectors, not to exceed the sum of $487,500; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to fix the compensation of the foregoing classes of employees at rates not in excess of the maximum rates paid in other executive departments or independent establishments of the Government for the same or similar character of service.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall have to make a point of order against that amendment. It has not been estimated for. The matter which is involved has been very carefully considered by the committee.

Mr. STERLING. I do not believe the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly it is. It is a proposition to add an appropriation of a certain amount of money to the bill, for which there is no estimate. No committee has reported in favor of the amendment, and the amendment has not been introduced and sent to the committee a day previously to its introduction. The amendment is undoubtedly subject to a point of order on any one of several grounds.

Mr. STERLING. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming if he will not withhold the point of order until I may make a statement in order to explain the situation?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly; I will withhold the point of order in order to enable the Senator from South Dakota to make his explanation.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it seems to me that this amendment is most just and is applicable to the bill. A reading of the bill will show that on its face the increase in the salaries of this particular class of employees should be greater than can be paid under the terms of the bill. As I read the first part of the bill pertaining to this class of employees it reminds me of the old-time salaries, in antebellum days, before increase of salaries had been granted to different classes of employees. The language in question, found in the bill, reads as follows:

Foremen draftsmen, architectural draftsmen, and apprentice draftsmen, at rates of pay from $840 to $2,500 per annum; structural engineers and draftsmen, at rates of pay from $840 to $2,500 per annum.

Men of that class, who it is required shall have the attainments which are necessary in order to do that kind of work, are put upon salaries ranging from $840 to $2,500 per annum. In view of the increase of salaries and compensation all along the line, it seems to me that these employees are unjustly treated by the terms of the pending bill.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the result of the action of the committee in appropriating for salaries as provided in the bill. I read from a statement from the Office of the Supervising Architect:

First. The present technical force of the Supervising Architect's Office is composed of two sections or portions, namely: The regular force, known as the Office of the Supervising Architect, and a separate force, known as the hospital section.

The regular force, or Office of the Supervising Architect, technical men prepare plans, specifications, etc., for the usual run of Federal buildings, such as post offices, courthouses, etc., and are paid from appropriations covered by the sundry civil bill, which limits the salary of these technical men to a maximum of $2,500 per annum.

In addition to this class of employees or this particular force there is what is known as "the hospital section."

The hospital section consists of technical men who specialize on preparing plans, specifications, etc., for hospitals or sanatoria for the United States Public Health Service, to accommodate the soldiers, sailors, marines, etc. This technical force is paid from moneys appropriated for the Public Health Service, and there is no such limitation as required in the Office of the Supervising Architect, nor is this force subject to civil-service requirements.

Here we have two offices under the same department, and practically in the same room, with two conditions governing the salaries, and yet the men do similar work.

The result, as a whole, is that—

Owing to the difficulty in obtaining technical men unless they are paid a salary equal to that paid outside the Government service, the hospital section, since legislation permits it, will be forced to pay the prevailing outside salaries for its men. Up to the time that the technical men in the Office of the Supervising Architect began to resign they were transferred from one section to the other as was necessary to expedite the more important projects; but the situation is fast drawing to a point where this will no longer be possible, and as a result the Office of the Supervising Architect will practically be deserted, and justly so, thus destroying an organization it has taken years to perfect.

The regular force of the Office of the Supervising Architect has some of its technical men in the field, and in that capacity these men are classed as superintendents. The Congress, as expressed in the sundry civil bill, has considered it necessary and wise to increase the limit of compensation for this class of technical men, and justly so.

And they have increased that limit, Mr. President, by the terms of this bill, for it is provided that the supervising superintendents and junior superintendents of construction and inspectors shall receive rates of pay not from $840 to $2,500 per annum but from $2,000 to $3,500 per annum; these men who are designated as superintendents and who are in the field are to get these rates of pay, and yet we have this impossible condition: Many of the men who are in the field and who are classed as superintendents, junior superintendents, and so forth, are the men who have received their training and experience right here in Washington in the Office of the Supervising Architect; they are still a part of the technical force of that office; and yet Congress increases the limit of their compensation but fails to increase or to remove the limitations as to compensation now prevailing for the remainder of the same force in the same office.

Mr. President, the object of the amendment is simply to allow latitude to the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the pay of and to give just compensation to the men who are yet in the the Office of the Supervising Architect—that is its entire purpose—and to put them on an equality with the superintendents and the junior superintendents who are in the field and who go from the office to the field. Their work is interchangeable, as it were, a part of it being in the office and a part of it being in the field. They come back here and are in the office, and while in the office it is apparent that their pay is to be from $840 to $2,500 per annum, while as superintendents or junior superintendents in the field they receive from $2,000 to $3,500 per annum. They are allowed that under the terms of the pending bill.

I think the inequality is one which ought to be adjusted. In doing so, we shall simply be doing what we should do in order to retain these competent men, these technical men, in their places. Otherwise the office will be demoralized and will be without a sufficient force.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am compelled to make the point of order against the amendment. It affects the subject of salaries and provides for a lump-sum appropriation for the entire department. It is not estimated for by the department, according to the estimates received by the committee. It changes existing law, and embraces the whole paragraph. In fact, it is subject to practically all the points of order. Therefore I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should merely like to say that the question which the Senator from Wyoming has raised as to the appropriation affected being a lump-sum appropriation should be of no avail now. I have before me the lump-sum appropriations provided for the War Department and the Navy Department, which are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

Page 56, office of the Coast Guard	$8,000

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Page 101, Bureau of Steam Engineering	184,000
Page 102, Bureau of Construction and Repair	275,000
Page 105, Bureau of Yards and Docks	200,000

And so forth.

Mr. WARREN. I make the point of order against the amendment, Mr. President, and I should like to have a ruling on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the point of order must be sustained.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, on page 106 I move to strike out the proviso beginning in line 20. I have spoken to the chairman of the committee about the amendment and explained

it. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate further than to say that the reason I ask that the proviso be stricken out is that in effect it amounts to passing judgment upon a matter which is in controversy in the courts. The water users feel very earnestly that they should be heard before they are in effect judged. I do not wish to discuss the matter, however, if the amendment is not to be opposed. My motion is to strike out the words:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for drainage except in irrigation districts formed under State laws and upon the execution of agreements for the repayment to the United States of the costs thereof.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the matter is an Idaho proposition, and the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment on the part of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 34, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

Freedman's Savings & Trust Co.: To enable the commissioner of the Freedman's Savings & Trust Co., who is hereby authorized and directed, under such regulations as such commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, to pay, notwithstanding the limitation provided by law for the presentation of claims and payment of dividends to each depositor in the Freedman's Savings & Trust Co. whose accounts have been examined and audited in accordance with existing law, or to the heirs or legal representatives of such depositors, a sum equal to the amount by which (1) the amount found to be due such depositor at the time such company became insolvent, exceeds (2) the amount which has been paid as dividends to such depositor or for or on his behalf on account of such depositors, $1,291,744.50, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no money shall be paid hereunder (1) for or on account of any claim or account which has been sold, transferred, or assigned by such depositor or his heirs or legal representative or, (2) except as may be provided by such commissioner, any compensation for services rendered in connection with the collection or payment of any sums claimed by or due to such depositor or his heirs or personal representative.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the amendment which has just been offered by the Senator from Oregon of course can not under the rules go on this bill. It is a claim, and of course has not been estimated for. It is one of those matters which the oldest of us, perhaps, may remember as children. It has been considered in former times, and has once or twice passed one body, but never has become a law. It should be considered upon its merits alone. I shall have to make the point of order against the amendment, although I do not wish to take the Senator from Oregon off the floor if he desires to explain it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I assume that the parliamentary situation referred to by the Senator from Wyoming obtains. However, I may say briefly that amendments similar to the one now offered by me have twice passed the Senate, although I think have failed in the House for various reasons. If I recall correctly the history of this proposed legislation, a similar amendment has been attached to the sundry civil bill heretofore, but the subject matter has never been embraced in a separate measure and formally introduced here. It does not matter how ancient it is; it is still full of merit; and the colored people who deposited their money in these institutions should be paid. I do not think the chairman will deny the justice of the claim presented by the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. It does not rest with me to pass upon the claim. Of course I looked up the matter when I was chairman for six years of the Committee on Claims. Sometimes, in the last moments of the consideration of the sundry civil bill, my predecessors may have let things go in which transgressed the rule and which lived until they got to conference, and then, of course, they went out; but if we should open these regular supply bills to claims that are made we never would get anywhere with them. It has been tried in former years. I have seen appropriation bills sent back here vetoed by the President because there were claims in them. Hence the rule of this body is very specific that claims can not go on the appropriation bills.

I shall be compelled to make the point of order.

Mr. McNARY. I submit to the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, on page 89 of the bill, line 15, after the paragraph providing for the pay of registers and receivers, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 89, at the end of line 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the President is authorized to consolidate the offices of register and receiver at Broken Bow, Nebr., and to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register for said office. All the powers, duties, obligations, and penalties imposed by law upon both the register and receiver of said office shall be exercised by and imposed upon the register, whose compensation shall be a salary of $500 per annum, together with the fees and commissions otherwise allowable to both register and receiver, but the salary, fees, and commissions of such register shall not exceed $3,000 per annum.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I have no objection to this amendment, as I understand that the Interior Department would approve of the consolidation in this case. I introduced a general bill on this subject, consolidating the registers and receivers in all land offices, and I thought it would save considerable money to the Government. That bill was referred to the Interior Department, and Secretary Lane made an adverse report on it; but in that report he called attention to certain land offices in the United States where perhaps it would be wise to make the consolidation, and, as I remember, this was one of them. I am quite sure the Senator knows the land-office business of his State well enough to say whether or not this can be done by consolidation, and I think myself it can.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, Mr. President; that is the situation there. The business has fallen off so much that it does not provide fees for two men, or really work for two men; and the consolidation at Broken Bow is, therefore, a very desirable thing from the standpoint of the Government.

I will say that the amendment which I have sent to the desk is one suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, before whom I laid the matter yesterday. It is in slightly different form from what I had in mind, and it is different from what was incorporated in the bill last year in regard to an Alaska land office, but he states that this is in better form and will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to say that I should like to see this made general, so as to give the Secretary of the Interior authority to consolidate offices wherever he deems it wise to do so. At the suggestion of the present Secretary of the Interior, I introduced a bill along those lines two or three weeks ago. I shall not, however, interfere with the Senator's amendment, because I think it is a step in the right direction. I should like to see general legislation on the subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My judgment is that it might be done in a general way, but I will say to the Senator that there are some land offices concerned which Senators will object to having consolidated, and therefore I made this apply only to this particular situation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that is the trouble. I think the discretion ought to be placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, who is acquainted with all the facts with reference to the various offices, and whenever he thinks it is to the public interest to consolidate the offices he ought to have authority to do it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am disposed to agree with the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I say, I shall not interfere with the Senator's amendment, but I wanted to express the hope that we would have general legislation along those lines.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Washington that he offer the bill he has introduced as a substitute for the pending motion to amend and make it general.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not any doubt that there would be objection if that were done, and it would be clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, suppose there were objection? If the Senator expects to get anywhere with his bill, here is a good opportunity.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It would be clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I will state that I should make the point of order if nobody else did.

Mr. NORRIS. The other amendment is subject to a point of order to the same extent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I had this bill referred to the Public Lands Committee in the hope that the committee would give the matter careful consideration and early consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that personally I am in favor of the bill. The bill to which I had reference, which I introduced about a year or two ago, I forget which, provided directly that the consolidation should take place in all of the land offices; but, as I understand, the bill that has been introduced by the Senator from Washington gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to consolidate them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I am in favor of that bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should just like to say, upon the information I have from my experience with these land offices, that the authority ought to be general, regardless of the amount of business that is done at any place. There are at present two heads at every land office. They are equal in authority. There ought to be only one. In case of a contest, if they disagree, there is no decision.

The matter has to go on up, the same as an appeal would have to go up. I would favor, in preference to either one of these propositions, the bill of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, could not the President do that under the Overman bill?

Mr. NORRIS. I presume he could, probably; but there are some of us, at least, who hope that within a reasonable length of time that power may be taken away. This ought to be done as a general proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 95, after line 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

Imperial Valley irrigation investigation: For investigation and surveys of irrigation possibilities, Imperal Valley, Calif., including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for all other expenses authorized by the act of May 18, 1920 (Public, No. —), there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $20,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not object to the appropriation of the $20,000, because the law has just passed Congress and was approved on the 18th of this month; but there is too much language there. It takes too much with it, and, if the Senator will permit me, I shall offer an amendment in place of it on the part of the committee that will cover the appropriation.

Mr. PHELAN. That is quite agreeable to me. This is in compliance with the law passed by Congress.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will agree to the amendment which I now send to the desk in place of what he sent up, the committee will accept the amendment. I think, however, the Senator has not indicated a good place for it. I think page 110, after line 14, would be a better place.

Mr. PHELAN. I accept the suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 110, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

Imperial Valley irrigation investigation: For investigation and surveys of irrigation possibilities, Imperial Valley, Calif., including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for all other expenses authorized by the act of May 18, 1920, $20,000.

Mr. WARREN. That exactly carries out the law.

Mr. PHELAN. There is no importance in leaving out the words "there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated"?

Mr. WARREN. No; the whole bill appropriates money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no moneys there, the Senator will not get this amount. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I suggest that we may expect the clerks to take care of the totals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerks will be authorized to correct the totals.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 185, after line 3, it is proposed to insert, as a new paragraph, the following:

The illustrations to accompany bound copies of memorial addresses delivered in Congress shall be made at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and paid for out of the appropriation for that bureau, or, in the discretion of the Joint Committee on Printing, shall hereafter be obtained elsewhere by the Public Printer and charged to the allotment for printing and binding for Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word of explanation. The only change in existing law is that the law to-day requires a steel engraving to accompany the bound copies of memorial addresses delivered in Congress. The family of Vice President Sherman brought the committee's attention to the fact that they would very much prefer a photogravure than a steel engraving, and ever since a photogravure of the Vice President has been printed with the memorial addresses provided by law; the families of deceased Representatives and Senators have asked that the same class of illustration be included, rather than these small steel engravings. The steel engravings cost about $500 now, and the photogravure, which is very much better, does not cost one-quarter of that amount. The only way we could have the photogravure of Vice President Sherman used was by a special resolution, and that we passed. This amendment simply provides that instead of a steel engraving an illustration can be made and the family can take their choice.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 106, at the end of line 8, insert as a separate paragraph:

For completing the investigation of Boulder Canyon Reservoir site on the Colorado River in Arizona, $50,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In connection with this amendment I ask to have read at the desk a telegram in explanation of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., May 18, 1920.

Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Appropriation of $50,000 for further investigation of Boulder Canyon dam site imperatively necessary to success of Colorado River Basin reclamation project, in which I am interested not only as governor of Arizona but as president of League of the Southwest, which organization will present matter to Congress, demonstrate its feasibility, and conclusively show how productive wealth of Nation can be enormously increased. May I not urge that you use your very best efforts to secure the passage of this appropriation, particularly in view of its nation-wide importance and tremendous possibilities involved in comparison with the sum asked.

THOMAS E. CAMPBELL,
Governor, and President League of Southwest.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I probably shall have to make a point of order against the amendment, but I do not want to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator takes me off the floor if I know a point of order is going to be made, for I have not yet fallen into the senatorial habit of talking for the purpose of getting what I say into the RECORD. I want to save myself the humiliation of talking after I know the Senator's determination to make the talk absolutely unavailing, no matter how strong I might have been able to make it. Therefore I will not ask to be heard, further than to request that the Secretary read from where I have marked down to the bottom of the page in the resolutions adopted by the convention of the League of the Southwest at Los Angeles, on April 1, 2, and 3.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Whereas it has been shown by the investigations of the Government that a great dam may be constructed at or near Boulder Canyon on the Colorado River, as proposed by ex-Secretary Lane, adequate to control the destructive floods of the Colorado River and of sufficient capacity to supply water for the irrigation of 1,500,000 acres of land in addition to that now under irrigation, with a productive capacity of $150,000,000 in wealth annually, with a livelihood for over 1,000,000 of our population; and

Whereas the power available from this reservoir will be sufficient to supply the necessary electrical energy for large portions of the States of California, Utah, Nevada, Colorado, and Arizona; and

Whereas the storage of water at this site will not in any way interfere with the future development of the river in the upper portions of its drainage basin: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the United States Reclamation Service be requested and urged to proceed with diligence with its investigations of this site with a view to its very prompt construction.

Resolved, That Congress is hereby requested to appropriate the sum of $50,000 for the use of the Reclamation Service in completing the investigation of Boulder Canyon Reservoir site, and that such appropriation be made available at once.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, just one word before the point of order is made. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, after congratulating my friend from California [Mr. PHELAN] in getting a similar provision on the bill, whether that amendment was subject to a point of order?

Mr. WARREN. That was to carry out a law already enacted, and it had been estimated for by the department specifically.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I wanted to get what I expected to be the fact so as to show in the RECORD that the committee was showing no preference.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator. Now, Mr. President, I think I ought to make a few remarks right here. The files of the committee, as well as the files of individual Senators, are full of documents similar to this telegram and the resolutions offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] from the different projects throughout the United States. These are provided for in a special way, from what you might call a special fund.

When these reclamation projects were first inaugurated there was a sort of helter-skelter method of trimming in and out, perhaps, on the floor of Congress, in one House or the other, so a law was passed which provided, instead of the department taking funds needed out of a lump sum, as was done before that time, and distributing without some more definite estimates, that they should be estimated for and go before the House, be considered there by the Committee on Appropriations, and divided and apportioned among these various projects in such a way as not to exceed the income received, and that income is obtained from the sale of public lands, the wild lands which may be taken up in various ways, and also from the payments upon the land and water in these irrigated regions.

For instance, this year our projects are seeking for more money; they all need it, without a doubt; but here is what confines the appropriations:

Under the provisions of this act no greater sum shall be expended, nor shall the United States be obligated to expend, during the fiscal year 1921, on any reclamation project appropriated for herein an amount in excess of the sum herein appropriated therefor, nor shall the whole expenditures or obligations incurred for all of such projects for the fiscal year 1921 exceed the whole amount in the "reclamation fund" for that fiscal year.

A similar provision has been in preceding bills.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That would have been true under a strict construction of the law governing the Treasury Department whether that was in this appropriation bill or not, and I would like to suggest that, as far as I am concerned, I thought then and still think that the Reclamation Service was very badly crippled by the new provision to which the chairman of the committee has alluded, to make the possibility of making homes for a million people depend on the mere question of having had an examination and an estimate of the cost of it made without expense to anybody. It is not always possible to get that estimate, and therefore the projects are never started until the matter is brought to Congress to get an estimate. The result is you have crippled the Reclamation Service and made a dollar of it go about half as far as a dollar used to go, by transferring it to the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses. I want to give notice now, for whatever such notice is worth, that at the first opportunity I shall try to see if I can not get that provision amended so as to let the irrigation business go on with some sort of order. There was not a complaint of the expenditure of money foolishly under the old régime.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I make the point of order, as the matter is not estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment on page 108.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 108, line 7, after the word "operation," insert the word "drainage," so that it will read:

Newlands project, Nevada: For operation, drainage, and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $664,000.

Mr. WARREN. The committee will accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer another amendment on the same page.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 108, line 9, to strike out "$664,000" and in lieu insert "$974,000."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the committee can not consent to that amendment, nor should I think the Senator would ask it, under the legislation which strictly forbids it, because all the funds have been allotted, and if we should put that in and pass it, it would not avail a penny for the purpose for which the Senator desires it.

Furthermore, if this were put into the bill, it might cause the Senator, or perhaps others, to understand that we have preferred it to all of the other projects duly certified up here and estimated for, as that one has been, which, under the original estimates of this year, might perhaps be considered to be in order. If the Senator will bear with me, I will say that by the passage of the oil-land leasing bill we provided that certain sums now impounded in banks to the order of the Treasurer of the United States would eventually go part to the States and part to the Reclamation Service. The Director of the Reclamation Service, desiring, as we all do who are interested in these projects, to push them along as fast as possible, entertained an idea at the time he made these estimates that that oil money would be almost immediately available, and therefore he proceeded to distribute it with the other in his original estimates. But a certain suit at law is before the court respecting many of those oil claims, and the companies have secured injunctions stopping the payment of that money, and it can not be paid out for many months yet; so the only way left, if we want any effective legislation to increase these appropriations, would be to provide by law that the Government should loan, say, $5,000,000 to the reclamation fund, on the promise that it would be refunded later out of the oil money.

That was the idea which came to the Director of the Reclamation Service at the time he submitted his estimates, but he now says that with the conditions that prevail it is simply without force to give effect to his larger estimates as he sent them in. He has stated that the bill now before us covering these projects and the various funds will be all that can be appropriated and used under the law.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I realize the situation as stated by the Senator from Wyoming, and I have observed in looking over the appropriations for reclamation projects that there has been no increases over the House provisions. Mr. Davis, Director of the Reclamation Service, before the committee of the House stated the objects of these allotments. He asked in that estimate for $974,000, and the committee gave him $664,000; in other words, they gave him an insufficient amount to carry out the work which should be carried out.

In my opinion, the chief reason for the partial failure of irrigation projects is by virtue of the fact that they never are given enough money to handle them on a business basis. They give them enough money on one occasion to put water on the land, but no money to take it off; to drain it. They give them money enough to induce the settler to go there, because they bring a ditch to his land, and then the land is often so located that it is impossible of drainage. In other words, committees of Congress in recommending the appropriation apparently pay no attention to the reasons given by the experts in their demands for money. They treat it very much like a jury does a damage suit. They do not know what the damage is, but they cut it in two several times, depending upon the appearance of the witnesses.

In the estimate of $974,000 there is $300,000 for drainage. In testifying before the committee Mr. Davis said that the project was retarded, its progress was obstructed, the costs of it were increased, the time of the return of the money to the Treasury under the revolving system was long delayed, and there was an inadequate drainage system because the water level was rising; that they were putting water on the land and it was settling there and gradually building up higher until it was making ponds all over that country; that the land was souring and vegetation was being swamped.

He said before the committee in that very hearing that it is practically impossible, by reason of the situation, for the settlers to conduct their drainage. Of course it is, because here is one settler and a mile away will be another settler, and the land between the two will be Government land. If one settler attempts to level his land he gets too much fall to it and makes a pond at the head of the other man's land below. That system of drainage has been attempted by settlers and has been found impracticable.

We often hear that these projects are not successful. Of course they are not. They are not successful because Congress has failed to support the experts who could have made them successful.

The Senator says that the whole fund is allotted and that if we add any more to this proposition some allotment will have to be neglected. That may be true, but possibly there may be some project that does not deserve the consideration that this does. There may be some project that can be skimped without destruction of the project. It seems to me that we might agree to the estimates made by the Reclamation Service, and then, if the Reclamation Service finds it has not the money in the fund, it will be time enough to question the expenditure.

I simply offer the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada, I hope, understood what I said about the estimates. These were the early estimates, and the testimony which the Senator has referred to is that given by the director away back there; but when the injunctions were served the director had stated to us directly that we could not fill them to any effect unless we made a direct loan from the Government, which we did once, as the Senator remembers, of $20,000,000.

Of course, I think the Senator would hardly wish to put himself and the State of Nevada in the position of wanting to take away from others in order to build up his own just at this moment, especially when the experts of whom he speaks and the director have acceded to this allotment as being fully liberal to the project which the Senator has in mind.

Now, the consequence would be this. I, of course, have no personal interest except that expressed by the Senator. I wish we had twice as much as even he asks for, for this and for all other projects, but we have got to cut the garment according to the cloth. We can not raise those amounts here unless we simply give it all up and raise them all, and then where are we? They are of no avail whatever under the law until the time comes when the fund can be turned over to the Reclamation Service and be allotted.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I realize, if the total appropriation is larger than the total fund, some one is going to be reduced. But unless we authorize the expenditure of the full amount of the estimate, it can not be expended. If we do authorize the full amount of the estimate, it may or may not be expended. It will not be expended if there are no funds available for it. I would rather be on the safe side and have it authorized in the event at the time of expenditure there were funds available.

The lawsuits that are now tying up the funds which they expected to get might be settled to-morrow, and if they were settled to-morrow the extra $310,000 would be available for that project. I realize that we can not get any more money than we have had in the past, but I would rather be in the safe position of having the full amount of the estimate in the event we get the fund.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator's amendment were adopted, then if the funds were received none of the other projects mentioned in the bill would get any more than they are estimated for now.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. If we are going to do anything at all, they all ought to be increased pro rata, so that if there was any more money received they would all get their share. For instance, take the Strawberry Valley project in Utah. All they have given for that great project is $86,000 this year. I am not objecting, but if we are going to increase the other projects, then I want this increased in the same proportion that any other project named in the bill is increased. That would be the only fair way to do. Therefore, it seems to me we can not pick out one here and increase it unless we increase them all.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course, I do not know anything about the other projects; that is, I do not know whether they have received the amount estimated for them or not.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there is none of them that will receive the estimate that was made in the hearings before the House committee at the time we thought we were going to get $7,000,000 to $8,000,000 of oil money. I say we can not make the appropriation, because we do not know when that money is going to be received, but we do know that it will be months before the suit will be settled.

Mr. PITTMAN. For instance, the small amount the Senator is getting for the Utah project will not accomplish any good at all?

Mr. SMOOT. I virtually agree with the Senator. Really, it will simply pay maintenance charges and probably keep up some small repairs.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then they might as well take that and turn it over to the Nevada project.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; we have to maintain it, we have to make repairs upon it, and have men there to look after it. I do not think we will spend a cent of this money on the high-line canal. The project is mapped out and recommended by the department to carry stored water into Goshen Valley, but not a cent has been provided for it, and knowing the conditions as I do, I am not going to ask it unless there are other projects that are increased.

Mr. PITTMAN. I assume that the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Utah, both members of the Committee on Appropriations, would have granted the request and the estimate of the director had it not been for the fact that here were not sufficient funds.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am not going to occupy the floor for more than a minute. I merely wish in this connection to suggest again what I suggested before, and ask those Senators experienced in the irrigation business whether it is not a fatal mistake, as the Senator's case demonstrates, to have thrown into the vast House and Senate the decision of the questions as to what should and should not receive a certain amount of money instead of leaving it, as it was left for many years, in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, without any complaint in the world of any shortage or graft or misuse of funds. Thrown in here to be guided by the two committees of the two Houses, it results in nothing being done, as it seems is the case with everything else that Congress takes hold of. There has been less done in two years since they turned it in here than had been accomplished in any one year preceding that. So I would suggest to those who claim to know something about it the propriety of seeing if by and by we can not have one head of the Reclamation Service, so as to make an equitable and fair distribution of these funds instead of having to go through the performance we are going through this morning.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Arizona. I know we have changed from a scientific system to a kind of hodge-podge system. I remember the time when we were held up by the other branch of Congress and forced into the position we are now in. I am in hopes that some day we may get back where we were.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, last December when I was in Nevada I visited the Newlands project and I found a very acute situation had arisen in regard to the drainage of that district. At the time the project was put in no drainage facilities were provided. Upon my return last winter I introduced a bill making an appropriation for the construction of drainage facilities in connection with the Newlands reclamation project in the State of Nevada. The bill carried an appropriation of $300,000.

A proviso in that bill read as follows:

Provided, That if and to the extent that other funds become available for such purpose prior to January 1, 1921, through payments into the reclamation fund established under such act of June 17, 1902, or otherwise, the unexpended balance of the appropriation provided for in this act shall cease to be available for such purpose.

Mr. President, it is absolutely necessary to have drainage facilities in the Newlands project in Nevada in order that the farmers may maintain their production. I have here an interesting map, which was furnished me by the project manager, showing that there were over 43,000 acres under cultivation, of which about 31,014 acres had crops in full production. Out of the 43,000 acres about 2,179 acres at the present time have water from 0 to 2 feet from the surface, and about 30,000 acres have water from 2 to 6 feet beneath the surface.

The bill which I introduced last winter was sent to the Secretary of the Interior, and I send to the desk a letter from him approving the bill with one amendment, changing the date from 1921 to 1922. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Interior be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The letter was read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 16, 1920.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of January 7, 1920, inclosing two bills with request for report, one of them being S. 3641, entitled "A bill making an appropriation for the construction of drainage facilities in connection with the Newlands reclamation project in the State of Nevada."

The bill proposes an appropriation of $300,000 for the purpose specified in the title.

The drainage conditions on this project require early attention, and no funds are available at this time for the purpose. An irrigation district has been organized on the project, which would be in position to make an appropriate contract with the Government to insure repayment of the expenditures.

The bill makes the money available immediately and until January 1, 1921. It also provides in the last clause that in case other funds become available before January 1, 1921, the unexpended balance of the appropriation shall cease to be available.

The usefulness of the bill would be improved if the availability of the funds were extended through the year 1921 to provide for unavoidable delays.

I therefore suggest that in both places 1921 be changed to 1922, namely, in line 5, page 1, and line 5, page 2.

In view of the circumstances detailed, I suggest favorable action upon this bill.

Cordially yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Hon. CHAS. L. MCNARY,
Chairman Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, United States Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, in view of the apparently unavoidable delay in getting action upon that bill, on May 24 I offered as a proposed amendment to the pending bill the bill to which the Secretary of the Interior refers, with the changes as suggested by him; in other words, changing the date from January 1, 1921, to January 1, 1922. As we all know, we expected to receive from the funds that were then held under the oil-leasing proposal a great deal of money for the reclamation projects. Up to date, however, we have been unable to get any of that money. The proviso which I have just read would make it impossible for the Reclamation Service to get a cent of the $300,000, provided there is any other money available. It is absolutely necessary that something be done in connection with this project at this time. If the work is not started the 694 farms on this project at this time will suffer because of the lack of drainage. It is necessary for the Director of the Reclamation Service to know whether or not he can go ahead and begin preparations to put in at the lower end of the project the canal for draining the lands. The water is gradually rising to such a height that it is water-logging that section of the project.

If my colleague will consent, I should like to have my amendment substituted in place of the amendment he has offered. It would meet the object raised and accomplish the same result.

Mr. PITTMAN. I accept the amendment of my colleague.

Mr. HENDERSON. I send to the desk the substitute which I propose for the amendment of my colleague.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Nevada.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let us first ascertain what the amendment is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In lieu of the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] it is proposed to insert the following:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000, available immediately and until January 1, 1922, to enable the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the United States Reclamation Service, to construct suitable drainage facilities in connection with the Newlands reclamation project, in the State of Nevada, and for operations incidental thereto, to be expended in conformity with the provisions of the act entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," approved June 17, 1902, and of all acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto: Provided, That if and to the extent that other funds become available for such purpose prior to January 1, 1922, through payments into the reclamation fund established under such act of June 17, 1902, or otherwise, the unexpended balance of the appropriation provided for in this act shall cease to be available for such purpose.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have here a letter which I received a few months ago from Director Davis, of the Reclamation Service, in which he says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., December 15, 1919.

Hon. CHARLES B. HENDERSON,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Responding to the inquiry you made when you called at my office this morning, I have to say that the need for drainage at the present time on the Newlands project is acute. Some of the lands are already water-logged and there is a slow and gradual rise of ground water under other lands which threatens further damage. This condition has been progressing for years and becomes all the time more acute. In view of the conditions, efforts have been made to secure local support for drainage work in order that the return of the money thus expended may be assured as required by law.

It was necessary to change the State laws to make this possible, and the changes were made. It then was necessary to organize a district of the lands affected and secure a contract which would cover the ground and assure the return of the money.

After long efforts the district has been organized and negotiations are under way to secure the proper form of contract so that under the provisions of the law this work could be undertaken. Anticipating a successful issue of these negotiations and the approval and execution of proper contracts, the estimates of appropriation for expenditures from the reclamation fund for the fiscal year in 1921 have included an item of $250,000 for expenditure for drainage on the Newlands project.

This is published in the Book of Estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1921, recently issued by the Treasury Department, and it is probable that with proper support this appropriation will be made at the present session of Congress, becoming available next July. It depends, however, upon the availability of money in the reclamation fund for this purpose, and in case the full amount estimated does not accrue to the said fund the various estimates will have to be pruned down accordingly. The passage of the coal and oil leasing bill as it recently passed the House of Representatives would insure ample funds for this purpose in the reclamation fund and provide funds sufficient to dig about 45 miles of canal.

This is about one-fourth of the total amount required for the solution of the drainage problems on the Newlands project, and it would be very desirable to have this amount increased if possible.

The supplemental estimates for reclamation work as published in the Book of Estimates, page 642, provide additional amounts for various projects where needed, and if this legislation could be passed as estimated it would permit the progress of this work at an economical rate. Legislation covering this matter is included in the bill introduced by Senator MCNARY, chairman of the Senate Committee on Irrigation, S. 3357.

Very truly, yours,

A. P. DAVIS, Director.

Mr. President, in view of the facts and the conditions as they now exist on this project, it seems to me that, in order to save to the settlers in that district the cultivated lands on which they are now growing their crops, the amendment should be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the Senator from Nevada offers his proposal as an amendment to another amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is offered as a substitute for the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, of course the amendment proposed is legislation; it has not been estimated for, and, while it might be the proper subject of a bill to be considered by the appropriate committee, it, of course, proposes new legislation and, in a way, general legislation. I shall have to make the point of order against it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I think there is a question as to whether the amendment proposes general legislation. The Senator says it is general legislation, which I question, and that it has not been estimated for; but I contend that it has been estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think it is general legislation.

Mr. WARREN. It has not been estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a horse of another color.

Mr. WARREN. And has not been reported by a standing committee, nor has it had consideration at the hands of a committee. I differ, of course, as to its being legislation——

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is legislation for a particular project, but it is not general legislation. Inasmuch, however, as it has not been estimated for nor referred to a committee, the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that it has been estimated for in the Book of Estimates, for the letter from which I just read stated that the Reclamation Service, through the Secretary of the Interior, had estimated for this expenditure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been estimated for out of the reclamation fund but not out of the General Treasury. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 3, after line 18.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the aforesaid act of August 25, 1919, shall be held to include all contracts for the construction, improvement, special repair, equipment, and furnishing of post offices and other public buildings specified in said act the bids for which were advertised for prior to April 6, 1917, but the contracts for which were not awarded until after that date, and as to such contracts claims for reimbursement may be filed within three months after the passage of this act.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall probably have to make a point of order against the amendment; but I desire to have the Senate understand something about the situation. In the regular way we enacted a law to consider certain contracts for public buildings. The law provided that between certain dates where contractors made a plain case of proof showing that they had lost money, and the amount claimed was accepted by the Treasury and certified accordingly, an appropriation would be made to meet those sums.

As in the case of all legislation that fixes dates, some one is bound to be just below or just above the specified date. The amendment relates to contracts entirely outside the dates provided by the law.

The Senator from Maine, who is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—and a very efficient chairman—has this project much at heart, and has ascertained, I hope, the amount that might be required to be met by legislation which will probably follow, but which, of course, can not be provided for on the pending appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator raise a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. WARREN. I withhold the point of order in order that the Senator from Maine may offer an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is designed to make provision for the contractors whose bids were submitted to the Treasury Department prior to April 6, 1917, but were not accepted until subsequent to that date.

Provision has already been made for all contractors whose bids were accepted on or before April 6, 1917.

The amendment proposes no new project nor does it call for any extra appropriation. I believe that, in a spirit of fairness, this Government ought to pay all of its just bills, and pay them promptly; it ought to be the best paying institution in the country. Every business man who has just bills to be paid will keep his reputation good by paying them promptly.

The whole number of claims which would come under this provision is 49, and according to the estimate of the Treasury Department, on the basis of the claims already settled, the amendment would involve an expenditure of between two hundred and three hundred thousand dollars. It would clean the entire slate, so far as the Treasury Department is concerned, and would give every contractor who submitted bids prior to the date named and whose bids were not accepted until after that date an opportunity to file his claim before the Treasury Department for adjustment.

There are 49 claims, and the contracts amount to $1,017,000, but probably not one-quarter of that amount would be extra expense. You know we were a going concern prior to the outbreak of the war. We were constructing public buildings all over the country in nearly every State. These contractors were building all over the country, and they come from 21 different States. On the outbreak of the war, when they were undertaking to complete these buildings, the different departments of the Government stepped in and took their labor—which they had arranged for at $2 and $3 and $4 a day—and paid $10 and sometimes $15 a day for it. They took their materials—the cement and the brick and the mortar and the wood and the steel and everything.

If a private individual were to file a claim against another individual of whom he had taken a contract, there is no question about his standing before the courts. He can collect the damages. In this case I believe the Government wants to pay those contractors and get this slate clean. As I say, it is a matter of probably not exceeding $300,000, probably less than $200,000.

I have here a letter addressed to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I wish to say that he has been exceedingly courteous and fair in this matter, and I hope he will not insist upon making a point of order. The letter is dated May 21, and is addressed to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee by the Secretary of the Treasury. In it he says:

> Reference is made to your request of blank date for immediate report in connection with the proposed amendment to House bill 13870 by the insertion of a provision that the act of August 25, 1919, shall be held to include the contracts for the construction, etc., of post offices and other public buildings, bids for which were advertised prior to April 6, 1917, but contracts not awarded until after that date. As appears from the context the purpose of this legislation is to provide relief for losses claimed to be due to war conditions to contractors who submitted bids for work advertised prior to the entry of the United States into the war upon which, however, contracts were not awarded until after that time.

Several of these contracts were awarded the next day after the outbreak of the war, on April 7, and all of them before July 1 following.

> From information on file in the department it is probable that there are claims of this character which are meritorious but which, under the provisions of existing law, can not receive favorable consideration. It is believed, therefore, that the legislation is justifiable. The department has no knowledge as to the number or amount of claims which might be filed under the provisions of this legislation. Their favorable consideration might necessitate an additional appropriation at some future time, but it is not probable that they would involve any additional appropriation prior to the time for submitting new estimates.

All I claim in the world is that these contractors whose bids were accepted subsequently to April 6, 1917, ought to have the same standing and status before the Treasury Department, and have the same opportunity to submit their claims for adjustment, as those whose bids were accepted on or before April 6, 1917.

The Supervising Architect has this to say:

> Previous legislation fixed a limit of time in which the contractors should file claims. This legislation will extend that time. A number of contractors did not avail themselves before, and the new legislation covers them again, because their bids were advertised before April 6 and contracts granted after. Treasury Department considers several claims filed too late as meritorious.
> Taking all contractors into consideration that could possibly come under this legislation—50. Total amount of contracts, $1,017,190.

That is a little less than I estimated. It seems to me that in a spirit of fairness the Senate and the Government ought to be willing to pay the Government's just bills. I am not asking for any new project or any new appropriation, but simply that these men who put their money and time into constructing public buildings shall have the same treatment from the Government that they would have had if they had entered into contracts with individuals, companies, or corporations; and I hope the Senator will not raise the point of order against this particular amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall have to make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will have to be sustained.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 25, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

> Provided further, That the general appraisers of merchandise shall each be allowed and paid the same necessary expenses of travel and reasonable expenses actually incurred for maintenance consequent upon transacting official business in pursuance of law at any place outside of New York City as is at present provided by law for judges of the district courts of the United States when transacting official business at any place other than that of their official place of residence.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? As I understand, this amendment provides for the payment of the same expenses in the case of these appraisers that are already allowed for the judges?

Mr. CALDER. This amendment simply provides that the members of the Board of General Appraisers of New York—which is purely a judicial body—may, when they sit in Boston or Philadelphia or Washington or St. Louis or Chicago or San Francisco, be allowed the same per diem for actual expenses as is allowed judges of the district courts—for instance, the judge of the district court of Virginia when he sits in New York or Chicago or Boston or any other part of the country. They are now allowed $4 per diem.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the matter is one that ought not to come up on an appropriation bill at the last moment; and, on the other hand, there may be justice in it. I am willing to let it go in, if it is not objected to by other Senators, and see what we can do with it in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CERK. On page 110, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

> Green River watershed projects, Wyoming: For the investigation and survey of an irrigation system in the Green River watershed, Wyoming, including the Bonneville, Sedskadee, Big Piney-La Barge, Opal, Church Butte projects, $25,000: Provided, That no expenditure shall be made from this appropriation except from receipts accruing to the reclamation fund from royalties under the terms of the act approved February 25, 1920.
> Wiley project, Wyoming: For the investigation and survey of the Wiley project, Wyoming, $10,000: Provided, That no expenditure shall be made from this appropriation except from receipts accruing to the reclamation fund from royalties under the terms of the act approved February 25, 1920.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] presented and the Senate adopted an amendment providing for the investigation of the irrigation possibilities of the lower Colorado River. The first item in the amendment which I have offered appropriates $25,000 for the investigation of five reclamation projects in what is known as the Green River watershed, which is also a part of the drainage basin of the Colorado River. Necessarily this investigation involves the right to the use of the waters of that stream. It had its principal sources in the State of Wyoming, and no investigation of the irrigation possibilities of this river can be complete, and no adjustment of any system of irrigation based upon it should be made, that does not provide for the development of the irrigable lands in its basin which lie within the State of Wyoming.

The land included in the so-called Green River projects composes one of the largest irrigable tracts of land in the United States. It covers an entire area of approximately 1,025,000 acres. An investigation was made of these projects in 1915 by the Reclamation Service, acting in cooperation with the State of Wyoming, and the formal report which was made in February, 1916, by the engineers pronounced the project feasible. It was estimated at that time that seven reservoirs to store sufficient water to irrigate all the land under this system could be built for approximately $1,560,000. In 1918 the Reclamation Service made some additional investigations of these projects, but the work was naturally of only a preliminary nature. It is intended by the proposed amendment to enable the Reclamation Service to proceed to a more detailed study of the possibilities of this system.

The normal flow of the Green River does not furnish sufficient water for the use of the settlers who have already taken up land in this area. During the past year the farmers of this valley suffered heavy losses in their agricultural and stock-raising enterprises by reason of the fact that the normal flow has been overappropriated. It is only by the development of the surveyed reclamation projects that the difficulty may be solved, and it is, of course, highly important that the work be initiated at the earliest possible moment. I trust, therefore, that the Senate will see its way clear to adopt the amendment which I have presented.

The second item in the amendment provides for an investigation of what is known as the Wiley project in Wyoming. This includes approximately 90,000 acres of land and it is in a sense an extension of the Shoshone project. The reservoir, which has already been constructed at a cost of more than $1,600,000, stores sufficient water at the present time, I am advised, to irrigate this land and the problem is to provide for its distribution over the area included in the so-called Wiley projects.

As an indication of the great demand there is for irrigable land in this section, I may state that last year when the seventh unit of the Shoshone project was opened, although the Reclamation Service had only 56 farms to offer, 397 applications were presented for them. During the past year, at the opening of another unit of the same project, the excess of applications over available farms was very much greater. Hundreds of former service men from all parts of the country sought the few farm units that were open to entry.

There can be no doubt that if this land were reclaimed it would be put to immediate use. The appropriation for which I am asking will enable the Reclamation Service to make substantial progress with the preliminary surveys, and I hope my colleagues will find it possible to accept the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, nothing would give me greater pleasure than to oblige my distinguished colleague, nor, next to that, would anything give me greater pleasure than in some way to forward the matter that he has brought before the Senate; but the Senator, of course, must remember that the Senator charged with the responsibility of all of the projects must follow law and equity as nearly as he can. Therefore I shall have to make the point of order against the amendment, because it has not been estimated for, and provides for some special legislation and the expenditure of money, which, of course, changes existing law.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. KENDRICK. I call the attention of my colleague to the fact that this amendment was introduced and referred to his committee several days ago. Do I understand his point of order to be that it was not presented to the committee?

Mr. WARREN. I did not raise the point the Senator speaks of. The amendment was submitted, but I spoke of an estimate, and there is no estimate from the Treasury or the department for it, and it has not been reported favorably by a standing committee. It changes the law. I do not claim that the amendment has not been introduced in Congress and sent to the Appropriations Committee, but I do claim that it was there turned down by the committee, with other amendments of like character.

I beg the Senator to allow me to suggest this: I believe he is a member of the Committee on Public Lands. I shall be very glad to assist him in any way, although I am not a member of the committee, to procure the passage of the legislation he is asking for, and then, if appropriations are estimated for under it, to assist in securing those appropriations.

So I make the point of order on the ground that it has not been estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not ready to rule on that for a moment.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Vice President did not get the ground upon which I base the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the point of order was made on the ground that it was a new item of appropriation, not moved by the direction of a standing committee, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some one of the departments.

Mr. WARREN. It is not estimated for by the head of any department; it is not introduced here by the act of any standing committee; and it does increase the appropriation. The Vice President will observe, in looking over the rule respecting appropriations, that that enters into it as part of the consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Would it change the existing law with reference to the irrigation system?

Mr. WARREN. I might say that it is entirely in the nature of new law, or a proposition which comes in which is new legislation. There is no doubt about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is this royalty, under the terms of the act approved February 25, 1920?

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Vice President did not notice what I said about the oil and phosphate leasing bill. That bill provides, in regard to certain money now impounded in the Government's hands because of pending suits, that when the suits are decided, if anything is left over for the United States, a certain percentage—I think 20 per cent—shall go to the State and a larger percentage to the reclamation fund, or the amounts may differ, and I may not be right about the 20 per cent. But the whole amount is to be divided. First, the Government takes a certain small amount as royalty, and then it goes to the States, part of it, and part to the Reclamation Service. That is legislated for, so far as it goes, but before it can be utilized there must be a dissolution of the injunction against the distribution of this money, and a settlement of the cases in court, before it in any wise can benefit either State or reclamation fund.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, as having some bearing on the point of order, I think it might be important to inform the Chair that the Reclamation Service has already expended several thousand dollars in this investigation, during 1915, I think it was, under an appropriation made in the sundry civil bill passed the previous year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am obliged to be in a committee meeting at 2.30, and I want to offer this amendment: On page 48, at the conclusion of the page, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 48, after line 25, insert:

For the purpose of increasing the pay of 10 National Zoological Park policemen, at the rate of $400 each, over and above their present pay, $4,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to be perfectly frank about this amendment. There are 10 National Zoological Park policemen who are paid out of a lump sum which is appropriated for the Smithsonian Institution. These park policemen are getting the munificent sum of $960 a year, with the privilege of paying for their own uniforms, shoes, and so forth. To that is added the $240 bonus. The other park policemen were taken care of when we provided for the increase in the pay of the policemen, so that their basic salary is $1,360, while the National Zoological Park policemen are getting only $960.

Mr. WARREN. Do they get the bonus?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; they get the bonus.

Mr. WARREN. In addition to that salary.

Mr. POMERENE. In addition to $960; but all park policemen get the bonus. I learned on yesterday that this bill was likely to be made the unfinished business upon yesterday. I took the matter up with the Smithsonian Institution, so that they might make an estimate, and they said they would do so. I immediately wrote to the Secretary to the President, as well as to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking them to have the estimate here. Word was left at my office that it would be prepared and sent promptly. It has not as yet arrived, but I think a sense of justice would suggest that while all of the other policemen are getting this increased pay these 10 policemen, who are out there doing a real public service, ought likewise to have this increased pay, and I hope that no point of order will be made against it.

I have seen several of these men and have talked with them. Their uniforms are threadbare. They are not able to buy additional uniforms and support their families on this meager pay, and I confess I do not like to see the great National Government and the District government keeping these men out there doing this real service on this meager pay.

For that reason I submit the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the men to whom the Senator alludes are paid by the Smithsonian Institution managers, and paid from lump sums which are appropriated from time to time. It is a matter for them to make the salaries rather than for the Congress. On the other hand, no estimate is here, and yet we had the Director of the Smithsonian Institution before the committee; we asked him to make known his wants. It has not been estimated for.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, I will finish my statement.

Mr. POMERENE. I am glad the Senator has made that suggestion. I talked on yesterday with the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution——

Mr. WARREN. I am not making any suggestion; I am simply telling the truth.

Mr. POMERENE. I suspect the Senator is telling the truth, but he is not telling the full truth about it, and I propose to give him the full truth about it.

Mr. WARREN. It may be the Senator will wait until I finish my statement.

Mr. POMERENE. This is pertinent to what the Senator is saying now. I am not questioning the veracity of the Senator; but the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution said that the reason why no increase was called for was that the Appropriations Committee asked them not to call for any increases.

Mr. WARREN. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate did not make such a request, as I remember it.

Mr. POMERENE. Some committee did. At any rate, while there is a difference of opinion here, and it is intended to raise the objection that there has not been an estimate, I can estimate how much ten times four hundred is. I think we all know what that means. The Senator, who has so ably presided over this great committee for so many years, does not always insist upon the letter of the law when it comes to these estimates. I do not think anybody is going to complain if meager justice can be meted out to these 10 men at this time.

I am not a member of the Appropriations Committee; I am not particularly charged with the duty of looking after these men; but as one of the 96 Senators I feel that there is an obligation on the part of this Government to take care of these men, and I sincerely hope that the chairman of the committee, out of the kindness of heart which I know he possesses, will allow the amendment to pass. In any event, let it go into the bill and take care of it in conference if the estimate does not come. I beg he will do it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, thanking the Senator for his gracious remarks, the Senator is to be congratulated that he is not on the Appropriations Committee in this year of our Lord 1920, to provide for 1921, for, if he knows of any bureau or any department of the Government or any group of operatives under the pay of the Government who have not asked this committee for raises in salaries, he will name some one the existence of which I do not know. The book is full of estimates where they have attempted to raise salaries. The whole subject of salaries has been considered by the Reclassification Commission, the report of which we presume the House will take up almost immediately, and which we are only anxious to follow; and these matters will all be taken care of in due season.

While we have this able committee to do this laborious work and spend its time, the trouble originally was because Senators would rise in their seats, one Senator imbued with the wants of one class of operatives and move to increase the salaries, depending, as the Senator does, upon the goodness of heart of the chairman of the committee, who has no interest at all except to treat all of them alike, until we have a condition of higgledy-piggledy all through such bills as to salaries. They have been in some degree equalized, it is true, but we must wait until this classification work goes on. So I shall be compelled to make a point of order.

Mr. POMERENE. Allow me to suggest that these policemen can not feed their babies on promises of future legislation, and if the Senator can justify himself in raising a point of order when all the other policemen in the District have received their increases——

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no; Mr. President, the policemen of the District and the watchmen of the Zoological Park are doing entirely different service. These are simply the watchmen in the park, and we by law provided that they might have police powers in order to assist in the performance of their duties.

Mr. POMERENE. But it is not a different duty. They are clothed with police powers. On Sundays there are at times 30,000 or 40,000 or 50,000 visitors at the Zoological Park. They have to look after those people and see that no depredations are committed, and so forth, and now, while all the other policemen get their increase, to say to these 10 men that, because the department has neglected to make an estimate and ask for the increase, you are going to invoke the letter of the rule against them, is not fair, is not just, and there is no justification that can be made for it.

Mr. WARREN. I make the point of order.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Does the Senator yield the floor or does he yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WARREN. I desire a ruling of the Chair on the point of order.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. STERLING. The parliamentary inquiry is this: What constitutes an estimate of a department? What form, if any particular form, must the estimate take? Must the estimate be found in the Book of Estimates or may it be made through a letter addressed to the committee having the particular appropriation bill in charge, in which is stated what is needed and in detail what is required for the particular department or bureau or branch of the department?

I am impelled to ask the question because of the frequent reference by the chairman of the committee to the fact that an appropriation asked for by way of amendment has not been estimated for. Since I offered an amendment this morning increasing an appropriation I have been handed a copy of a letter written on the 12th day of May to the Committee on Appropriations, in which the exact amount asked for by the amendment proposed by me is estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WARREN. It is the law. An estimate is an official document signed and forwarded here by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Vice President and to the Speaker of the House. There are regular forms for estimates and a regular way for them to come here, and the committee is bound under the law to consider them as estimates. We can not extend the line to letters of various men in this department or the other because various employees are continually writing to the committee, and we can not obey the law and our rules and entertain all of those things.

This matter of salary is, of course, one that is very wrong. No one knows it better than the distinguished Senator who now occupies the chair. But if the attempt is made now, in view of this, to pick up, as each Senator thinks best, some particular number of employees and increase their salaries while the balance are left uncovered and uncared for, and if we are going to proceed in that line, what is the use of having any reclassification, and what is the use of expecting anything from that? How can we expect Congress to undertake, immediately after the fading away of this rush of business, to get into the reclassification work if we have been forestalled already by legislation on appropriation bills and otherwise?

Mr. STERLING. Permit me to submit this question to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is made and the present occupant of the chair believes it is quite clear that the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. STERLING. I have not proposed anything to which a point of order might be made. I made this parliamentary inquiry. If the Chair desires to rule on the point of order made against the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I have no objection, but I should like to say a word further in regard to the question I have propounded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the ruling, of course, applied only to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, but if the Senator from South Dakota desires an expression from the present occupant of the chair as to what is an estimate, the Chair has no hesitancy in stating his opinion about it.

The Chair understands that an estimate as contemplated by the rules is an estimate which comes to the Congress officially through the Secretary of the Treasury. The understanding of the Chair also is that it is addressed to the Presiding Officer of the Senate, in the event it comes to this body, and is handed down and referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. STERLING. May I make this suggestion? It just occurred to me in connection with the remarks of the Chair. Suppose there has been an error in the original estimate handed down in the method suggested by the Chair. Can not a new estimate be made and submitted to the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unquestionably there could be a new estimate or a modification of an estimate. The Chair is advised that that occurred only a few days ago.

Mr. STERLING. I have a case of that kind in hand.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, has the matter been disposed of?

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator allow me to say just a word before the matter is passed?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if there is another appropriation bill coming along?

Mr. WARREN. I am informed that the House is working on another appropriation bill, which is probably 100 to 200 pages in length, and which, I presume, will be reported to the House to-morrow or the next day. It may come to the Senate Saturday of this week or the first of next week. It is the general deficiency bill.

Mr. BORAH. I understand this estimate may be on the way, and I take it that if the estimate comes here it could be properly attached to that appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. It properly belongs, of course, to the legislative appropriation bill, and so long as it did not get on the legislative bill, it does not matter so much to what bill, if any, it might be attached.

Mr. BORAH. It can go on any bill if we have votes enough to get it on and if we get by a point of order. I only wish to say in passing that I made the inquiry concerning this disparagement with reference to the park men while the legislative appropriation bill was pending. As I understood it at that time, it was to go on this bill, although I do not say that the chairman of the committee misled me, or anything of that kind, but it was my ignorance upon the subject. However, I understood it was to go on this bill.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, I will explain that.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. We assumed that whatever was done would, of course, be taken up by the Smithsonian Institution and that they would ask for the funds and carry it out accordingly. We still must calculate that they are going to pay these men, if we provide for it, out of the lump sum given that institution. As the Senator says, it can better be provided for in the next bill than in this bill.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. I only wish to say that of course these men ought to be taken care of the same as the other men have been taken care of. I have no doubt the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] will have the estimate by that time, and I think we will be able to get by the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I hope neither Senator thinks it is anything personal on my part.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. FRANCE. I shall not discuss it at this time, as it speaks for itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The READING CLERK. Add at the proper place in the bill as a new section the following:

SEC. —. As used in this section the term "place of public accommodation" includes any hotel, apartment hotel, railroad terminal, restaurant, theater, or other place of public amusement in the District.

No person who maintains a place of public accommodation shall in any manner, directly or indirectly, authorize any common or private motor-vehicle carrier of passengers for hire to use any portion of the public highway fronting the premises of such place of public accommodation or to gain access either upon the public highway or private property to the entrances or exits of such place of public accommodation in such manner as will prevent any other such carrier from having an equal and reasonable opportunity to offer and afford his services as a carrier to the patrons of such place of public accommodation, nor shall any such carrier make use of the public highway or any private property in any such manner. Any person who maintains a place of public accommodation or any carrier who violates any provision of this section or any regulation issued thereunder shall be liable to a fine of $100 a day for each vehicle in respect to which such violation occurs, and each day or fraction thereof during which such offense continues shall constitute a separate violation in respect to such vehicle.

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 to enforce the regulation by the police department of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the matter just read is legislation pure and simple. It was introduced and sent to the Committee on Appropriations some weeks ago, and that committee reported it back and asked to be discharged from further consideration of it and suggested that it be sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Of course, I shall make the point of order on it here. It has no place on an appropriation bill. It is legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to be added to the bill as a new section. This amendment, as a bill, has passed the Senate at this session of Congress, and I believe that makes it eligible to go on this bill as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Add as a new section to the bill the following:

SEC. —. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,819 to and for Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., for and on account of unpaid claims held by her on account of work and services performed on or supplies furnished for the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, a part of the Shoshone reclamation project in the State of Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The rule is so insistent that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is compelled and is in duty bound, in observance of the rules and the law, to reject claims on an appropriation bill. I have voted for the measure otherwise. I would do so again, but I must make a point of order against it now, that it is a claim and must be excluded from general appropriation bills.

Mr. MYERS. What is the ground of the point of order? What is the basis of it? I did not hear distinctly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is that it is a private claim on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to be heard on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be glad to hear from the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. Of course, I realize the point of order is made under subdivision 4 of Rule XVI of the standing rules of the Senate, which says:

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

I contend that this is not a claim against the Government. What is a private claim? A claim is something upon which an action at law might be founded between private individuals. It is a contention or demand of a right, capable of supporting an action at law for its enforcement, as between individuals.

If it is against the Government, however, the claimant is debarred from suing the Government and has to go to Congress and ask for an appropriation. There may be a claim against the Government, but the Government can not be sued without its consent.

If John Jones owes me $100 on an obligation, that is a claim, and I can go into a court of law and bring an action against John Jones and recover. If I am wrongfully assaulted by a party and injured, I have a claim against that party which I can enforce at law. If I am working for an employer and am injured through the negligence of that employer, I have a claim against him for which I may sue and recover. Therefore, if any of those conditions should arise in behalf of an individual and against the Government, the individual would have a claim against the Government—that is what I would call a claim against the Government—but the individual could not go into court and enforce that claim without the consent of Congress, because one can not sue the Government without the consent of the Government. Congress must either authorize an action to be brought before the Court of Claims or some other court of competent jurisdiction or Congress must make an appropriation outright.

If a man has a contract with the Government, and performs his part of the contract, and the contract price is not paid in full by the Government, then such an individual has a claim against the Government; and to get what is due him he must have a bill introduced in his behalf in Congress, and the bill must go to the Committee on Claims; it can not be put on an appropriation bill. If an individual is in the employ of the Government and is injured through the negligence of the Government or its agents, he has a claim against the Government, upon which he may recover by having a bill introduced in Congress and having it referred to the Committee on Claims. That is a claim. It is a claim against the Government because it would be a claim capable of enforcement at law if due from another individual or a corporation.

This, however, is not a claim. The history of the bills to reimburse Mrs. Macdonald, which have many times passed the Senate, even as late as the present session of Congress, shows that this is not a claim. None of those bills ever went to the Senate Committee on Claims. They were sent to the Committee on Public Lands or the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands. The reports of the committees that have acted on the bills show that this is not a claim; the reports of the Secretary of the Interior made on the various bills show that this is not a claim. It has never been considered as a claim. The last report of the Secretary of the Interior made on the last bill to reimburse Mrs. Macdonald, when it had been introduced and referred to the Senate Committee on Public Lands and by that committee referred to the Secretary of the Interior, shows that the bill is not a claim.

I have not that report with me, but it was read to the committee. I can get it and read it if any Senator desires to hear it. The Secretary of the Interior in that report, in effect, says that Mrs. Macdonald has no claim against the Government for any money, but that if appropriated it will be only a gratuity, the discharge of a moral obligation which Congress may pay if Congress sees fit. He makes it plain that Mrs. Macdonald has no claim on the Government, but that if Congress wants to be generous and vote Mrs. Macdonald a gratuity he has no objection to Congress doing so. He puts it clearly in the light that Mrs. Macdonald has no claim against the Government for any sum of money; but, in effect, says as to Congress being generous and voting as a gratuity to Mrs. Macdonald the sum of money asked for, he leaves that to the wisdom of Congress.

There is a precedent for making by amendment to a general appropriation bill such an appropriation as I am seeking to make by this amendment. In the act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and prior years, and for other purposes—a general deficiency bill which passed Congress and became a law, the law print of which I hold in my hand—at the top of page 20 is this item:

For an amount supplemental and additional to the amount heretofore appropriated to pay the certified claims on account of labor, supplies, material furnished and used in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel and spillway, $3,556.96.

That item was offered as an amendment to that appropriation bill on the floor of the House of Representatives. I have taken the pains to look into the history of it. It was not reported out of the Appropriations Committee of the House, but was offered as an amendment at the last minute, when the bill was under consideration, by Mr. MONDELL, of Wyoming, on the floor of the House, and was adopted by the House.

Of course, I do not know whether or not a point of order was made against it in the House, but it came to the Senate, was concurred in by the Senate, and the money was appropriated under a provision which started as an amendment on the floor of the House to an appropriation bill. I think, the sum of $3,556.96 having been appropriated to other parties on account of the same transaction and having gone through on an appropriation bill, that we should examine very closely the amendment I have proposed to ascertain whether it ought to be ruled out on a point of order. I repeat, my contention is that it is not a claim. The amendment simply calls for a gratuitous appropriation which could not be enforced if the transaction were between individuals.

Furthermore, under subdivision 1 of Rule XVI, it is provided:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

That is, no amendment may be received to an appropriation bill increasing the amount appropriated for any purpose or adding a new item, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty or of an act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session. That provision is in the disjunctive; and an exception may be made in any one of those cases. The amendment I have offered comes under one of those exceptions, for the same subject matter has been previously passed by the Senate at this session in the form of a bill. A bill in the exact language of this amendment was introduced in this Congress by me, and it unanimously passed the Senate, heretofore, at this session. Clearly that makes it proper to put it on an appropriation bill as an amendment.

I hold that the two subdivisions of Rule XVI to which I have referred must be considered in pari materia; they must be considered together. If my amendment is permissible under either, it is not subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Montana to maintain that the amendment has heretofore been passed by the Senate as a separate measure at this session of Congress?

Mr. MYERS. It has. It passed as a separate bill at this session of this Congress and is now in the House awaiting action, but, owing to the difficulty of securing the consideration of bills there, I fear it will never pass the House. It has passed the Senate several times heretofore, but has never passed the House. Its only chance, I think, is as an amendment such as I now offer.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Senator if the money proposed to be appropriated by his bill and likewise by the amendment he now offers was earned by work on a reclamation project near Billings, Mont.?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; the project is in the State of Wyoming, near Billings, Mont.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It seems to me that a bill in reference to the matter has been before committees of the Senate for the last six or eight years, and every committee has reported upon it favorably, and it has passed the Senate two or three times.

Mr. MYERS. That is true.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The woman ought to be paid. I do not know whether the pending bill is the proper place to attach the amendment, but the amount ought to be paid.

My experience, I will say to the Senator, is that whenever there is presented here a bill against the Government which ought to be paid and an amendment is offered to provide for its payment to some bill pending, the proponent of the amendment is always referred to another bill, but when that other bill comes up that also is the wrong bill, with the result that the Government does not pay its debts. I was a member of the committee when this matter was considered and investigated a number of times, and the failure on the part of the Government to pay the bill, as I understand, has practically broken up this poor woman.

Mr. MYERS. That is true.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. She has been here session after session, and there ought to be some way to secure provision for her payment on this bill, if there is no other place to provide for it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am satisfied there is no other place or way; that is, now or never. I realize, of course, that it is the right of the chairman of the committee and perhaps even his duty to make points of order against proposed amendments; but I am discussing this matter purely as a legal proposition, as a matter of parliamentary law, and I contend that the point of order is not well taken. I think clearly it should be overruled.

I will ask Col. Halsey or some of the employees of the Secretary's office to go to the Secretary's office and procure for me a copy of the bill for the relief of Mrs. Macdonald which passed the Senate at this session, together with the report of the Secretary of the Interior on that bill, directed to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, for I should like to read that report to the Chair. Clearly, to my mind, the Secretary of the Interior in that report takes the ground that this is not a claim against the Government; that Mrs. Macdonald has no claim against the Government, and is not entitled to any money by right of any claim; but that, if Congress wants to be generous and appropriate money as a gratuity to Mrs. Macdonald, he has no objection.

That is the light in which the bill has always been before the Senate, has always been reported out from the committee, and has always been reported upon by the Secretary of the Interior. I contend that this amendment does not call for payment of a claim, but that it merely seeks to make an appropriation as a gratuity in order that the ends of justice may be subserved.

Reverting to what I said a while ago, I believe that a claim must involve some contention of right which, if it existed between two individuals, could be enforced in a court of law, such as a claim for the payment of money on a contract, for the payment of money for services, for the payment of money due on a promissory note, for damages growing out of personal injuries. Demands for such payments are claims. A claim is a right which may be maintained in a court of law between individuals, but which can not be maintained against the Government, because the Government can not be sued. A claim is a demand for something due and unpaid, whether owing by the Government or an individual or corporation.

If this were such a case, if Mrs. Macdonald had a contract with the Government and had performed her part of the contract, and the Government had failed to pay her and still owed her $9,000 on the contract, the point of order made by the chairman of the committee would be well taken and should be sustained; or if Mrs. Macdonald had been an employee of the Government and had been injured through the negligence of the Government, and if she were making a demand for compensation for personal injuries, then the point of order made by the chairman of the committee would be well taken. Those would be claims, but this is not such a case. Nobody claims there is anything due Mrs. Macdonald from the Government. This amendment only provides for a voluntary appropriation of money to Mrs. Macdonald as a simple act of justice—not money due her. She has no claim against the Government.

I now have the letter of the Secretary of the Interior written in regard to the bill which passed the Senate at this session for the relief of Mrs. Macdonald, kindly handed me by Col.

Halsey. The letter, signed by the Hon. F. K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, and addressed to Hon. REED SMOOT, chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate, is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, October 24, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: By reference of your committee, dated October 8, 1919, receipt is acknowledged of copy of S. 3102, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, for the relief of Katherine Macdonald. Your committee asks for such suggestions as this department may see fit to offer.

Under Public Resolution No. 56, approved August 24, 1912, the sum of $42,000 was appropriated for payment to those persons who have and hold, and who have presented or may present, claims remaining unpaid on account of labor, supplies, materials, or cash furnished to the contractor or the subcontractor and used in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, as a part of the Shoshone irrigation project, in the State of Wyoming. Under the express authority contained in Public Resolution No. 56, this office made a careful investigation to determine all valid outstanding claims against the contractor or subcontractor, and in the course of such efforts resorted to the fullest possible publicity in securing direct evidence and testimony from the holders of all such claims. It is noted that the bill now pending contains provision for the appropriation of the sum of $9,819 for and on account of unpaid claims held by Mrs. Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., on account of work and services performed on or supplies furnished for the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, a part of the Shoshone reclamation project in the State of Wyoming.

During the negotiations looking toward settlement of claims under Public Resolution No. 56 of August 24, 1912, Mrs. Macdonald appeared at frequent intervals and was kept fully advised of the progress of settlement under the claims in question. She held power of attorney from a number of the claimants and held assignments for collection from a number of others. Certain rights and interests owned by Mrs. Macdonald in connection with certain of these claims were submitted to the department, and after careful investigation were by this department certified with the other claims to the Secretary of the Treasury and were paid from the fund provided by said resolution.

The present bill proposes to appropriate, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum mentioned for Mrs. Macdonald. Inasmuch as this department has completed the settlement of claims under the appropriation made by Public Resolution No. 56, and as the present bill makes no appropriation out of the reclamation fund chargeable to the water users, but, as indicated, proposes an appropriation out of general funds in the Treasury, I do not feel that this department should express an opinion as to whether or not payment should be made, the matter being one wholly for the consideration and determination of Congress.

This letter uses the word "claims" all the way through, and so does this amendment use the word "claims"; but those claims were claims of individuals against the contractor who took a contract from the Government to construct the Corbett Tunnel. They were claims against the contractor and in no sense could they be construed as claims against the Government. They had no legal or equitable ground upon which to stand as claims against the United States—not a shadow of ground. They were claims against a contractor who failed and did not pay his debts, and Congress, only out of its generosity and a sense of justice, appropriated money to pay a part of these claims—not claims against the Government but claims against the contractor. They were claims against him and not against the Government in any sense.

The Secretary of the Interior refers to paying claims under prior appropriations authorized by Congress. They were claims against this contractor, who defaulted and failed because he took the contract too cheaply, leaving his workmen unpaid. They were not claims against the Government at all, but they were claims against this contractor, which Congress, by act of Congress, directed the Secretary of the Interior to approve and have paid by the Treasurer of the United States.

So I claim that this is not a private claim against the Government at all. It is simply a question of fairness and generosity on the part of the Government as to whether or not it wants to appropriate this money to Mrs. Macdonald. She has no claim upon the Government in the sense of a claim at all; and considering this amendment in conjunction with subdivision 1 of Rule XVI, which says that an amendment may be added to an appropriation bill if it has been passed as an act or resolution by the Senate previously during the same session, which is true of this amendment, I claim that clearly within lines of reasonable construction this is not a claim against the Government and should not be so considered. No bill embodying the same proposed appropriation has ever gone to the Committee on Claims, and I think undoubtedly the point of order made by the chairman of the committee should be overruled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). The Chair is unable to conceive of a case where the Congress of the United States would make an appropriation to any individual unless that individual had some claim against the Government, either legal or equitable. It is true that the Senator from Montana has clearly drawn the distinction between a claim in one sense of the word and a claim in another; but it certainly would seem that this rule was prepared to embrace all claims, whether legal or equitable—anything for which an appropriation of money is to be made in pursuance of the bounty of the Government for any supposed claim upon it, or any matter growing out of equitable consideration of a situation which may exist.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I make a remark at that juncture?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. Suppose that a former President of the United States should die, and Congress should vote a pension to the widow of that former President, as it has done a number of times, would that be done in pursuance of a claim against the Government of the United States, or would it be a gratuity, an act of generosity, on the part of the Government? And if it is a claim, what is it a claim for? Will the Chair tell me that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would feel that a case of that sort would present a very strong claim against the Government—not any legal, binding obligation, but in the same way we appropriate something to the widows of Senators who die.

Mr. MYERS. That is not a claim. May I ask whether that is any claim against the Government?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a claim at least upon the generosity of the Government.

Mr. MYERS. Suppose the widow never asks for it, never asks for the introduction of any bill, or some Senator introduces a bill voluntarily without consulting the widow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not believe that in any of those cases a bill ever is introduced for such a claim.

Mr. MYERS. I think the bill to pay the widow of a Senator one year's salary is put in every time without consulting the widow. I think it is done just as a matter of courtesy, as a matter of course, as a matter of fact. I do not think any claim is ever made for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair fully appreciates the point of view of the Senator; but if it is not classified as a claim, the Chair is unable to understand upon what principle the appropriation should be made at all. The Chair may say that he is in thorough sympathy with this payment. He happens to recall something about the merits of the case, and believes that this claimant has a very strong claim upon the generosity and the equitable treatment of this Government; but he does believe that the matter is a claim in the sense that that word is used in this rule

That, however, does not dispose of the amendment offered by the Senator; and the Chair was going to refer to the other point made by the Senator.

Even though this be a claim, yet under the latter part of paragraph 1 of Rule XVI there are exceptions made; and the exceptions are—

> Unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless—

And so forth. Now, the Chair would like to hear the Senator from Wyoming on the point that has been suggested, namely, even though it be conceded that this is a claim within the provisions of section 4 of that rule, whether or not the exception under section 1 would take it without the rule, and make the proposed amendment in order.

The Chair is unable to find any precedent upon the point; and it would seem that the course of business in the Senate has been against the contention that it would be admissible under this part of the rule, because there are a number of claims which have been passed at this session of Congress, and if the Chair were to hold that they are in order by virtue of this provision of the rule it would undoubtedly result in putting upon this bill a very large number of claims which usually come from the Committee on Claims.

The Chair would like to hear from the Senator from Wyoming on the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have no object at all in this matter except to do my duty, and if the Chair thinks this rule does not apply that is for him to decide. I should hate to see a precedent made by deciding that a claim that has passed the Senate could be put on an appropriation bill, because there are now probably hundreds—I do not like to say thousands, but certainly hundreds—that have passed the Senate that have not passed the House, and of course when the next appropriation bill came up they naturally would be offered, and it would be rather difficult to get around the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to inquire if any Senator happens to recall any precedent upon this question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have not devoted especial study to the subject, but I think paragraph 4 of the rule is applicable. While I should like very much to see the claim presented by the Senator from Montana paid—and I think the Chair is correct in ruling that it is a claim—I think paragraph 4 governs the matter, and that in the case of a private claim presented as an amendment to a general appropriation bill the claim must have passed both Houses of Congress rather than one House of Congress; and I think there is a good reason for the rule, although I regret to see it invoked in this particular case.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I must take issue with the observation of the Senator from Arkansas to the effect that the rule requires that the claim must have passed both Houses of Congress. If it had passed both Houses of Congress, it would only need the President's signature to become a law. That would make it a law.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will yield to me, I can make my position in the matter very clear in a few more words.

Paragraph 4 of Rule XVI, the rule admittedly applicable to this case, is as follows:

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

If the Chair's ruling is correct that this is a private claim—and I am bound to say that I concur in the conclusion which the Chair has announced respecting that feature of the controversy—then clause 4 governs the matter and not clause 1, because clause 4 expressly provides that an amendment which is designed to provide for a private claim shall not be received to a general appropriation bill unless it is justified by existing law. Clause 1 relates to amendments generally, and is as follows:

No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

Clause 4 governs the amendment, when it presents a private claim, and the sole question, in my judgment, is whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana is a private claim, and I have said that I think the Chair has ruled correctly on that.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will close with this observation, that the two subdivisions of the rule are seemingly contradictory. There is no doubt about that. They are apparently, at least, in conflict, and the latter subdivision, No. 4, is a general provision, while subdivision 1 treats of exceptions to the general rule; and as this is a statute, so far as this body is concerned, governing its proceedings, I believe the rule in construing statutes would apply here. It is an accepted rule of law that where a general rule is laid down and exceptions are made in the same statute the exceptions must govern in matters to which they may apply. I believe that is a generally accepted canon of construction of statutory law, adopted and upheld by the courts of the land, and if that is the case, then I believe the exception of subdivision 1 should prevail over the general rule laid down in subdivision 4. The latter subdivision says an amendment for a private claim shall never go on an appropriation bill—it is general—but subdivision 1 says in certain exceptional cases it may. This is one of them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong the controversy unduly, but as long as the Chair has invited the expression of opinion——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is very glad to hear the opinions of Senators.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to say that I think the reverse is the case, that the general rule is laid down in section 1, and it is as follows:

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill—

That includes all amendments—

the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation.

This would come under that, if it were not for the specific exception relating to private claims contained in section 4, so that the very rule of construction which the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has invoked, in my judgment, governs the case against him. In other words, it is equivalent to saying that no amendment which constitutes a new item of appropriation shall be received to a general appropriation bill unless "to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session"; and as to a certain class of amendments, namely, the specific class of private claims, that class of amendments shall not be received unless it is to carry out existing law.

Mr. MYERS. I submit the matter to the Chair by saying that it occurs to me that it is a sweeping provision in subdivision 4 that no private claim at all shall be adopted as an amendment to an appropriation bill. On the other hand, in subdivision 1 there are ways of getting any amendment on an appropriation bill, be it for a claim or anything else, and if this amendment comes under one of those ways I believe that it would be proper to adopt it. I believe it does come under one of the exceptions. As to the objection that this would set a precedent and that all bills for claims, if this be a claim, which pass the Senate at a given session would be put on appropriation bills, what if they should be? They have passed the Senate once. Why not again? This appropriation has passed the Senate once this session as a bill. Why not again? What would the harm be? I submit the point of order should be overruled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels that the provision in section 1 of the rule is general and would include, except for something else, all amendments designed to carry out the legislation of the Senate during the session at which the amendment was offered. If there were no other provision in this rule, then unquestionably this amendment would be in order. But it would seem that section 4 of the rule was passed for the specific purpose of taking care of all claims and preventing individual claims which might be presented by numerous Senators from going on a general appropriation bill, for it is not presumed that the general Appropriations Committee would have the proper opportunity to give consideration to these various claims on their merits. The Chair therefore will rule that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, with due respect to the Chair, I appeal from the ruling of the Chair and ask that it be submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? I am very glad the Senator has appealed, the Chair will state, so that we may get the judgment of the Senate on the point. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. We passed over section 5, and I wish to dispose of that now, if there is no objection to it.

Mr. CALDER. I will yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up the consideration of section 5, on page 192.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Page 192, insert section 5, which was passed over, having been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. Let it be reported.

Mr. WARREN. It has been read, I will say to the Senator; unless he wishes it read again. It is the railroad provision, which provides, although there is considerable language, simply that the time may be extended from 5 to 15 years, at 6 per cent interest, those amounts to be paid in installments, and this is for the purpose of aiding those roads to do as all, or nearly all, great corporations in building railroads have done, to order needed equipment, to pay some cash for it, to put a mortgage deed on it, deed it to some trustee, and of course each car is placarded with a label showing that that particular property is subject to the mortgage, to the trust.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Utah has undoubtedly seen those placards on the engines and cars of the Pacific roads, in the early days, when they were building.

Mr. KING. I was not here when this matter was taken up by the Senate and am not familiar with the terms of this amendment. Wherein does it differ from the existing law?

Mr. WARREN. Practically only in what I have stated. Of course, if the Senator wishes it read——

Mr. KING. I will not ask for that.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that the matter has had very careful consideration by both committees having it under consideration, and their members decided unanimously on it, as I understand, and have asked the Appropriations Committee to include it in this bill. This is to enable the roads to take care of the transportation of the country, which is now tremendously congested, as the Senator knows, and it seems to be a measure which is absolutely necessary if we wish to do what we have agreed to do in former legislation.

Mr. KING. What I am trying to get at is whether it diminishes the value of any of the securities which the Government now holds, or increases any obligation of the Government.

Mr. WARREN. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, while I was not a member of the subcommittee which prepared this provision, and have not had an opportunity of familiarizing myself definitely with its details, the amendment is quite important and is believed to be indispensable to the successful operation of the railroads in the early future, and I think that it does change the transportation act of 1920 in respect to securities for loans.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is correct in saying that the time for paying certain obligations due the Government from the railroads is extended from 5 to 15 years, and about that provision I think there could be no dispute.

There is another feature of it, however, which relates indirectly to the question asked by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. The transportation act of 1920 carried an appropriation of $300,000,000 to be used as a revolving fund, and a part of this fund might be used in new loans to railroads.

The transportation act of 1920, however, required that adequate security should be taken by the Government authorities before making a loan, and that requirement nullified the beneficial provisions, in large part, of the revolving fund, in so far as it related to loans, for the simple reason that the roads which need the loans most are unable to secure first-class security. So that this provision modifies that, and allows reasonable discretion in the Government authorities making the loan, where the loan is indispensable to the continuance of the operation of the railroad. I think it is a very wise and necessary provision, although it does relax the rule prescribed in the transportation act relating to securities in cases of these loans.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. The provision which the committee recommended as to changing the funding act was dropped out, and was not placed in the bill. The only change in this bill is as to section 210 of the railroad act, which made an appropriation of $300,000,000 to be loaned to railroads.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me just a moment to make a statement?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I assumed that the provision in the bill was a provision recommended by the Interstate Commerce Committee. The Senator from Minnesota has called my attention to the fact that that feature of the provision recommended by the Interstate Commerce Committee extending the time for refunding from 5 to 15 years in certain cases was not incorporated in this provision by the Appropriations Committee, and I thank him for the suggestion. This provision, in so far as it relates to an extension of time, applies only to new loans and not to refunding old loans.

Mr. KELLOGG. There were two changes recommended by the Committee on Interstate Commerce. One was as to the funding plan, and the other was as to the loan plan; and the Senator is correct in saying that the funding plan was dropped out of this bill entirely. The loan plan it was found was impracticable, and the only change made is to extend the time of the loans from 5 to 15 years. It was found impossible to make equipment trusts for 5 years, because the roads are required to pay an equal part not only of the principal but the interest in each year, and on the loan provision we recommended unanimously that the time of the loan be authorized to be extended from 5 to 15 years.

There was one other change which the Senator from Arkansas has mentioned, and that was that we provided in this bill that the loans were only to be made to railroads unable to provide themselves with the funds necessary for the aforesaid purposes. Instead of allowing the fund to be used to all railroads, it was only to those roads which could not otherwise secure money.

Those are the principal changes. There is one change, that the recommendations and orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall control, and there will not be divided authority between the Treasury Department and the Interstate Commerce Commission. Those are the only important changes in the law. It was unanimously recommended by the Interstate Commerce Committee, after a long hearing of committees from all over the United States, farmers, shippers, and chambers of commerce, urging that not only these changes be made but that additional appropriations be made. We declined to recommend an additional appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 11, add the following:

The Postmaster General is hereby authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise a site with railroad trackage in the city of New York, N. Y., and have prepared plans and specifications for the erection thereon under a contract or contracts of a reinforced concrete and glass commercial type fireproof building, together with driveways and approaches, to contain approximately 350,000 square feet of floor space, for use as a foreign branch station and other postal purposes; and for the purchase of site, preparation of plans and specifications and construction of building, including necessary furniture, equipment, and mail-handling apparatus, the sum of $6,000,000 is hereby appropriated and so much as may be necessary is hereby made immediately available.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. I desire to explain the amendment, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. WARREN. I will yield for that purpose, though I shall have to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this amendment, if agreed to, will appropriate $6,000,000 for the construction of a foreign branch station at the post office in New York City.

Senators may perhaps believe this is something for New York. It is for the Nation. New York City is the clearing house for practically all foreign mail going to and from this country. Ninety per cent of the foreign mail leaving this country passes through the New York post office. During the past year the post-office business of New York City has increased 37 per cent. Foreign post-office business passing through New York City has increased from 76,357,083 packages in 1901 to 272,859,244 packages in 1919, an increase in 18 years of 257 per cent.

Mr. President, unless some additional facilities are provided for the handling of our foreign mail the whole foreign post-office business of the Nation will break down. Recently in conversation with the Postmaster General he informed me that unless this money was appropriated he would have to go out and rent a building in the city of New York, which would cost him not less than $500,000 annually. So unless favorable action on this amendment is taken, unusual as this is, we must make a lease that will cost the Government a sum equal to 4 per cent on an investment of $12,500,000.

In connection with this matter I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the letter addressed to me by the Postmaster General concerning this subject. While I know the amendment is subject to a point of order, I am hopeful that Senators will understand the Nation-wide importance of it and that no point of order will be made and the Senate given the opportunity of voting for the project. If the vote is permitted, I am sure it will be agreed to.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 12, 1920.

Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR CALDER: Practically every postal station of the New York office occupying quarters leased prior to January 1, 1916, is in urgent need of additional space, and in some cases it is only with the greatest difficulty that business is being transacted in the accommodations available. This is especially true of the foreign-branch station, where the lease on the quarters will expire October 8, 1920.

The general post-office quarters in the building adjoining the Pennsylvania Railroad Station, on Eighth Avenue between Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth Streets, are very much overcrowded. It is the desire of the department to secure, if possible, a building that will provide for the foreign-branch station and at the same time relieve the general post office by transfer of certain work now being done there.

Statistics show there has been a steady increase in the growth of the Postal Service in New York City during the past decade, but the increase in volume of business during the first 10 months of the fiscal year 1920 has been phenomenal. The receipts by fiscal years at New York from 1910 to 1919, both years inclusive, together with the percentage of increase, are as follows:

Year.	Receipts.	Per cent increase over previous year.
1910	$22,339,621.23	12.0
1911	23,907,406.10	7.0
1912	24,756,107.41	3.5
1913	27,712,278.01	12.0
1914	30,464,065.12	10.0
1915	28,841,001.09	[1] 5.3
1916	32,169,390.75	11.5
1917	34,738,913.92	8.0
1918 [2]	39,287,900.66	13.0
1919 [2]	43,830,592.90	11.5

[1] Decrease.
[2] Includes 1 cent additional postage on each piece of first-class mail as war revenue.

The following table shows the receipts at New York for the first 10 months of the fiscal year 1920, compared with the same period of the preceding fiscal year:

Month.	1918-19 receipts.	1919-20 receipts.
July	$2,996,016	$3,313,697
August	3,136,954	3,202,763
September	3,373,639	3,891,061
October	3,597,320	4,351,867
November	3,324,963	3,434,277
December	4,024,452	4,550,822
January	3,804,874	4,067,871
February	3,508,363	3,890,931
March	4,096,836	5,272,561
April	4,046,350	5,087,141
	35,909,767
Less war-revenue postage (estimated 17 per cent)	6,104,660
Total	29,805,107	41,062,991

Increase, 37.7 per cent.

The greater portion of the foreign mail of the entire country passes through the foreign branch station, and, although the matter of securing quarters has been under investigation since January 1, 1918, only one tentative proposal has been received for space that is fairly satisfactory as to location. This proposal is for the erection of a building according to plans approved by the department, and, while the location is such that it could be used for the foreign branch station and for the relief of the general post office, the rental quoted aggregates more than one-half million dollars annually for the building without furniture or heat and light.

The department recently entered into contract for the rental of a building containing about 71,000 square feet of floor space, to be erected at 122 to 126 East Twenty-third Street, in the down-town section of New York, which will take the place of the present Madison Square Station located in the Metropolitan Life Insurance Building, as well as provide limited relief for certain other stations in that yicinity. The rental is at the rate of approximately $2 per square foot without heat or light, for a 20-year lease. In view of the department's experience in this and other cases during the past two years it will be extremely difficult to secure a building in New York under a rental basis on anything like reasonable terms. Even if store, office, or loft space were suitable for postal purposes, practically none is vacant.

The quarters occupied at present by the foreign branch station are totally inadequate for the needs of the service. The space consists of two old buildings constructed on different grades and providing approximately 66,000 square feet of floor space. The number of pieces of mail matter handled for foreign countries in 1901 was 76,357,083, and in 1919 there was a total of 272,859,244 pieces handled, or an increase in business in 18 years of 257 per cent. The records show that the total parcel-post mail dispatched to foreign countries in 1909 was 246,545 pieces, while in 1919 the total was 1,636,707, or an increase of 563 per cent.

An unprecedented and abnormal increase of mail to all foreign countries, particularly parcel post, both ordinary and registered, is anticipated within the next few years. A great drive is being made in business circles throughout the United States for increased trade with South America and other foreign countries. Before the war there were only 47 countries and colonies reached by our parcel-post service, whereas 177 countries are now reached by parcel post from the United States. Parcel-post service only recently having been extended to many of these countries, the mails for such countries have not reached the volume which can be expected later.

The increasing of the weight limit on international parcel post from 11 to 22 pounds is being arranged as rapidly as possible. Agreements have been made with 17 countries to accept 20 or 22 pound parcels. This increase in weight limit will be of great advantage to exporters in the United States as delivery charges, storage fees, etc., in foreign countries are based on the individual parcel regardless of weight. An effort is also being made to eliminate the various restrictions, charges, etc., to which parcels from the United States are subjected to in South America.

If the rate of increase that obtained during the past 20 years is maintained but not exceeded during the next 20 years, at least 190,000 square feet of floor space will be needed for the foreign branch station.

In addition to the necessity of providing adequately for the foreign branch station additional space must be provided for the relief of the general post office. The average number of cancellations of letters in the general post office during the first four days of December, 1919, was approximately 1,244,000 per day. The general post office is at present being operated at its capacity. Based upon a reasonable average increase of 10 per cent per annum, a fair estimate of the future requirements in the mailing division of the general post office may be considered as 3,228,000 cancellations daily in 1929.

The delivery section is crowded, the basement and platform are badly congested, and the express strikes during the past year and the recent railroad strike have shown that it is imperative and highly important that open and mobile space for the handling and distribution of incoming and outgoing parcel-post mails be provided. During the recent railroad strike the post office was the only public transportation utility which operated continuously and efficiently, but this service was maintained at great disadvantage and at maximum cost, owing to lack of space and proper facilities with which to handle, dispatch, and deliver the immense volume of parcel post, which at times was 500 per cent above normal in quantity.

The registry section, on the second floor of the general post office, is badly congested, and the corridors are used for storage. The platform upon which public vehicles must unload is wholly inadequate, it being necessary frequently for vehicles to remain in line for several hours at times awaiting their turn to reach the platform for the purpose of unloading mail matter.

The following table shows the number of full storage cars loaded with mail matter in New York during the months indicated:

Month:	Number of cars.
October, 1918	1,252
April, 1919	1,328
October, 1919	2,006
January, 1920	1,521
February, 1920	1,550
March, 1920	1,822
April, 1920	2,295

The postal station at the Grand Central Depot is being operated to capacity; in fact, it was necessary in November, 1919, to relieve that station by transferring to Madison Square and City Hall Stations the cancellation and distribution of about 250,000 letters between 4.40 p. m. and midnight, the heaviest hours of the day. With this relief the cancellations of first-class mail at this station approximate 914,000 daily. Sufficient additional space is needed so as to eliminate the necessity of a mailing division at Madison Square Station. The proposal for the rental of the space now occupied by the Grand Central Station was accepted April 5, 1908, with the understanding that an additional area of 44,000 square feet would be available for the use of the department about the year 1912, but as yet construction of the addition to the present building in which the space was to be provided has not commenced. An effort is being made to induce the New York Central Railroad Co. to complete its contract requirements.

The city of New York can be divided into four sections for the distribution and dispatch of collections to the best advantage, to wit:

Hudson Terminal or City Hall Station (old post-office building), with closing dispatches to the South and West via the Hudson and Manhattan tubes to Manhattan Transfer, Pennsylvania Railroad.

Madison Square (122–126 East Twenty-third Street), with complete distribution and direct dispatches to Pennsylvania and Grand Central Depots.

General post office (Pennsylvania Railroad Station).

Grand Central Station (New York Central Station).

Based upon a reasonable average increase of 10 per cent per annum in collections and drops a fair estimate of present and future conditions would appear as follows:

Total cancellations per day	4,057,000
Expansion:
Five years	6,491,200
Ten years	10,142,500
Per cent—
Five years	60
Ten years	150

The above tabulation, with estimated expansion in 10 years, taken with the increase in receipts, indicates conclusively and emphatically the necessity for securing additional space and facilities at the earliest practicable date.

From present indications the minimum requirements for space in which to accommodate the foreign branch station and relieve the general post office are 325,000 square feet of floor space.

I earnestly recommend that an appropriation of $6,000,000, to be immediately available, be made in the sundry civil appropriation bill, so as to enable the department to enter into contract for the construction of a building for the foreign branch station and other postal purposes at the earliest possible date. It is suggested that the following item be incorporated in the sundry civil appropriation bill:

The Postmaster General is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site with railroad trackage in the city of New York, N. Y., and have prepared plans and specifications for the erection thereon, under a contract or contracts, of a reinforced-concrete and glass, commercial type, fireproof building, together with driveways and approaches, to contain approximately 350,000 square feet of floor space, for use as a foreign branch station and other postal purposes; and for the purchase of site, preparation of plans and specifications, and construction of building, including necessary furniture, equipment, and mail-handling apparatus, the sum of $6,000,000 is hereby appropriated, and so much as may be necessary is hereby made immediately available.

Very truly, yours, (Signed) A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to say a word before this question is passed on. I have no doubt the case presented by the Senator from New York for a new post-office building in New York City is a very meritorious one. There are a great many other cases that are equally meritorious throughout the United States.

The pressure has been great on the Appropriations Committee of the Senate for years to exceed its jurisdiction and to encroach on the jurisdiction of some other committee, and pass authorizations and appropriations both at the same time for public buildings in the United States. Meritorious as I am satisfied the Senator's amendment is, I know of at least 100 other cases that have been presented to the committee that are of equal merit.

There is just one of two things the Senate must make up its mind to do. It must overthrow its rules and turn over to the Appropriations Committee the authorization and appropriation for public buildings and let us be swamped with them, or, in these meritorious cases, insist that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the committee which has jurisdiction of the matter, shall report a bill where everyone can have equal and exact justice in reference thereto. If we put one building on this appropriation bill, we can not refuse others without not only working an injustice but embarrassing many other Senators. It is for that reason that the committee has universally refused to act on these matters.

I merely desire the RECORD to show that our reason for keeping these buildings out of this appropriation bill is not on the merits of the case, but because it does not come within the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee. If we put in a building we were merely playing favorites, and every other Senator who has a building that he wants to have built in his State will have his constituents asking why, if one Senator got his building through, he can not get one through for his own State.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, before the point of order is made, may I say a word in reply to the Senator from Alabama? This is not a post-office building for the city of New York, or for any particular locality in the country. It is a station for the foreign business of the Nation. Through this office, as I said a moment ago, 90 per cent of the foreign-mail business of the Nation will pass. While I know there are many meritorious cases, this is an unusual one, and it is needed to take care of the Nation's business.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, we know that New York is a great city, and we know it probably needs a post office. I hope they will find a place to store their mail at less cost than the figures that have been stated as the possible rental. One post office in my State is doing business on the street almost, another partly in a shed, for lack of appropriations. Two other buildings have not been more than commenced; in fact, all over the United States are buildings that are under construction.

In this case the matter was not estimated for, and of course is not admissible to this bill, and I therefore make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I gave notice to the members of the Appropriations Committee that I would offer an amendment to the bill providing that an itemized statement should be made by the Secretary of the Treasury each year of all of the permanent appropriations. That information ought to be given in more detail than it is given under the existing law.

But the budget bill no doubt will become a law within a very short time. As one of the conferees on the budget bill, I know that there is a provision in it referring directly to permanent appropriations. I think it would be very much better not to offer the proposed amendment to this bill at this time, but to wait until the budget bill becomes a law and then offer the amendment to cover not only the law which is on the statute books to-day with reference to permanent appropriations but also to cover those that may be found in the budget bill. Therefore I am not going to offer that amendment to-day, but hope to be able to offer it when the deficiency appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest now to the chairman of the committee that we recur to the committee amendment on page 172, lines 8, 9, and 10, and the substitute for that amendment which I offered. Some conferences have been held, the matter having been passed over for that purpose, between the chairman of the committee and other members of the committee, myself, and other Senators.

I reluctantly suggest a modification of my amendment, with the understanding that in all probability it will be accepted.

First, on line 4 of the typewritten amendment strike out the words "in the several States and political subdivisions thereof"; second, strike out "$400,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$225,000"; third, with respect to the proviso, which is substantially the amendment in the bill, I have conferred with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who is the author of the amendment, and I desire to suggest two modifications in that amendment with his concurrence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Permit the Chair to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he has a perfect right to amend his own amendment in any way he sees fit without permission of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Arkansas understands that fully. I desire to state, however, in making the modification, my reason for doing so.

In view of the fact that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] made the statement on the floor that he desires this proviso retained in the amendment, I would not seek to modify that myself, although I believe it should be modified, except for the fact that the Senator from Kansas concurred in the suggestion.

Strike out $15,000 and insert in lieu thereof $25,000. Strike out the words "in Oklahoma, Nebraska, Kansas, and the Dakotas," so it will leave the provision general and enable the employment service to avail itself of $25,000 for forming an organization and mobilizing a force to harvest the wheat crop.

I suggest the amendment which I have indicated.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator wish it read from the desk? It is satisfactory to me. If anyone wishes it read from the desk, that should be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that as amended the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. If it is desired to report it, I will read it myself because I am familiar with the emendations. The proposed amendment is on page 172, in lieu of the committee amendment in lines 8, 9, and 10, to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of Labor to foster, promote, to develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, to advance their opportunities for profitable employment by maintaining a national system of employment offices and to coordinate the public employment offices throughout the country by furnishing and publishing information as to opportunities for employment and by maintaining a system for clearing labor between the several States, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official station, together with their per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, supplies and equipment, telegraph and telephone service, and printing and binding, $225,000: Provided, That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended to perfect an organization that can adequately mobilize and direct the workers required to harvest the wheat crop.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have just come on the floor from a committee meeting——

Mr. ROBINSON. I will say to the Senator from Oregon, if he has in mind the change of the proviso which he suggested to me, namely, making it apply generally to the wheat crop throughout the country, that, with the concurrence of the Senator from Kansas, the author of the original provision, I have made the modification, so that as it now reads $25,000 will be available for use generally rather than merely in certain States.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator from Arkansas. That is what I had in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. I send to the desk two amendments, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 91, in lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "at a rate not exceeding $3.50 each."

Mr. KENDRICK. There is another amendment which goes with the one just stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 94, line 13, it is proposed to strike out the word "such" and in line 14 to strike out the words "not exceeding $3.50."

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator propose, in line 14, to strike out the words "not exceeding $3.50"?

Mr. KENDRICK. My amendment is on page 94, in line 13, to strike out the word "such," and in line 14 to strike out the words "not exceeding $3.50."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may we have the amendments stated together in order that we may know just what is proposed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendments as requested.

The READING CLERK. On page 91, in lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "at a rate not exceeding $3.50 each"; on page 94, in line 13, to strike out the word "such"; and in line 14 to strike out the words "not exceeding $3.50."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have seen those amendments and unless they have been changed I misread them. I understood the proposition was to change the per diem from $3 to $3.50. I shall have to object to the amendments as they now stand, because they would give these employees a preference over other employees in other departments of the Government in, perhaps, 50 different positions.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, as it has been reported to me, there is at the present time a discrimination in regard to this particular class of Government employees. There is a statute now in existence which was passed in 1914 allowing a per diem in lieu of subsistence of $4, but the employees of the Government to whom the provision under consideration relates are prohibited by express limitation from receiving a per diem in excess of $3.50.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator from Wyoming does not realize that his amendment, if adopted, might increase their per diem allowance to $25 a day. It simply proposes to take the limit off altogether.

Mr. KENDRICK. No.

Mr. WARREN. Of course we could not allow that to be done.

Mr. KENDRICK. I ask my colleague if it is not true that under existing law a per diem allowance of $4 a day is granted?

Mr. WARREN. A per diem of $4 is allowed in some instances; but the Senator does not provide that the per diem may be increased from three dollars and a half a day to four dollars; his amendment takes off the limit entirely.

Mr. KENDRICK. I hold in my hand a copy of the law to which I refer, and I will read it.

Mr. SMOOT. From what is the Senator intending to read?

Mr. KENDRICK. From the sundry civil act, approved August 1, 1914. That act provides:

SEC. 13. That the heads of executive departments and other Government establishments are authorized to prescribe per diem rates of allowance not exceeding $4 in lieu of subsistence to persons engaged in field work or traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts of duty when not otherwise fixed by law. For the fiscal year 1916 and annually thereafter estimates of appropriations from which per diem allowances are to be paid shall specifically state the rates of such allowances.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator would entirely change that law. In no department of the Government is there provision for paying such a per diem as would be allowable if the Senator's amendment were agreed to. In fact, as the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has stated, the Senator's amendment removes all limitations and under it any amount of money might be expended that might be desired by the department. That, of course, can not be permitted. I thought the junior Senator from Wyoming had in mind to strike out "$3.50" and insert "$4."

Mr. KENDRICK. That is exactly the purpose which I wish to accomplish.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator's amendment will not do that. If the Senator wishes, on page 91, line 8, to strike out "$3.50" and insert "$4," and then, on page 94, in line 14, to make the same amendment, it would conform to the law which he has read.

Mr. KENDRICK. I accept that suggestion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the junior Senator from Wyoming as now proposed.

The READING CLERK. On page 91, line 8, it is proposed to strike out the figures "$3.50" and insert "$4."

Mr. WARREN. Let me say to the Senator that as the law now stands these men can get $4 if they actually expend it, if they bring in their expense accounts showing the expenditure of that sum; but the Senator proposes to raise the minimum from $3.50 to $4?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. What he wishes to do is to raise the minimum from $3.50 to $4, is it?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes; that is my desire.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to know where the amendment is proposed to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Wyoming.

The READING CLERK. On page 91, on line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$3.50" and to insert "$4," so that it will read:

At a rate not exceeding $4 each and actual necessary expenses for transportation.

Mr. WARREN. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Secretary will state the next amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Wyoming.

The READING CLERK. On page 94, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "$3.50" and insert "$4."

Mr. WARREN. So far as I am concerned, I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. I offer a further amendment, which I desire may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 91, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the figures "$2,700" and to insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3,000."

Mr. WARREN. I make the point of order against the last amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Wyoming state the ground of his point of order?

Mr. WARREN. The amendment proposes a boosting of salaries that has not been authorized or recommended by any committee of the Senate, and proposes to increase the amount carried in the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, an hour or so ago I offered an amendment on line 9, page 108, to strike out "$664,000" provided for the Newlands project in Nevada and substituting "$974,000." My colleague [Mr. HENDERSON] offered an amendment to the amendment offered by me which I accepted. The Chair then stated that the amendment offered by me, as amended by my colleague, was subject to a point of order which had been raised, and the amendment was ruled out. I therefore now offer an amendment to strike out "$664,000" on line 9, page 108, and insert "$974,00."

I have no desire to make any statement on the matter except simply this——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada made a very frank statement about the matter, but the amendment, if agreed to, will take advantage of a mistake in the estimate that was made. The official who made the estimate has since stated that appropriations in accordance therewith would be ineffective if passed. If the Senator's amendment should be adopted, the result will be that the Reclamation Service will reach over and take the money from other equally deserving reclamation projects to build up this particular one. I trust the motion will not prevail.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada is not relying on any mistaken estimate. The statement of the Senator from Wyoming is inaccurate.

Mr. WARREN. In what respect?

Mr. PITTMAN. The estimate is as follows——

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is alluding to the testimony before the House committee a long time ago, but we have later evidence from the same source which the Senator quotes.

Mr. PITTMAN. I intend to answer the Senator. I say that his statement is inaccurate. I read now from the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, this matter being under discussion, and Mr. Davis, the Director of the Reclamation Service, testifying. He says:

The CHAIRMAN. How much do you estimate next year for drainage?
Mr. DAVIS. The drainage estimate for next year is $300,000. That is on the supposition that the settlers will form a drainage district. They will soon vote on the question of a drainage district, and we believe that it will carry.

I will interpolate that it has carried.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, what has carried?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. Davis in his testimony made reference to the establishment of a drainage district, and I say that district has been established.

The CHAIRMAN. What are the other allotments?
Mr. DAVIS. We propose to extend the storage works. That is largely to purchase rights around Lake Tahoe. That amount is $405,000. The allotment to the canal system is $35,000; to laterals, $45,000; drainage, $300,000; survey of farm units, $3,000; telephone line, $2,000; operation and maintenance, $110,000; and $70,000 approximately for reimbursable amounts and indirect charges.

That is the estimate of the money required. If Mr. Davis has told the committee anything since that time, he has not told them the money was not needed, and he has not told them the estimate was a mistake, but he has told them there is not sufficient money in the fund.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator must not allude to me as saying that I claim that the money is not necessary. I think it is necessary, as I think additional money is necessary in the case of the other projects, and I am very sorry that we are not in a position to appropriate the amount which should be appropriated.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator erroneously stated that the Senator from Nevada was relying upon an estimate which had been changed.

Mr. WARREN. No; I said upon a mistaken estimate, which I tried to explain some time ago was based upon there being in the reclamation fund $5,000,000 more than is applicable to this work. At the time I thought I stated plainly that the estimate was based upon the supposed early receipt of money from oil leases, and that source failing, that there might be some legislation providing that $5,000,000 might be borrowed from the Government, which would then make good the estimates quoted by the Senator. And he will also notice that all of the others were estimated for at very much larger amounts than those at which they were placed in the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I still think my statement is correct and that the estimate is correct. It was based, of course, on the theory that they would have money in the fund to carry out the estimate. Later on the director informed the committee I understand, that by reason of certain conditions they would not have that much money in the fund, and that it would be necessary, therefore, to cut down each one of these estimates. That is all true enough.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator knows that I did not make any point of order against his amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. WARREN. I simply asked that it might not be agreed to. It is true that there has been more money estimated for. I admitted that when we went over it in the first place. More was estimated for in the original estimates, and the Senator is right in claiming that it was in the estimates; and that also applied to all the others.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was just thinking that possibly the Senator's remarks might lead some one to the conclusion that there was a reflection upon the method by which I had presented it.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no, no; on the contrary, the Senator from Nevada has every sympathy on the part of the chairman of the committee, and he can not possibly regret any more than I regret the fact that we are put in this position. In other words, we are promised a little bag of candy that has not yet been purchased. We have an estimate on money that may come in in a year and may come in in a year and a half, but it is bound to come at some time, let us hope.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course, I know that this appropriation is necessary for the protection of the interests of the Government just as well as for the protection of the interests of these settlers, and therefore I am urging it. There are some other projects that may not be of such importance, and I really would not regret it if we should take some of that money and use it for this purpose that is necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say that if we are going to increase any of these appropriations I think we ought to increase them all and then let every project take its chance as to whether or not it will get the money. I want to say that they will not get it for the coming year, however, because the Government has not got the money; but if we are going to do it I want to be perfectly fair to every project and treat them all alike.

I only wish that we had the money and could go on with all of them. I recognize that the building of these projects is something like the projects established in connection with the rivers and harbors of our country. Every year we have a river and harbor bill, and the most of the money is spent for digging out roots and scraping out sand that has accumulated there during the previous year, and the project itself is put ahead very little, indeed. If we had the necessary amount of money, what we ought to do would be to appropriate the money to finish every one of these projects before ever there was another one started. That would be the businesslike way and the economical way of completing them; but we are not in that position.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the Senator know whether the other projects need the money now as much as this Newlands project needs it?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President; I know that a great many of them need it just as much.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are they suffering for lack of drainage, as is the Newlands project to-day?

Mr. SMOOT. The drainage proposition is another question entirely. I wish I had some of the water that the Senator is trying to drain off, in order to put it upon some of the barren lands that are waiting to get water, under this very appropriation made here, on the Strawberry project. We have not got the water to soak the land so that it will need any draining. The reclamation project was to take care of arid and semiarid lands, with no idea that part of the money would be expended for drainage purposes; but even though it was not, I am perfectly frank to say to the Senator that under the project he has in Nevada, if it has developed that the use of water upon those lands has finally waterlogged the land so that it needs drainage, I am not going to object to it; but I want that project to take its chances with every other project, and when we get enough money to finish them, why let us finish them. Inasmuch as we have not the amount of money necessary to finish them all, let us all take our chances equally, and let us as soon as possible get to the point where they can be completed.

I do not think the Senator from Nevada wants to stand upon the floor of the Senate and say that his project ought to be ahead of all other projects. I would not do it for my State, and I do not believe the Senator from Nevada wants to do it for his State. That is the position that the committee has taken. We refused to appropriate one dollar more than was finally decided upon by the Reclamation Service, based upon the amount of money that the service know they will have. That is the situation, and I can not see how it is possible for the Senate to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, just one word in that connection.

Here are two projects started, say, at about the same time. One project is more fortunately located, and there is no need for drainage. The other project, however, must have drainage in order to keep the soil in a productive state. Now, before going on with the first project, which does not need drainage, it seems to me that it is highly advisable that sufficient money be appropriated to see that drainage is provided on the project that does need drainage, especially when productive lands are threatened and a loss of production will result from a failure to provide drainage. We have this situation: When the Newlands project was started, no drainage facilities were provided because it was supposed that it was not necessary. We find now that the water has come almost to the surface, from no feet to two feet. There are over 2,100 acres which are threatened with a great loss of production.

It seems to me that instead of taking all of this money, and saying that this project and that project shall have each its proportionate share, you should look to the needs of each individual project, and where you can save production, sufficient appropriation should be made to take care of that project.

That is the only reason why my colleague and I are asking for this appropriation, because it will save to the State of Nevada and to the Government a great deal that will have to be expended in the future if this work is not done now. We will lose in production, we will lose in settlement upon the property, and the returns that will come to the Government from that settlement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator I wish to say that I have listened to statements made before the committee time and time again by Members of the House and members of the committee portraying a condition just about the same as the Senator has portrayed. In connection with what I have already said, I wish to say that it would hardly be fair to penalize these other projects if they have been successfully located, and do not need drainage, because one of the projects needed it, and was perhaps unfortunately located.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not want the Senator to misunderstand me. I am not asking that any other project be penalized; but if those other projects do not need the money, as the Newlands project does, then why not take care of that project and save it? The others will go along just the same, perhaps, with a less expenditure of money this year than the Newlands project.

Mr. SMOOT. But they are penalized, because if we give $310,000 more to this project after the House has given $664,000, the other projects will have to be penalized to that amount, because of the fact that otherwise they would receive their proportion of that amount of money.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not better to take care of a project that is producing than to use money to put new lands in for future production? Is it not better to save the production that you now have in hand than to look to future production?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there is hardly a project here that is not producing to a limited extent, and all of them expect to increase their production when the projects are completed. You can take any project that is mentioned in this bill, and none of them are completed, and all of them are waiting for appropriations to be completed.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is true; but are any of them in the position that the Newlands project is in now, suffering from lack of drainage?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes, Mr. President. I need not go through them here, but there are projects whose representatives have come before the committee and stated that unless they got an appropriation of two or three times the amount we have given in this bill the whole fruit crop will be materially decreased this year.

Mr. HENDERSON. The only project I know of is the project in New Mexico, but that has gone for such a length of time that the soil, I understand, has soured and will not produce.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that that is not the only project.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is the only one that has come to my attention.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator from Nevada well enough to know that he does not want to be unfair to any other State or any other project.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is true; I do not.

Mr. SMOOT. And I want to say frankly and freely that if we put this amendment in here it will be unfair to the other States and the other projects; and it is for that reason, and that only, that I oppose the amendment. I wish it were possible that we could do it and be fair to all the other projects, but we can not do it. We have not got the money, and if it is taken from this project the other projects will have to lose that amount of money. That is all there is to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is not economy in any sense of the word to neglect at this time such an important matter as this. It is vital to the Government, as well as to the settlers on this project, that the work on this drainage system be started this year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. WARREN. I trust that the amendment will not be agreed to.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I want to offer a number of amendments.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I will yield now, and prepare the other amendments.

Mr. NUGENT. I merely desire to give notice that I shall reserve a separate vote in the Senate on the committee amendment known as section 5, commencing on page 192.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a committee amendment which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 21, line 13, after the word "care," it is proposed to insert the following:

The allotments made to the War and Navy Departments shall also be available for expenditure under the various headings of appropriations made to said departments as may be necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, because of late legislation which was not passed when the House considered this bill, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 33, after line 10, insert the following:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

For carrying out the provisions of section 13 of an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees of the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, as follows: Two clerks at $2,000 each, 5 clerks at $1,800 each, 5 clerks at $1,600 each, 15 clerks at $1,400 each, 8 clerks at $1,200 each, $51,600; for salaries and other purposes for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, to be immediately available, $4,300; and for stationery, printing, purchase of books, office equipment, and other supplies, $5,000; in all, $60,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I thought of offering amendments to make the other irrigation projects equal to the one the Senate has already decided to increase. But I do not believe I will do that, Mr. President. I will let this go to conference, and then we can see what the conferees will do.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, this morning I offered an amendment relating to appropriations for the employees in the Office of the Supervising Architect. Objection was made to that amendment, and the point of order was made against it that it had not been estimated for, an additional appropriation being provided for by the amendment, and the Chair sustained the point of order.

Since that time, however, there has been put into my hands a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, a letter the existence of which I did not know of at the time I presented the amendment this morning and at the time the point of order was sustained. In view of the letter, I want to renew my offer of this amendment, and base it upon the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. I desire to know whether or not this is not an estimate.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator to whom the letter is addressed.

Mr. STERLING. The letter is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate, dated May 12, signed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. Is an estimate made for it?

Mr. STERLING. An estimate is made for it. I will have the letter read, and it can be decided then as to whether an estimate is made. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury may be read in connection with the offer of this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom was this letter sent?

Mr. STERLING. It was sent to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have a letter directed to me by the Secretary of the Treasury, I assume the one the Senator has a copy of. It is not an estimate under our rules and regulations. I do not see the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] in his place, but he came to me yesterday and asked if I had considered this matter of the architect's office, because the Secretary of the Treasury stated that the committee had raised the salaries of part of the force, those outside of the office, and wanted the others raised accordingly. I showed the bill as it was to the Senator from Virginia, and he stated that, of course, there was a mistake about it. As to what an estimate shall be, I presume, Mr. President, that you have the rule before you.

The VICE PRESIDENT. So that we may get to this matter, I have ruled on this question once before. I have ruled that a Senator can not get a letter or an estimate and introduce it on the floor of the Senate. It must be sent to the Presiding Officer of the Senate and by him referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. Exactly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I have decided that way once, and I am going to stick to it.

Mr. WARREN. I make the point of order against this proposition.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask this question in this connection, as to whether, if the amount proposed by the amendment is less than the original estimate, that rule applies?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There can not be an estimate unless it comes to the Presiding Officer of the Senate and is handed by him down to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Secretary of the Treasury has no more right to direct his communication to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations than he has to direct it to the King of Great Britain.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that the Secretary sent it to me by a messenger, and, of course, it could as well have been sent as the Presiding Officer states. The rule is as old as the Senate itself, that matters of that kind must pass across the desk to the committees for their consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I have so ruled, and I am going to stick to it.

Mr. KING. I offer the following amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 110, line 12, insert the following:

For the survey of the Green River and its tributaries and the Price River, in Duchesne, Uinta, Carbon, Emery, and Grand Counties of Utah, to discover suitable reservoir sites, to ascertain the possibility of storing the flood waters of said rivers, and to determine the area of the public lands which may be irrigated by such stored waters, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $50,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that is a suggestion to raise the amount of money and to introduce a new subject which has not been estimated for, and has not been recommended to the Committee on Appropriations by any standing committee. I make a point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 36, strike out lines 11, 12, 13, and 14 and in lieu thereof insert the following:

That no person be paid by said board out of the appropriation contained in this act at a rate of compensation exceeding $2,500 per annum and rates above that sum, except not to exceed the following: One at $7,500; 2 at $6,000; 4 at $5,000; 30 at not to exceed $4,000; 40 at not to exceed $3,500; 20 at not to exceed $3,250; 80 at not to exceed $3,000; 80 at not to exceed $2,750; 100 at not to exceed $2,500.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the appropriation in the bill to which this amendment refers is an appropriation of $90,000,000 for the vocational rehabilitation of the young men of the Army and Navy who were disabled during their service in the war. That portion of the section which my amendment attacks is the one limiting the salaries which can be paid by the Vocational Educational Board to the teachers and instructors who are engaged in the work of rehabilitation.

The amendment which I have proposed was offered by Mr. FESS, of the House, who is chairman of the Committee on Education, and it was defeated in the House by a vote of 31 to 22. That was the vote of all who were present at the time the amendment was offered in the House.

I am going to take but a few moments of the Senate's time to call attention to the fact that the board is unable to employ the right kind of instructors and teachers for the rehabilitation of these young men.

From my viewpoint, we ought not to be niggardly about the proper training of these young fellows. Many of them are blinded; many of them are severely crippled and in such condition that they are not able to make a living in the struggle which must be made nowadays to live, and there is a chance, if they are properly cared for and properly educated and properly trained, for them, if not to make money, if not to make a living entirely, at least to give them employment and make them forget the suffering they are compelled to bear through life.

There was a limitation placed upon the amount which could be paid by this board to teachers under the act approved July 19, 1919, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1920. The purpose of the amendment is to remove that limitation measurably, at least to a certain extent, so that men and women who can properly instruct these young men may be employed.

A letter from the chief of the division of rehabilitation, Mr. James B. Monroe, vice chairman of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, testifies to the fact that in the district offices they lost 148 of their staff by resignation since July last, and that is due to the limitation placed upon the board in reference to the salaries of the employees. There were 148 who then went out of the employ of the board.

The purpose of the amendment is to enable the board, within certain limitations, because salaries of a certain number of employees, not all, are fixed by the act itself, to fix amounts which will insure the retention of capable men and women in the service. I have been a little bit surprised at the condition of the board with reference to the young men who are now in training.

I call attention to the statement of Mr. FESS, than whom I suppose there is no one in the House of Representatives who knows more about the condition of these young men, because his committee has been investigating the whole subject of vocational rehabilitation. He says, in speaking to his amendment in the House:

Up to date—

That was on the 6th day of May, 1920—

Up to date there are registrations in this work of 206,666 soldiers. Contract has been made with 174,197. Surveys have been made of 141,953.

He goes on and discusses the subject at some length, and shows that other Governments, particularly Canada, have gone a long way in undertaking to rehabilitate these young men and fit them for the duties of life. I say that we ought not to take any chances on the discharge of the teachers who are engaged in this magnificent work. America ought not to be behind Canada, it ought not to be behind any country, in undertaking to restore these young men to citizenship and to useful life.

I hope the limitation will be removed by the amendments which are proposed, so that the proper men and women may be employed in the work of rehabilitation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I have great interest in the matter the Senator has brought up. It is a matter I have dwelt with, I will not say night and day, but almost so since this bill came over from the House. I wish to make a statement, so the Senate may know exactly the situation.

When we started under this rehabilitation plan—that is, vocational rehabilitation—we found that no salaries had been established except what were paid out of lump sums. We found one man receiving two salaries that amounted to $10,000 a year, and others which seemed to both the House and Senate unreasonable. So there was a perfect understanding here, not only with the Committee on Appropriations, but with the Committee on Education and Labor, that we provide a list of employees and salaries allowed, and at the end the inhibition which renders it impossible to pay larger salaries. I shall read the list of the men and their salaries as they stand now. Then I shall give the list of those asked for, and then, I will say to the Senate, I have prepared an amendment which, I believe, will provide everything necessary; in fact, I do not know but that I am going too far on the liberal side in what I shall ask the Senator to accept in place of his amendment, because, as the Senator says, the Member of Congress, Mr. FESS, brought the matter up in the House and it was defeated. While the vote was small, the percentage, as the Senator knows, was rather large against it.

My investigation has convinced me that a proposition containing as much as that could neither pass the House nor resist the attacks in conference, and the able Senator from Oregon knows what it is to be in conference and to struggle over various matters.

As the salaries stand now there is 1 at $6,000, 2 at $5,000, 28 not exceeding $4,000, 27 not exceeding $3,500, 70 not exceeding $3,000, 60 not exceeding $2,750, and 100 at $2,500 each, amounting to 288 men and a total of $847,500 in salaries. We had before us an officer of this board who had matters in charge, and he said it was not so much a matter of having too few men as it was a matter of the salaries being too small, as the Senator has so well stated, and because they were leaving and going to other employment.

That matter comes up—allow me to digress for a moment—in all of these various boards and bureaus and departments. All alike say they are losing men. Ordinarily I think that the loss of a few, allowing them to go out into the world and tell them what they have learned in Washington, and letting in a little new blood, is to the interest of the Government. But this is a case where this work has to be done, the larger portion of it, if I understand it correctly—and I submit that to the Senator—in the next year; that is, the present year and the next year.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is necessarily an urgency appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. But raising the limit means that again we have a lump sum that we have fought so long and have been compelled to decline many times. So I have thought we would furnish the following, if it may meet the approval of the Senator, and I think this can be maintained. My suggestion would be to add to the list I have stated 1 man at $6,500; add 1 more to the list of $5,000 men, 2 more at $4,000, 10 at $3,500, 10 at $3,250, 10 at $3,000; or 34 men altogether. Of course, they ask to commence at $7,500 for 1, 2 at $6,000, 4 at $4,000, and so on down.

The differences are in the two or three matters at the top and not so much in the lower part. They estimated here by not cuting off any of those whom they say they can not obtain for the money, and consequently the places are vacant. One hundred of those are counted in to make up the number, but the real difference in my judgment is in that they need, even from their own statement, the 34 men that I have stated.

If the Senator will permit me, I shall send this amendment to the desk and have it read and the Senator may offer it as his.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Before the Senator gives that up, I should like to ask him a question about it.

The Senator has read the salaries now paid by the board to its employees. The amendment which I proposed fixes the salary of 1 at $7,500, 2 at $6,000, 4 at $5,000, 30 at not to exceed $4,000, 40 at not to exceed $3,500, 20 at not to exceed $3,250, 80 at not to exceed $3,000, 80 at not to exceed $2,750, and 1 at not to exceed $2,500.

Mr. WARREN. That is exactly the list we have here, and is exactly the Fess amendment, which the House would not entertain. I submit to the Senator if it is not better to undertake what we believe is necessary, rather than to leave it entirely to the judgment of one man, whose opinion was not sustained by the vote of the House of which he is a Member.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Because the proposed amendment which the Senator offers relieves the situation somewhat, whether they can be retained——

Mr. WARREN. We can at least make the trial. Every appropriation bill that we have passed lately of a general nature—that is, such as deficiencies—has contained a large amount for this very board, and there is now before the House a bill where they have put in several millions more; so that if there still remains a deficiency it can come up later and be taken care of.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask if the amendment which the Senator proposes takes the present list of employees with the amounts paid to each and adds to the list now employed the number of men that are proposed in his amendment?

Mr. WARREN. Exactly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I believe I am willing to accept that as an amendment to the proposition I have offered, because I know, feeling as the Senator does and as I know some of the members of his committee feel, that he would have a hard time to sustain larger amounts in conference. Feeling that that will relieve the situation, I am glad to accept that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon withdraw his amendment and introduce this?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 36, line 14, after the word "made" insert the following:

except that there may be employed during the fiscal year 1921 in addition to this limitation employees at annual rates of compensation as follows: One at $6,500, 1 at $5,000, 2 at $4,000 each, 10 at $3,500 each, 10 at $3,250 each, and 10 at $3,000 each.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further amendments?

Mr. WARREN. The committee has no further amendments.

Mr. NUGENT. I direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to the committee amendment on page 192, section 5. I desire to make a point of order against that amendment on the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill. It is a provision extending the time within which the railroads must repay loans.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say that the amendment has been agreed to and it is too late to make a point of order against it.

Mr. NUGENT. I submit the matter for the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WARREN. There will have to be a reconsideration of the vote by which it was agreed to before the point of order can be entertained.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the point of order at this time, but the merits of the proposition. I think if the point of order had been submitted in time it would undoubtedly have been applicable, as the provision constitutes general legislation. The matter was discussed at some length this afternoon, and I am not sure whether the Senator from Idaho was present.

Mr. NUGENT. I will say to the Senator that I was not here.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator might make his point of order later when the parliamentary situation is different from that which exists now. I am morally sure the point of order does not apply now, the provision having been agreed to in Committee of the Whole and the bill still being in Committee of the Whole. But, with the indulgence of the Senate, I wish to ask the Senator from Idaho to refrain from making the point of order, as I believe the legislation is wise and almost, if not quite, indispensable to the working out of the transportation condition as it now exists.

The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, which has jurisdiction of this legislation, has reported this provision with additional provisions which the Committee on Appropriations did not incorporate in this bill. While I have not had an opportunity of carefully analyzing the language in the bill that relates to this subject, in my judgment it is very important and very necessary legislation, and I hope the Senator will not make the point of order at any subsequent time.

There is great necessity for an increase in railroad equipment in the nature of locomotives and cars, both freight and passenger.

The transportation condition now existing, which is due in part to the lack of these necessary facilities, is quite appalling. The commerce of the country is threatened with a tie-up of the most disastrous character. The Interstate Commerce Commission is now attempting to work out the situation under the provisions of the transportation act. The principal features of the provision in the bill now under consideration which have been mentioned by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], in my judgment, meet with almost universal approval upon the part of those who have carefully studied the subject. The Committee on Appropriations, if I am correctly informed, eliminated from the provision, unanimously reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee, the paragraph or paragraphs authorizing the extension of the time for which certain debts due from the railroads to the Government may be funded from 5 to 15 years, and that provision is not in the bill. The two principal features of this bill as it relates to the transportation question, as I understand, are as follows:

First, in the transportation act of 1920 a revolving fund of $300,000,000 was created, and that fund may be used in part for new loans to railroads. The transportation act contains a provision that requires the authorities making the loan to exact adequate security, and that provision nullified the purpose of authorizing the loan. It is desirable that the loans be made to the roads that can not operate successfully and effectively without such loans, and those roads, for the most part, are unable to furnish first-class security. So the transportation act, as respects such loans, is to be relaxed by the provision so as to authorize the commission to make the loan if it is necessary to enable the railroad properly to meet the transportation needs of the country, if the commission is satisfied that, considering the condition of the railroad, its "indebtedness, contract obligations, operation, and earning power, * * * together with such other facts relating to the propriety and expediency of granting the loan applied for," the applicant will be able to make good the obligation. That provision undoubtedly is in the public interest, and is necessary to relieve the existing transportation situation. I think the provision also contemplates the organization of a car trust and the issuance of certificates in connection therewith.

Considered from the standpoint of the condition of the transportation interest of the country, I believe that this legislation ought to be enacted, and that it ought to be enacted speedily. So I repeat the hope that when the bill goes into the Senate neither the Senator from Idaho nor any other Senator will find it advisable to make a point of order against it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I wish to call his attention to the fact that the representatives of all the railroads, the strong as well as the weak, who appeared before the Interstate Commerce Committee made it very clear that in the transition period from Government ownership back to private ownership it was practically impossible, not for the weak roads alone but even for the strong roads, to meet their obligations within five years; that the credit of the roads and their ability to meet their interest charges and other obligations which had been incurred were such that their obligations under the revolving fund would have to be extended over a period of 15 years in order for the $300,000,000 to be adequate to meet the requirements of the roads; that within five years from the time they assumed control of their property they could not make sufficient money to meet the obligations which had been incurred under the use of the revolving fund.

Mr. NUGENT. May I ask the Senator when that fact developed?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It developed merely from their experience in connection with previous borrowings before they went under Government ownership. They found when they had floated certain securities and that within a period of five years it was practically impossible to meet the expenses and overhead charges of the roads, and also to discharge their maturing obligations.

Mr. NUGENT. Then, Mr. President, the railroad executives were familiar with the fact at the time they appeared before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which my friend from South Carolina is a member; and, if I remember correctly, so far as the transportation bill is concerned, as that bill was reported by the committee to the Senate, it provided that the loan of $300,000,000 under the revolving fund should be paid to the Government within a period of five years.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; but I should like to remind the Senator of certain conditions of which, I think, he as well as myself and everyone else who has had to do with any of these matters is cognizant. There are certain financial conditions now existing which differ radically from those antedating the recent war, and it was made apparent that certain institutions, certain sources from which loans could formerly be secured, were not able to furnish them. The rate of interest also and other complications made it practically impossible for the railroads to meet existing conditions.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment in that connection, so far as that is concerned, the railway executives insisted all the time that more liberal provision should be written into the statutes not only regarding the time for the reimbursement of the loans to be made but regarding, as I have already stated, the time in which existing indebtedness should be repaid to the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. They insisted all the while that the railroad finances were in such condition that the circumstances not only justified but required liberality with regard to the time of repayment of both classes of obligations.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is true. It was also made manifest that the weaker roads, in order to enjoy any benefits that might accrue from the $300,000,000 revolving fund, must have some provision made by which they could come into possession of some of the money other than by putting up certain forms of collateral. It was the weaker roads in which we were interested more than the stronger. The car-trust certificates, which contemplate, practically, a mortgage on the entire property, would be the only way by which they could come into possession of any of the $300,000,000, and I see by a casual glance that this proposed legislation is to meet that very emergency.

I wish to say to the Senator from Idaho that the committee went into this matter very thoroughly, and, as the Senator from Arkansas will bear me out, we went into every angle of this matter so far as the public interest is concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will indulge me, upon reflection I do not believe that the amendment is subject to a point of order even if the point of order were made in apt time, for the reason that it has been reported by a standing committee of the Senate having jurisdiction of the subject matter, and under the rules of the Senate that plainly makes it admissible in spite of the rule against legislation.

It is true, as I have already stated, that this amendment does not embrace all that the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce have recommended be enacted, but there is nothing in the amendment which has not been favorably reported, and unanimously reported, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce. In view of that fact, anticipating the announcement made some time ago, that a point of order would hereafter be made against the provision, I merely wish to say that I do not think it is subject to a point of order at any time, or that it would have been subject to a point of order if made when the provision was reached in consideration of the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I agree entirely with the Senator from Arkansas that if we should apply the rule as it is applied in the House the amendment would not be subject to the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not able to catch the Senator's statement.

Mr. WARREN. I say I do not think the point of order should be made now, as in Committee of the Whole, after we passed on the question, and I do not think, in view of what the Senator has stated, that it is subject to the point of order. It is a matter of legislation; it has already been provided for, in a way, and been reported from a committee. The fact that it has been reported unanimously may not make any difference, but it has been reported unanimously also from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge will allow me, there is already a law pertaining to the subject matter.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And there have been recommended certain modifications, of which this amendment takes cognizance, from a standing committee, as the Senator from Arkansas intimates.

To sum up the whole matter, Mr. President, I think the committee was unanimous in its recommendation to the Senate that the legislation embodied in a bill which has been presented is absolutely essential to meet the conditions which now confront us, and this provision in the bill is in pursuance of that recommendation. So even though a point of order might lie against it, I hope it will not be made.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Idaho will not insist upon the point of order. I wish to state how this amendment came to be recommended by the committee. Committees of shippers from various sections of the country, all the way from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic, came here. From 50 to 75 men appeared here representing leading industries. They included committees of farmers, of grain men, of lumbermen, and shippers in all branches of business and commerce.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And cattle raisers.

Mr. KELLOGG. And cattle raisers, and all branches of business in the country. They came before the committee and presented arguments which have been printed and are now before the Senate.

It appeared, as we already knew, that during the two years and two months of the Government administration of the railroads only about 100,000 cars and a few engines had been bought—I do not remember the exact number—but ordinarily it takes 100,000 cars a year to keep the equipment of the roads up to standard, without any increase at all; in other words, about 100,000 cars, 2,000 locomotives, and three or four thousand specialty cars are destroyed each year and go out of business. So it was estimated that we are to-day short 226,000 cars, without any increase of business, 3,100 locomotives, and about 4,000 specialty cars.

The committees to which I have referred urged us strongly to increase this appropriation to $600,000,000. The railroads did not suggest this provision in the first instance. They urged that this $300,000,000 that has been appropriated was not available under the terms of the original act, because they could not buy cars and make car equipments for five years, and only the roads best able to provide themselves with equipment could, therefore, take advantage of the loan in order to buy equipment. Now, those roads which could borrow money did not need the $300,000,000; and the result, if we had left the law unchanged, is that only the best roads could have taken the loan. They recommended very strongly that we change the terms of the loan and extend it to 15 years, so that they could have car equipment, and we added a provision that only roads which could not otherwise procure money should have the advantage of the loan.

The Pennsylvania Railroad, it appears, is borrowing money. It has already sold its notes at 7½ per cent. The same is true of the Louisville & Nashville, the Atlantic Coast Line, the New York Central, and some of the other lines; but there are many lines in the country that have not yet settled with the Government, and the condition of the money market has become such in the last three months that it is impossible for them to use the loan for five years unless they can put it into car equipment.

In the old years car equipments used to be made for 10 years, but those were days when you could buy a steel-frame car for $1,000 or $900; some of them for less than that. To-day it costs $3,500 to buy a steel-frame car. An engine that cost $15,000 15 years ago costs to-day $65,000 to $70,000; and the result is that the roads must pay down at least 30 per cent upon the equipment, and make an equipment trust extending over 15 years.

After we had taken the testimony of all the shippers, we did not recommend all they asked. We recommended extending no further loan than that provided in the original act, because we felt as though those lines which had credit ought to be required to go in the market and get the money there, and this amendment requires them to do it; but we did feel as though we ought to make this loan available. After that, we called on the Interstate Commerce Commission, and consultations were held with them and with the Railroad Administration, and every one of them urgently recommended the extension of the time of this loan so that the money could be loaned to companies on car equipment, and that they could use this money to get equipment.

I wish to say to the Senator that the shortage of equipment to-day is nothing to what it will be next year unless the most strenuous efforts are made to relieve it, and every car shop in the country must be kept busy. Even then, it is admitted that not over 100,000 cars, 2,000 engines, and perhaps 4,000 passenger cars can be obtained within the next year. They will cost something over $600,000,000. The cattle shippers and the grain shippers of this country are suffering to-day as never before for want of prompt transportation. It appeared in testimony before the committee that stock shippers, where the cattle were fat and ready to be shipped to market, were being kept out every day because the equipment could not be obtained; and that is the trouble with the coal shipments in the country. This condition grew out of the war, to be sure; but we ought to make every effort to-day to make available this loan, so that it may be used to relieve the congested condition in this country, and even then we are not going to have the equipment necessary to move the crops.

I hope the Senator will not urge this point of order. We did not go as far as the shippers wished us to go. We declined to recommend any new loans or further appropriations; but we did recommend unanimously, after consultation with the House Appropriations Committee and consultation with the House Interstate Commerce Committee, that section 210 be amended as it is in this bill.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, I am well aware of the fact that considerable difficulty has recently been experienced in the matter of transportation. I also appreciate the fact that it was due in large measure to efforts on the part of certain transportation companies to send all the freight shipped to the Atlantic coast to New York and New England points, with the result that, according to advices contained in the newspapers, it was a difficult matter to get loaded cars into those sections and to get empties out because of the unprecedented congestion.

If I remember correctly, the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce spent weeks and months of time investigating transportation matters generally prior to the time the so-called transportation act was favorably reported to the Senate. I necessarily assume that the examination conducted by the committee was exhaustive. The transportation act as finally enacted into law provided for a guaranteed return to the railroads of not less than 5½ per cent on the aggregate value of all the railroad property in the country; also for an additional one-half per cent, the money derived therefrom to be loaned to railway companies for the purpose of purchasing equipment, and so forth. The railway companies, according to the public prints, have recently made application to the Interstate Commerce Commission for an increase in freight rates over those now existing of approximately 30 per cent, which means that the people of the country will be obliged to pay more than $1,000,000,000 annually in order to pay to the railroad companies the 5½ per cent guaranteed net return. The transportation act also provided for a revolving fund in the sum of $300,000,000 to be loaned to the railway companies and to be paid by them within five years.

I also assume that if proper representations had been made to the Committee on Interstate Commerce that committee would have included in the bill reported to the Senate a provision for loaning that money for 15 years instead of 5; but the bill reported was enacted, and now, within a period of a few months thereafter, the railroad companies are desirous of receiving further aid at the hands of the Government and are asking that the moneys loaned to them out of the revolving fund need not be paid by them for 15 years. I object to extending the time for payment.

The statement has been made by a number of Senators that it is absolutely necessary that this amendment to the pending bill be agreed to, in order that certain railway equipment may be purchased, because of the alleged fact the railway systems of the country are in dire need of additional equipment. According to statements made by the Director General of Railroads, during the period of Federal control 100,000 cars and more than 1,900 engines were placed in operation on the railroads in addition to more than 2,000 locomotives and 69,000 cars that had been ordered by the railroad executives prior to the taking over of the roads by the Government; and I will venture the assertion that from the standpoint of equipment the roads were never so well supplied as they were when the Government surrendered possession of them to their owners.

I desire to again go on record as opposed to taxing the people of the country through increased freight rates, to the extent of more than a billion dollars per annum, to pay the railroads a net return of not less than 5½ per cent on the value of all their property, and as opposed to taxing the people to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars to be loaned to the railroads and not to be paid for 15 years.

So far as the point of order is concerned, permit me to say, that if the section to which I have made it is, under the rules, open to the point of order, it appears to me that it is immaterial whether the question is raised now or at some other time. It seems to me that if it is subject to a point of order, it can be made at any time prior to the time the bill is actually agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I want to say just one word in reference to the point of order.

The rule of the Senate is that legislation on an appropriation bill is not in order unless that legislation has been reported to the Senate and is on the calendar coming from one of the standing committees of the Senate. Before the pending sundry civil bill was reported to the Senate the Committee on Interstate Commerce—the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] making the report—reported to the Senate Senate bill 4373. That bill amends two sections of the transportation act of 1920, known as the Cummins bill. Those sections are 207 and 210, entirely separate in their identity, and in no way connected with each other, except that they are both in the same transportation act. In other words, the one section does not relate to the other section or affect its meaning.

The first section would have made the authorization of a loan of something like $351,000,000 to the railroads. The second section has to do with money already provided for in the transportation act, and to a large extent the amendment relates to the extension of a loan and the discretion of the commission in distributing money already in their hands to the various railroads according to their needs.

Mr. President, I take it that the precedents in the Senate are not controverted, that if this bill, taken by its four corners, having been reported from a committee of the Senate to the Senate, had been offered by the Appropriations Committee as an amendment to the pending bill, it would not be subject to a point of order. However, the committee does not offer the first section, but offers word for word the identical language in the second section.

I make the point, although, as far as I know, there is no precedent for the position. The Senate can now make its own precedent, as there is no precedent heretofore established. The reason of the law is the life of the law, and the reason of the rule is the life of the rule. The reason for not allowing legislation on appropriation bills is to assure the enactment of permanent legislation which has been carefully considered by standing committees of the Senate, in order that the legislation might be properly perfected. I know of no other reason why the rule should exist as it does. The rule in the House of Representatives prohibits any legislation being attached to an appropriation bill. The rule in the Senate admits legislation on appropriation bills which has been viséd.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Alabama point out to the Chair a rule which permits the Committee on Appropriations to introduce general legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. The last clause in the first paragraph of Rule XVI, which is as follows:

> Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate—

And so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. That only has reference, however, to an increase of an appropriation already in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly. The third section says:

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Chair may be right, but there is a semicolon there, which I see no reason for inserting in the language of the rule if the Chair is right. It says:

> Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

So far as I can see, in this rule that has no connection with the previous sentence, that it is in aid of an appropriation. I will not read the whole rule, but let me read the last part of Rule XVI:

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

There the connection with the appropriation ceases. It continues:

> Or unless the same——

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the appropriation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (reading):

> Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

That is my construction of the rule, Mr. President, and I think it is the logic of the rule.

As far as the precedents are concerned, the Chair may be sustained by the precedents, but, with that viewpoint, it seems to me that there would be no distinction between admitting a section of the bill which is entirely independent of the other sections and admitting the whole bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not so much in doubt about what the rule is with reference to the appropriations in the bill and the amendments that are to be made thereto as it is upon the question of when the point of order must be made.

This last clause of the first section of the rule reads:

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

That certainly must refer to an appropriation. It can not refer to anything else. Subdivision 3 reads:

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

That is as far as it is necessary to read.

If the contention of the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Wyoming is true, the Senate would find itself in this very anomalous position, that the Committee on Appropriations could stick on to a bill any sort of general legislation it pleased and prevent a Senator from raising a point of order to it, whereas if a Senator wanted to put it on a member of the Committee on Appropriations could prevent it from being done.

The Chair does not believe that. The Chair has ruled with remarkable justice on this point, because it has ruled on both sides. The Chair has held once, basing the ruling upon a ruling by former President pro tempore Ferry, that it was too late to raise a point of order after a vote had been had in Committee of the Whole. The Chair reversed itself, not with dignity but with ease, and announced that the rule of the Senate was that a question of order may be raised at any stage of the proceedings; that it was the right of a Senator to raise it at any time.

On the present question the Chair is going to adopt a middle course, namely, that there must be an end some time to the right of a Senator to raise a point of order. A strict construction of the rule would mean that it might be raised even after the vote by which the bill was passed that some Senator could then get up and raise a point of order. Under the strict terms of the rule it may be raised at any stage of the proceedings; it may be raised after a conference report comes back. The Chair does not believe that. The Chair thinks that under the rule a Senator must seasonably raise his point of order. It is the opinion of the Chair that after an amendment has been agreed to in Committee of the Whole a point of order can not be raised against it in Committee of the Whole.

If there be no further amendments in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except the amendment on page 192 inserting section 5, on which a separate vote in the Senate was reserved by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT].

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment on page 192 inserting section 5, a separate vote on which was reserved by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT].

Mr. NUGENT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I observe that he is not in the Chamber, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. BECKHAM. Has the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a pair with that Senator and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CALDER. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. BALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The senior Senator from Virginia is necessarily absent on account of business of the Senate and I have agreed to take care of him with a pair during that absence. I find that I can transfer my pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I do, and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LAFOLLETTE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The roll call resulted—yeas 42, nays 6, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Ball	Capper	Edge	Gay
Brandegee	Chamberlain	Fernald	Gerry
Calder	Comer	Frelinghuysen	Hale
Harding	Lodge	Overman	Smoot
Henderson	McCormick	Page	Spencer

France	Kirby	Simmons	Wolcott

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this question the yeas are 42, the nays are 6, and Senators CURTIS, KING, GLASS, and BECKHAM are in the Chamber and not voting. So there is a quorum present, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole is concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of sundry citizens of Scranton, Pa., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the board of trade, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that generous treatment be given all of the armed forces who are disabled or sick in consequence of their services in the World War, and also to the dependents of those who lost their lives, and remonstrating against the granting of a general bonus without discrimination, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the board of trade, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the raising of public revenues by a tax upon the privileges of the use and enjoyment of lands of large value, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the board of trade, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that authority be taken from the Department of Justice and turned over to the Department of Labor in the settlement of the deportation of undesirable aliens into this country, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Rotary Club, of Augusta, Kans., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted at the annual convention of the Wheat Growers' Association of the United States, held at Hutchinson, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation granting to farmers the right of collective bargaining, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of sundry Albanians, residents of the city of Pontiac, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation awarding to Greece the two southern Albanian Provinces, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERNALD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1309) for the relief of Perry L. Haynes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 634) thereon.

Mr. MCCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 25th instant proposing to appropriate $1,200 to pay Dennis M. Kerr for extra clerical services to the Committee on Pensions and $1,200 to pay Robert W. Farrar for indexing and clerical services, and so forth, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit the report of the select committee appointed pursuant to the resolution adopted February 24, 1920, providing for an investigation of the public school system in the District of Columbia. I ask that the report may be printed and that it also may be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 635, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.]

The select committee appointed pursuant to the provisions of the resolution of the Senate of February 24, 1920, to investigate the public-school system in the District of Columbia submits the following as its report:

A crisis has been reached in the school system of Washington. The education of more than 60,000 children is involved. Conditions are disclosed on the hearings before your committee which can be remedied only by radical changes in the authority governing the administration of the school system.

One of the unfortunate differences now found to exist on the board of education and between it and a considerable portion of the population of the District was the consideration of a bill presented to Congress as far back as 1916, which sought to place the control of the District schools in the commissioners. A controversy immediately arose which ended in the defeat of the bill. Following this, the members of the board of education, as then constituted, who opposed the transfer of the control of the schools to the District commissioners, gradually became eliminated from the board. Whether this was in pursuance of a common purpose by those who promoted the attempted legislation, your committee does not find it necessary to decide. It does, however, find that at different intervals such members failed of appointment and disappeared from the board following that controversy. Other differences resulting from an element which desired to retire the present superintendent of schools and which it may be admitted in good faith believed such a retirement to be for the welfare of the schools, contributed to the present situation.

About the same time the members of the board of education divided in a factional controversy which has continued to the present day. It is difficult to resist the conclusion therefore upon all the facts disclosed in the hearings that one of the causes was the defeat of the legislation sought by which the control of the schools would have been absorbed by the District commissioners. Notwithstanding this rejection there is some ground for inferring that the elements supporting it undertook to do indirectly what they failed to accomplish directly by legislation in Congress. The results have been most unfortunate for the District schools. So long as this spirit is found in the board, concord can not be had, and the harmony so indispensable to the successful control of the schools will be conspicuously absent.

The officials of the educational system are apparently impotent to correct manifest evils which, if not arrested, will bring the schools of Washington to a deplorable level of deterioration. Instead of giving to our country an example to emulate, the schools of the Nation's Capital have shown a tendency to decline under the destructive friction between members of the board of education, between the board and the superintendent of schools, and between the superintendent and other school officials. The board and other school officials have exhibited in the meanwhile the humiliating spectacle of often devoting themselves to petty squabbles and personal controversies instead of applying themselves earnestly to meeting the requirements of the public schools.

The members composing the dominant faction of the board are proceeding to make such changes in the management of the schools in the near future as inevitably will fail to remedy the present regrettable condition. If this should occur, it makes much more difficult and costly the removal of a variety of undesirable conditions and the application of an effective remedy to rehabilitate the schools and make them adequate to present needs. Your committee reports that the execution of the plans by the majority of the board touching a change in the management of the schools would add greatly to the friction now existing and vitally affect the welfare of the District school system.

Your committee does not believe it can recommend full remedial legislation until a complete survey of the schools has been made by competent authority showing what new buildings, grounds, physical equipments, including playgrounds, are essential, the changes in educational methods, administrative affairs, and other essential details shall be found by such survey to serve as a sound basis for legislation. Your committee therefore recommends that authority be given to procure such survey, which can be completed, it is believed, upon the convening of Congress in December, 1920. Your committee further reports that it deems it inadvisable for the foregoing reasons for the present board of education to proceed upon their plans referred to in the hearings relating to a change in the superintendent of the District schools, because his successor, named by the present dominant faction, will inevitably inherit the same divided counsels and obstacles resulting from present conditions, and that it is less harmful to maintain the existing status of affairs than aggravate the present unfortunate situation by further friction. Your committee believes that upon the making of the survey herein recommended legislation can be enacted and a complete remedy had more expeditiously and with less expense and delay than if the majority of the board of education should carry into effect their avowed purposes.

Your committee has arrived at the unanimous conclusion that the present board of education, created under the act of 1906, ought to be abolished and a board of education consisting of six members be created. The present method of appointing the board of education by the Supreme Court of the District ought to be changed and the power of appointment vested in the President of the United States subject to confirmation by the Senate.

The compensation of both the teachers, the janitors, and other service ought in justice to the welfare of the schools be increased. The present rate of pay can not reasonably be expected to attract and keep competent persons in the service. We believe the report of the Joint Reclassification Commission recently made contains proper recommendations in this behalf. The superintendent of schools ought to be given power to suspend or dismiss, subject to the approval of the board of education, any persons for the good of the service.

The business details incident to the school system of the District are now so burdensome that in the opinion of the committee a new office of business manager should be created and we believe the survey herein referred to when made will recognize the necessity of such relief from the duties now incumbent upon the superintendent. Such manager ought to be given a force sufficiently large and qualified to enable him to dispatch business matters adequately and rapidly. Direct responsibility should be imposed upon him for all matters committed to his care.

The use of school property as community centers for entertainments, meetings, and educational movements is approved. Your committee believes, however, that the use of such property ought to be under strict supervision both as to the care for the same and the character of the entertainments or proceedings conducted therein. Unless great care is exercised some entertainments subject to criticism are apt to find their way into the school buildings. This is a matter for the good judgment of the board of education, but the committee believes it ought to point out specifically the necessity for constant vigilance. We especially mention here the fact that school buildings and their appurtenances and grounds are primarily designed in original construction in heating, lighting, and ventilation for educational purposes, and any departure from such intended use must be under such limitation and wise restraints as not to do violence to the spirit of the public-school system. The committee found that many of the school buildings were being used for community activities, many of which were highly educational and recreational. The community center has been the means in many instances of furnishing education, recreation, and pleasure to the adults and children in these communities, but the committee found that there have been instances where dances held in those buildings were not properly conducted or adequately chaperoned. The committee is of the opinion that there should be the closest cooperation upon the part of the community center authorities and the patrons of the various community centers in following their wishes as to the character of the entertainments, and that, in all instances, the very strictest supervision and regulation should be observed.

Congress, in the House of Representatives, where money bills originate, is providing liberaly in the appropriations for this year for buildings and equipment. The increase of population in the District, carrying with it the natural addition to the children of school age, makes it indispensable that new buildings, adequate playgrounds, and other physical improvements be had proportionate to the increase. The necessity for playground room at the Dunbar High and the Park View Schools and in other localities is most urgent, and your committee recommends immediate action by the board and Congress. It is not anticipated any difficulty will be found in all proper additions and improvements in school facilities when the foregoing survey recommended shall have shown the basis upon which it and other legislation can intelligently be enacted.

Your committee wishes it to be thoroughly understood that nothing in this report is to be construed as condemning or commending the superintendent of schools or his administration of the office which he holds. The committee fully recognizes the right and the duty of the board to exercise its own discretion in passing upon the comparative fitness of candidates for the positions of superintendent and assistant superintendent, and we do not feel ourselves qualified to decide whether the present superintendent is the best man obtainable for the position. We are convinced that he has had a most difficult task to perform in directing the District schools under the exceptionable and trying conditions existing in Washington during and since the World War.

Our conclusions, in view of the unsettled state of public sentiment in regard to school affairs and the decided differences of opinion as to the fitness of the superintendent and the motives which influenced the board in making a change, is that the present superintendent should be retained at least until a survey of the schools has been made and until the new board has assumed control of the school system. In our judgment, to place a new official at the head of the schools while the survey is being made, and while the present controversies are rife, would be likely to lead to a greater injury to the welfare of the schools than could result from leaving the present superintendent in office.

By Mr. EDGE:

A bill (S. 4448) granting a pension to William H. Van Name; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4449) to provide for the transfer of the Bureau of Fisheries from the Department of Commerce to the Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Commerce.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. McCORMICK. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"TITLE I.—DEFINITIONS.

"SECTION 1. This act may be cited as the 'Budget and accounting act, 1920.'

"SEC. 2. When used in this act—

"The terms 'department and establishment' and 'department or establishment' mean any executive department, independent commission, board, bureau, office, agency, or other establishment of the Government, including the municipal government of the District of Columbia, but do not include the legislative branch of the Government or the Supreme Court of the United States;

"The term 'the budget' means the budget required by section 201 to be transmitted to Congress;

"The term 'bureau' means the bureau of the budget;

"The term 'director' means the director of the bureau of the budget; and

"The term 'assistant director' means the assistant director of the bureau of the budget.

"TITLE II.—THE BUDGET.

"SEC. 201. The President shall transmit to Congress on the first day of each regular session, the budget, which shall set forth in summary and in detail:

"(a) Estimates of the expenditures and appropriations necessary in his judgment for the support of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year; except that the estimates for such year for the legislative branch of the Government and the Supreme Court of the United States shall be transmitted to the President on or before October 15 of each year, and shall be included by him in the budget without revision;

"(b) His estimates of the receipts of the Government during the ensuing fiscal year, under (1) laws existing at the time the budget is transmitted and also (2) under the revenue proposals, if any, contained in the budget;

"(c) The expenditures and receipts of the Government during the last completed fiscal year;

"(d) Estimates of the expenditures and receipts of the Government during the fiscal year in progress;

"(e) The amount of annual, permanent, or other appropriations, including balances of appropriations for prior fiscal years, available for expenditure during the fiscal year in progress, as of November 1 of such year;

"(f) Balanced statements of (1) the condition of the Treasury at the end of the last completed fiscal year, (2) the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year in progress, and (3) the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the ensuing fiscal year if the financial proposals contained in the budget are adopted;

"(g) All essential facts regarding the bonded and other indebtedness of the Government; and

"(h) Such other financial statements and data as in his opinion are necessary or desirable in order to make known in all practicable detail the financial condition of the Government.

"SEC. 202. (a) If the estimated receipts for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the budget, on the basis of laws existing at the time the budget is transmitted, plus the estimated amounts in the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year in progress, available for expenditure in the ensuing fiscal year, are less than the estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the budget, the President in the budget shall make recommendations to Congress for new taxes, loans, or other appropriate action to meet the deficiency.

"(b) If the aggregate of such estimated receipts and such estimated amounts in the Treasury is greater than such estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, he shall make such recommendations as in his opinion the public interests require.

"SEC. 203. (a) The President from time to time may transmit to Congress supplemental or deficiency estimates for such appropriations or expenditures as in his judgment (1) are necessary on account of laws enacted after the transmission of the budget, or (2) are otherwise in the public interest. He shall accompany such estimates with a statement of the reasons therefor, including the reasons for their omission from the budget.

"(b) Whenever they reach an aggregate which, if they had been contained in the budget, would have required the President to make a recommendation under subdivision (a) of section 202, he shall thereupon make such recommendation as he may deem necessary.

"SEC. 204. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this act, the contents, order, and arrangement of the estimates of appropriations and the statements of expenditures and estimated expenditures contained in the budget or transmitted under section 203, and the notes and other data submitted therewith, shall conform to the requirements of existing law.

"(b) Estimates for lump-sum appropriations contained in the budget or transmitted under section 203 shall be accompanied by statements showing, in such detail and form as may be necessary to inform Congress, the manner of expenditure of such appropriations and of the corresponding appropriations for the fiscal year in progress and the last completed fiscal year. Such statements shall be in lieu of statements of like character now required by law.

"SEC. 205. The President, in addition to the budget, shall transmit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1921, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, only, an alternative budget, which shall be prepared in such form and amounts and according to such system of classification and itemization as is, in his opinion, most appropriate, with such explanatory notes and tables as may be necessary to show where the various items embraced in the budget are contained in such alternative budget.

"SEC. 206. No estimate or request for an appropriation and no request for an increase in an item of any such estimate or request, and no recommendation as to how the revenue needs of the Government should be met, shall be submitted to Congress or any committee thereof by any officer or employee of any department or establishment, unless at the request of either House of Congress.

"SEC. 207. There is created a bureau to be known as the bureau of the budget. There shall be in the bureau a director and an assistant director. The Secretary of the Treasury shall be the director and the assistant director shall be apointed by the President. The assistant director shall receive an annual salary of $10,000 and shall perform such duties as the President may designate. During the absence or incapacity of the director or during a vacancy in the office of director, the President shall designate the Acting Secretary of the Treasury or the assistant director to act as director. The bureau, as may be directed by the President, shall prepare for him the budget, the alternative budget, and any supplemental or deficiency estimates, and to this end shall have authority to assemble, correlate, revise, reduce, or increase the estimates of the several departments or establishments.

"SEC. 208 (a) The director or assistant director, as may be determined by the President, shall appoint and fix the compensation of such attorneys and other employees and make such expenditures for rent in the District of Columbia, printing, binding, telegrams, telephone service, law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, furniture, office equipment, other supplies, and necessary expenses of the office, as Congress may from time to time provide.

"(b) No person appointed by the director or assistant director shall be paid a salary at a rate in excess of $5,000 a year, and not more than four persons so appointed shall be paid a salary at the rate of $5,000 a year.

"(c) All employees in the bureau whose compensation is at a rate less than $5,000 a year shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations.

"(d) The provisions of law prohibiting the transfer of employees of executive departments and independent establishments until after service of three years, shall not apply during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, to the transfer of employees to the bureau.

"SEC. 209. The bureau shall make a detailed study of the departments and establishments for the purpose of enabling the president to determine what changes (with a view of securing greater economy and efficiency in the conduct of the public service) should be made in (1) the existing organization, activities, and methods of business of such departments or establishments, (2) the appropriations therefor, (3) the assignment of particular activities to particular services, or (4) the regrouping of services. The results of such study shall be embodied in a report or reports to the President, who may transmit to Congress such report or reports or any part thereof with his recommendations on the matters covered thereby.

"SEC. 210. The bureau shall prepare for the President a codification of all laws or parts of laws relating to the preparation and transmission to Congress of receipts and expenditures of the Government and of estimates of appropriations. The President shall transmit the same to Congress on or before January 1, 1922, with a recommendation as to the changes which, in his opinion, should be made in such laws or parts of laws.

"SEC. 211. The powers and duties relating to the compiling of estimates, now conferred and imposed upon the division of bookkeeping and warrants of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, are transferred to the bureau. The Secretary of the Treasury may transfer to the bureau, at the rate of compensation received by them when this act takes effect, any officers or employees of such division who, in his opinion, are essential to the work of the bureau. The positions thus vacated shall not be filled and the appropriations therefor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, shall lapse.

"SEC. 212. The bureau shall, at the request of any committee of either House of Congress having jurisdiction over revenue or appropriations, furnish the committee such aid and information as it may request.

"SEC. 213. Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, (1) every department and establishment shall furnish to the bureau such information as the bureau may from time to time require, and (2) the director and the assistant director, or any employee of the bureau when duly authorized, shall, for the purpose of securing such information, have access to, and the right to examine, any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department or establishment.

"SEC. 214. (a) The head of each department and establishment shall designate an official thereof as budget officer therefor, who, in each year under his direction and on or before a date fixed by him, shall prepare the departmental estimates.

"(b) Such budget officer shall also prepare, under the direction of the head of the department or establishment, such supplemental and deficiency estimates as may be required for its work.

"SEC. 215. The head of each department and establishment shall revise the departmental estimates and submit them to the bureau on or before September 15 of each year. In case of his failure so to do the President shall cause to be prepared such estimates and data as are necessary to enable him to include, in the budget, estimates and statements in respect to the work of such department or establishment.

"SEC. 216. The departmental estimates and any supplemental or deficiency estimates submitted to the bureau by the head of any department or establishment shall be prepared and submitted in such form, manner, and detail as the President may prescribe.

"SEC. 217. For expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the bureau there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $225,000, to continue available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

"TITLE III.—GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.

"SEC. 301. There is created an establishment of the Government, to be known as the general accounting office, which shall be independent of the executive departments and under the control and direction of the comptroller general of the United States. The offices of Comptroller of the Treasury and Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury are abolished, to take effect July 1, 1920. All other officers and employees of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become officers and employees in the general accounting office at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1920, and all books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become the property of the general accounting office. The comptroller general is authorized to adopt a seal for the general accounting office.

"SEC. 302. There shall be in the general accounting office a comptroller general of the United States and an assistant comptroller general of the United States, who shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive salaries of $10,000 and $7,500 a year, respectively. The assistant comptroller general shall perform such duties as may be assigned to him by the comptroller general, and during the absence or incapacity of the comptroller general, or during a vacancy in that office, shall act as comptroller general.

"SEC. 303. The comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general shall hold office during good behavior, but may be removed at any time by concurrent resolution of Congress after notice and hearing when, in their judgment, the comptroller general or assistant comptroller general is incapacitated or inefficient, or has been guilty of neglect of duty, or of malfeasance in office, or of any felony or conduct involving moral turpitude, and for no other cause and in no other manner, except by impeachment. Any comptroller general or assistant comptroller general removed in the manner herein provided shall be ineligible for appointment to either of such offices. When a comptroller general or assistant comptroller general attains the age of 70 years he shall be retired from his office.

"SEC. 304. All powers and duties now conferred or imposed by law upon the Comptroller of the Treasury or the six auditors of the Treasury Department, and the duties of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury relating to keeping the personal ledger accounts of disbursing and collecting officers, shall, so far as not inconsistent with this act, be vested in and imposed upon the general accounting office, and be exercised without direction from any other officer. The balances certified by the comptroller general shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government. The revision by the comptroller general of settlements made by the six auditors shall be discontinued, except as to settlements made before July 1, 1920.

"SEC. 305. Section 236 of the Revised Statutes is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 236. All claims and demands whatever by the United States or against them, and all accounts whatever in which the United States are concerned, either as debtors or creditors, shall be settled and adjusted in the general accounting office.'

"SEC. 306. All laws relating generally to the administration of the departments and establishments shall, so far as applicable, govern the general accounting office. Copies of any books, records, papers, or documents, and transcripts from the books and proceedings of the general accounting office, when certified under its seal, shall be admitted as evidence with the same effect as the copies and transcripts referred to in sections 882 and 886 of the Revised Statutes.

"SEC. 307. The comptroller general may provide for the payment of accounts or claims adjusted and settled in the general accounting office, through disbursing officers of the several departments and establishments, instead of by warrant.

"SEC. 308. The duties now appertaining to the Division of Public Moneys of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury so far as they relate to the covering of revenues and repayments into the Treasury, the issue of duplicate checks and warrants, and the certification of outstanding liabilities for payment, shall be performed by the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"SEC. 309. The comptroller general shall prescribe the forms, systems, and procedure for administrative appropriation and fund accounting in the several departments and establishments, and for the administrative examination of fiscal officers' accounts and claims against the United States. He shall submit periodically to Congress reports upon the adequacy and effectiveness of the administrative examination of accounts and claims in the respective departments and establishments and upon the adequacy and effectiveness of departmental inspection of the offices and accounts of fiscal officers.

"SEC. 310. The offices of the six auditors shall be abolished, to take effect July 1, 1920, but the then incumbents of those offices shall be transferred, at their present salaries, to become officers of the general accounting office. All other officers and employees of these offices shall become officers and employees in the general accounting office at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1920. All books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of these offices, and of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants so far as they relate to the work of such division transferred by section 304, shall become the property of the general accounting office. The general accounting office shall occupy temporarily the rooms now occupied by the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors.

"SEC. 311. (a) The comptroller general shall appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such attorneys and other employees in the general accounting office as may from time to time be provided for by Congress.

"(b) All such appointments, except to positions carrying a salary at a rate of more than $5,000 a year, shall be made in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations.

"(c) No person appointed by the comptroller general shall be paid a salary at a rate of more than $6,000 a year, and not more than four persons shall be paid a salary at a rate of more than $5,000 a year.

"(d) Until March 5, 1921, no person who at the time of the passage of this act holds office as one of the six auditors, and who in pursuance of section 310 is transferred to the general accounting office, shall be removed from office or have his compensation reduced, except for cause.

"(e) All officers and employees of the general accounting office, whether transferred thereto or appointed by the comptroller general, shall perform such duties as may be assigned to them by him.

"(f) All official acts performed by such officers or employees specially designated therefor by the comptroller general shall have the same force and effect as though performed by the comptroller general in person.

"(g) The comptroller general shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying on the work of the general accounting office, including rules and regulations concerning the admission of attorneys to practice.

"SEC. 312. (a) The comptroller general shall investigate, at the seat of government or elsewhere, all matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds, and shall make to the President when requested by him, and to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the general accounting office, containing recommendations concerning the legislation he may deem necessary to facilitate the prompt and accurate rendition and settlement of accounts and concerning such other matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds as he may think advisable. In such regular report, or in special reports at any time when Congress is in session, he shall make recommendations looking to greater economy or efficiency in public expenditures.

"(b) He shall make such investigations and reports as shall be ordered by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenue, appropriations, or expenditures. The comptroller general shall also, at the request of any such committee, direct assistants from his office to furnish the committee such aid and information as it may request.

"(c) The comptroller general shall specially report to Congress every expenditure or contract made by any department or establishment in any year in violation of law.

"SEC. 313. All departments and establishments shall furnish to the comptroller general such information regarding the powers, duties, activities, organization, financial transactions, and methods of business of their respective offices as he may from time to time require of them; and the comptroller general, or any of his assistants or employees when duly authorized by him, shall, for the purpose of securing such information, have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department or establishment. The authority contained in this section shall not be applicable to expenditures made under the provisions of section 291 of the Revised Statutes.

"SEC. 314. The Civil Service Commission shall establish an eligible register for accountants for the general accounting office, and the examinations of applicants for entrance upon such register shall be based upon questions approved by the comptroller general.

"SEC. 315. (a) All appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, for the offices of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors, are transferred to and made available for the general accounting office.

"(b) During such fiscal year the comptroller general, within the limit of the total appropriations available for the general accounting office, may make such changes in the number and compensation of officers and employees appointed by him or transferred to the general accounting office under this act as may be necessary.

"(c) There shall also be transferred to the general accounting office such portions of the appropriations for rent and contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including allotments for printing and binding, made for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, as are equal to the amounts expended from similar appropriations during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, by the Treasury Department for the offices of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors.

"(d) During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the appropriations and portions of appropriations referred to in this section shall be available for salaries and expenses of the general accounting office, including payment for rent in the District of Columbia, traveling expenses, the purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, and for all necessary miscellaneous and contingent expenses.

"SEC. 316. The general accounting office shall not be construed to be a bureau or office created since January 1, 1916, so as to deprive employees therein of the additional compensation allowed civilian employees under the provisions of section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, if otherwise entitled thereto.

"SEC. 317. The provisions of law prohibiting the transfer of employees of executive departments and independent establishments until after service of three years, shall not apply during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, to the transfer of employees to the general accounting office.

"SEC. 318. This act shall take effect July 1, 1920, but appointments to offices herein created may be made prior to that date, to take effect July 1, 1920."

And the Senate agree to the same.

UTAH-IDAHO SUGAR CO.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to mention a matter of a personal character. On last Monday I called the attention of the Senate to certain telegrams which I have received in respect to the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co. prosecution. Mr. Huston Thompson, acting chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, in answer to the statement which I made on the floor of the Senate, has written me a letter and asked me if I would not have it placed in the RECORD to-day. I am very glad to do so. In passing I wish to say that in this letter I am informed that Mr. Beer, upon the receipt of the telegram from Mr. Sanders that I objected to and read to the Senate last Monday, immediately wired this man Sanders, and his telegram is as follows:

GEORGE E. SANDERS,
103 First Avenue, Salt Lake City, Utah:

Commission not interested in political situation. Must take up Grants Pass matters as soon as I reach there Wednesday or Thursday of next week. Your attendance will be imperative regarding books and other matters relating to that situation.

There is further explanation in the letter of the whole question and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, May 25, 1920.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMOOT: The attention of the commission has been called to a "personal explanation" by you in respect to the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co., made on the floor of the Senate on Monday, May 24, and set forth on page 7507 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the same date.

In your statement you say in part:

"When any department of our Government undertakes to secure the defeat or the election of a United States Senator through an investigation of the affairs of a sugar company it is time that such a contemptible practice be called to the attention of the public.

"I am positive the honest people of this country will not approve of any such rotten politics. This very thing is taking place in the State of Utah, and to prove this statement I have but to recite what has in the past and is taking place to-day.

"In the first place, I wish to go back some months when this unthinkable proposition was first brought to my attention by Gen. Richard W. Young during his visit to Washington as the attorney of the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co. He was here to learn, if possible, if there was any truth in the rumor that the Federal Trade Commission was going to make an investigation of the affairs of the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co.; and if so, upon what basis and for what reason. Think of my surprise when he told me that he had no doubt the investigation would be made some time before the next election, and among other causes assigned was the one that it would help to defeat me for reelection."

You then set forth two telegrams, one from Henry Ward Beer, an attorney for the Federal Trade Commission, dated Rigby, May 13, 1920, to one George Sanders (a witness for the commission), and the reply of the said Sanders, and you then say:

"Mr. President, this is the program, and I shall wait and see whether it meets with the approval of the members of the Federal Trade Commission or has received the sanction of the Attorney General. It begins to look to me as if Gen. Richard W. Young knew what he was talking about when shortly before his death he informed me what he heard was to take place in connection with an investigation of the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co. Gen. Young was one of the leading Democrats, if not the leading Democrat, in my State. Shame upon officials of a department of the Government if they have lent themselves to such action! I think I know the people of Utah well enough to know that this sort of politics will never be countenanced, and if the officials of Washington are acting in this matter upon the advice of politicians of the State of Utah, their action will not assist in any way in my defeat or their success."

In response to your statement, I beg leave to say that I have a very clear recollection of the visit of Gen. Richard W. Young, deceased, to Washington as the attorney of the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co., when he called at the commission's offices, in company with Senator KING, of Utah. There were present at the conference Senator KING, Gen. Young, Mr. Porter, chief counsel of the commission, and myself. Gen. Young had in his possession the amended complaint in the case of the Federal Trade Commission against the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co., the Amalgamated Sugar Co., E. R. Wooley, A. P. Cooper, and E. F. Cullen, which had been issued on September 2, 1919, and served on the respondents immediately thereafter, the issuance of which complaint undoubtedly caused the call of Gen. Young. The purpose of Gen. Young was not to learn whether an investigation was to be made, but was to learn our method of procedure and the manner of conducting the trial, which practice was new to him. We had long since made the investigation, and the commission had issued the complaint, and the only matter before us at this conference was the question of the proceeding with the trial.

Before referring to the telegrams which you read into the RECORD, I wish to say that there has never been any delay on the part of the commission or its attorneys in the trial of this case. The only delays that have been granted thus far have been at the request of counsel for respondents.

The first telegram is as follows:

"RIGBY, May 13, 1920.

"GEORGE SANDERS,
"Care of Dr. Snow, 60 First Avenue,
"Salt Lake City, Utah:

"Expect to close; leaving here Saturday. What do you intend to do regarding Medford and Grants Pass proposed hearing? Wire me collect.

"BEER,
"Federal Trade Commissioner."

This telegram was sent to Mr. Sanders because he was a witness for the commission whose examination in chief had been taken and the telegram referred to his proposed cross-examination, which was not to take place at his residence in Salt Lake City, but was to take place at Grants Pass or Medford, Oreg., because of certain voluminous receivership documents located there, to which it was necessary to have access.

The answer of Mr. Sanders was in the telegraphic form which you read into the RECORD, as follows:

"SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, May 13, 1920.

"HENRY W. BEER,
"Special Counsel, Federal Trade Commission,
"Rigby, Idaho:

"Do not know what to advise you about proposed hearing at Grants Pass. Think you ought to have about three weeks from now. One of your investigators should be there a week in advance lining up witnesses. Do not be in too big hurry to finish your case, as public sentiment is fast changing and almost entirely for Government prosecution. Sugar magnates anxious for you to get through. Palmer should keep you on job. If you keep a going for two months, it will cost SMOOT his Senate seat. Better kill some time with Washington authority. Ogden to-morrow.

"G. E. SANDERS."

Immediately, and on the same day as the receipt of the telegram from Mr. Sanders, Mr. Beer wired him as follows:

"RIGBY, IDAHO, May 14, 1920.

"GEORGE E. SANDERS,
"103 First Avenue, Salt Lake City, Utah:

"Commission not interested in political situation. Must take up Grants Pass matters as soon as I reach there Wednesday or Thursday of next week. Your attendance will be imperative regarding books and other matters relating to that situation."

The commission received this morning a telegram from Mr. Beer without having had any communication with him since your statement on the floor of the Senate yesterday. As this telegram is responsive to your inquiry as to the position of the Federal Trade Commission, I take the liberty of quoting it in full:

"MEDFORD, OREG., May 24, 1920.

"CLAUDE R. PORTER,
"Chief Counsel Federal Trade Commission,
"Washington, D. C.:

"Hon. REED SMOOT'S telegram just published in Medford, Oreg., paper. You should know facts. Sanders testified against respondent sugar companies in Salt Lake City. Part of his cross-examination deferred to resume at Grants Pass or Medford, Oreg., because of certain voluminous receivership documents located here. I wired Sanders regarding his presence and sent him subpœna to appear in Medford, Oreg.

"When I received the following message:

"'2 $ CA 109 collect NL.

"'SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, May 13, 1920.

"'HENRY W. BEER,
"'Special Counsel Federal Trade Commission,
"'Rigby, Idaho:

"'Do not know yet what to advise you about proposed hearing at Grants Pass. Think you ought to have it about three weeks from now. One of your investigators should be there week in advance lining up witnesses. Don't be in too big a hurry to finish your case, as public sentiment is fast changing and almost entirely for Government prosecution. Sugar magnates anxious for you to get through. Palmer should keep you on job. If you keep this a going for two months it will cost SMOOT his Senate seat. Better kill some time with Washington authority. Ogden to-morrow.

"'GEORGE E. SANDERS.

"'905 A. MAY 14, 1920.'

"As soon as I could get to telegraph office I replied:

"'RIGBY, IDAHO, May 14, 1920.

"'GEORGE E. SANDERS,
"'103 First Avenue, Salt Lake City, Utah:

"'Commission not interested in political situation. Must take up Grants Pass matters as soon as I reach there Wednesday or Thursday of next week. Your attendance will be imperative regarding books and other matters relating to that situation.'

"Telegraph operator informed Beet Growers' Sugar Co., one of complainants against Utah-Idaho Sugar Co., that Government messages were being interfered with and I advised obtaining signed statement from operator Carney, which also follows:

"'May 13, 1920, I received a telegram from Henry Ward Beer, and while I was copying this message I noticed that Joe Jones, special agent for the Oregon Short Line, was standing behind me, I think reading it as I copied it. May 16, 1920, Joe Jones called at the office to look over some papers regarding a rug missing in a shipment. As no one is here during the noon hour on Sunday, Mr. Jones asked me to leave the keys to the station with him. I was about to take the key to the office off of the ring when he told me to let him have all of them, as they wouldn't be so apt to get lost. I handed him all the keys. The agent, cashier, and myself went to dinner. I returned about 15 minutes after and found Mr. Jones looking over the Western Union messages. Soon as he saw me he put them back soon as possibly could. After he got over his nervousness he asked me if I had a copy of the message that was received for Mr. Beer May 14. I had a copy of the message that was received for Mr. Beer May 13. I told him I had a copy of every message received or sent and told him that it was in the messages he was looking at when I came in. He then asked me to make him a copy and I refused to do so, as I didn't think he had a right to have same. After a little arguing he said all right, don't do it.

"'(Signed) THOS. J. CARNEY.'

"Please note the dates. My telegram to Sanders was in the same bunch of messages with the Sanders telegram. Jones, who is not a Western Union employee, has deliberately concealed the facts as far as I am concerned. Trial is being conducted with absolute fairness to both sides, and not a breath of politics has been used directly or indirectly in connection with the hearings. Sanders but 1 of about 75 witnesses called so far for complainant. Senator SMOOT's name not mentioned in testimony or exhibits except in list of stockholders Utah-Idaho Sugar Co.

"HENRY WARD BEER,
"Special Counsel."

In reply to Mr. Beer's telegram, our chief counsel, Mr. Porter, sent immediately the following message this morning:

"FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
"Washington, May 25, 1920.

"HENRY WARD BEER,
"Medford, Oreg.:

"Telegram received. Proceed with case with reasonable expedition and in usual course.

"PORTER, Chief Counsel."

In closing I wish to assure you, as is evidenced by the telegrams and statements in this letter, that the commission has always rigorously refrained, and has so advised its employees, from taking any part in any matters of a political nature in its investigations and trials of cases or other matters before it.

Cordially, yours,

HUSTON THOMPSON,
Acting Chairman.

PAY OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of parliamentary procedure. House bill 5726 was passed on Monday last, when the calendar was called. Since then a number of Senators have been informed of the results of the operation of the bill, and if the information is well founded, and I think it is, the Senate should correct its action if possible.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] for that purpose prepared a motion for a reconsideration of the bill, or gave notice that he would, within the 48 hours prescribed under the rule. My purpose in rising is to inquire if the pendency of the motion will hold the bill in the Senate until it can be disposed of. There is a ruling to that effect in our procedure, but I am informed that on other occasions, although I can find no record of it, it has been decided that the motion must be both made and considered within the prescribed period. If that is true, it is of the greatest importance that the motion should be disposed of to-day. If it is not true, then, of course, it is not so important.

I was requested to bring the matter to the attention of the Chair before the hour of 5 o'clock, at which time, under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate stands in recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the Senator from Colorado does not accurately state the record.

Mr. THOMAS. I am stating it from hearsay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Senator from South Carolina did not enter a motion to reconsider. He rose and gave notice that he would enter a motion to reconsider. This is the rule:

When a question has been decided by the Senate, any Senator voting with the prevailing side may, on the same day or on either of the next two days of actual session thereafter, move a reconsideration.

The Chair is of the opinion that if a motion to reconsider be made on the day the action is taken, or within the next two days of actual session, it is not necessary that it be decided at that time, but any Senator can call it up at any proper time and have it decided.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I submit a motion to reconsider. I had been informed that the motion had been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the motion.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] submits a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 5726) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States was passed on Monday, the 24th instant.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to give notice that it is my intention to propose an amendment to the Standing Rules of the Senate, Rule XXV, to the extent and in the manner indicated by the notice. I ask that it be read.

The notice was read, as follows:

1. Beginning with the Sixty-seventh Congress, the following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:

Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Appropriations, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to consist of five Senators, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same.
Committee on Banking and Currency, to consist of 13 Senators.
Committee on Civil Service, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Claims, to consist of 13 Senators.
Committee on Commerce, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on the District of Columbia, to consist of 13 Senators.
Committee on Education and Labor, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Engrossed and Enrolled Bills, to consist of 3 Senators, which shall examine all bills, amendments, and joint resolutions before they go out of the possession of the Senate, and which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives, and which, or some one of which, shall examine all bills or joint resolutions which shall have passed both Houses, to see that the same are correctly enrolled, and, when signed by the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate, shall forthwith present the same, when they shall have originated in the Senate, to the President of the United States in person, and report the fact and date of such presentation to the Senate.
Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to consist of 7 Senators.
Committee on Finance, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Foreign Relations, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Immigration, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Indian Affairs, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to consist of 11 Senators,
Committee on Interstate Commerce, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on the Judiciary, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on the Library, to consist of 7 Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
Committee on Manufactures, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Military Affairs, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Mines and Mining, to consist of 9 Senators.
Committee on Naval Affairs, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Patents, to consist of 7 Senators.
Committee on Pensions, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Printing, to consist of 7 Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
Committee on Privileges and Elections, to consist of 13 Senators.
Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to consist of 13 Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to consist of 13 Senators.
Committee on Rules, to consist of 12 Senators.
Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to consist of 13 Senators.

2. The Committees to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, on Printing, and on the Library shall continue and have the power to act until their successors are appointed.

RECESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 5 o'clock p. m.). In accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate now stands in recess until 7.30 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Under the unanimous-consent agreement, entered into yesterday, the session this evening is to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of the report of the special committee appointed to investigate the public-school system in the District of Columbia.

DISTRICT PUBLIC-SCHOOL SYSTEM.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate on the report that was filed this afternoon by the Select Committee on School Investigation. I requested that the Senate convene to-night so that the remarks I might make, and the time of the Senate consumed, would not interfere with the passage of the appropriation bills and delay the adjournment or recess of Congress.

I know that the Senate is so much occupied with general legislation that I, in common with the rest of Congress, do not give to the affairs of the District that degree of consideration that the District sometimes deserves; but the committee that was appointed by the Senate to investigate the school situation had such a large task before it and devoted so much time to its consideration that the committee felt that at least the testimony which came out before the committee should be analyzed in order that the RECORD of Congress might show it. So I approach this subject only with the desire of backing up, so far as my opinion is concerned, the report of the committee, and to lay the cards on the table, so to speak, in a candid and frank statement, to show the reasons for my action.

To-morrow it is to be hoped that the action of the Senate will be taken touching a matter that has been before it for some time, and in which the District of Columbia is vitally interested, namely, either the confirmation or the rejection of one of the commissioners of the District.

In discussing this report, I desire to say that while the committee was unanimous in its findings, there was much that I would have desired to go into the report that did not go into it, and there are some things in the report which, if it had been left to me entirely, would have been written in a different phraseology; but the committee wanted to get together in a unanimous report, and what that report contains is the unanimous judgment of the five Senators who composed the committee.

In the report the committee said that the salaries of the teachers in the District of Columbia were in their opinion inadequate; and while during the war, to meet the abnormal conditions confronting the teaching fraternity in Washington, the Congress had been liberal to a very marked extent in increasing the salaries of the teachers, it had not, in the opinion of the committee, increased the salaries sufficiently to meet the conditions that confront them to-day.

It would seem that in every other trade and calling, in every other line of work, the compensation of persons who labor for wages has been increased very greatly more than in the teaching fraternity, and that applies not only to the District of Columbia but throughout the United States. It is not infrequent that we pick up a paper and read that plumbers are demanding $10 a day, and I read in one paper where in Chicago they were even requiring from those for whom they worked an automobile to carry them to and from work. The wages of employees in households have been increased two and three and four hundred per cent because of war conditions, but the salaries of the teaching fraternity have not been increased proportionately.

It was shown to the committee that while before the war there were about 80 resignations each year in the teaching force in the District, during the war the number of resignations ranged as high as 250 during the year. About the same proportion applied to the janitorial force, to the engineers' force, and other employees of the public-school system. In the case of the janitors, for instance, in 1918, out of 286, 110 resigned; and in 1919, out of 286, 103 resigned. This year already about 50 have resigned, keeping up the proportion of the prior two years.

These people have resigned in the janitorial force and resigned in the teachers' force because of the inadequate pay, and because in other fields of work the opportunities were greater for increased salaries and higher compensation; and so, in the opinion of the committee, it is vitally necessary, if the teaching force of the District is to continue on a high standard and to be kept on a high level, that an adequate increase should be made to meet the present-day conditions.

So they recommended as a basis for increase that the report of the Joint Reclassification Commission, recently made to Congress, should be a basis on which the Congress might proceed. That commission went fully into the question of the salaries of all the District employees, including the janitorial force and the teachers' force, and it would seem that that report, so far as it pertained to the teachers and the janitors, should be adopted and the increase proportionately made by the Congress.

I regretted to-day to see the sundry civil bill pass so rapidly, because I had some hope that perhaps we might get the increases on that bill. I understand, however, that it carries some increase. In the consideration of this question the committee found, too, that in the lower classes the teaching force was not paid in proportion to the teaching force in the higher classes, and that a proportionately greater increase should be made to those teachers teaching the lower classes than to those in the higher classes.

The committee found that the present policy of appointing teachers in the District permanently was not a very good policy; that at times it was found very difficult to rid the system of an undesirable teacher, or one that in the opinion of the school authorities was inefficient. That was very glaringly brought out in a certain case to which I shall allude later on in my remarks; so the committee thought for a while of recommending to Congress an amendment of the law that would provide for the appointment of teachers for only one year, and providing for their reappointment if they proved efficient. We thought that would have a tendency to influence the teachers to do their best work, and would serve notice upon them that if they should fail in the discharge of their duties they would not meet the approval of the superintendent and the board of education during the coming year.

Why, for certain reasons teachers in the schools here can stay away for two years, and then come back into the system and have a prior right to take their old places. The committee did not believe that that was advisable and that that is a good policy, and it is hopeful that the board of education will adopt a policy that will remedy that situation, or, if necessary, that the Congress shall amend the law.

In the report we say that the superintendent and the board of education should have the right to dismiss at any time any teacher for the good of the service.

Sirs, there is one case when the board of education and the superintendent thought advisable to dismiss for the good of the service, or to suspend for a few days, and it aroused the unions, so called, among the teachers. They protested; they went into their pockets; they raised money; they employed an attorney; they enjoined the board; they tried out the case in the courts. While there is nothing in this report touching unionism among the teachers in Washington, I regret that it is not. If I could have had my way I would have written into this report a recommendation that the Congress pass a law that no one teaching in the school system of Washington could belong to any union or society or association that is affiliated with any outside organization which believes in the strike to enforce its demands. But the committee was divided on that question, and so we left it out.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator think it will violate the proprieties if he states why some of those disputed matters were omitted from the report?

Mr. HARRISON. Before the Senator came in I stated that there were many matters left out which various members of the committee very much desired to have placed in it, but in order for us all to get together unanimously on a report, many of us surrendered our individual convictions touching such matters in this report, in order to present a unanimous report.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will permit me, I would like further to say that I join with him in the statement he has made referring to affiliation with outside organizations of teachers, and express my conviction that the Senator has taken the only view which ultimately will secure the proper results in this or any other school system. I make this statement in view not only of the hearings but in view of our experiences in other parts of the United States. Wherever that outside affiliation has been permitted, it has resulted in a total destruction of discipline in many of the schools.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the Senator took that stand, and he and I agreed on that proposition absolutely, and when I took the position touching unions among the teachers it was quite inconsistent with the position I have taken touching unions generally. I know of no piece of legislation that has come before the American Congress, either while I was a Member of the House or of the Senate, in regard to which I did not stand with them when I felt that their demands were reasonable.

I opposed an amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] which sought to divorce employees in the Government service from the Government service when they belonged to organizations or unions which were affiliated with outside organizations that believed in the strike to enforce their demands. I once made a point of order against such an amendment. I realize that there is a great difference of opinion on that proposition. But I feel kindly to labor; I feel kindly to organized labor; but I believe there is one place in this country where organized labor has no part, and that is in the teaching of the children of the land. I believe that there is such a difference of opinion among the people of the United States touching labor organizations, with disputes constantly arising, that when the teaching force of the land becomes affiliated with those organizations, and disputes and controversies arise, union teachers would be likely to try to influence the minds of the young children to the views that they entertained.

So, as schools are maintained out of the Public Treasury, for the public good, without respect to race, class, or distinction, it would seem to me that every cause should be removed that might lead part of our people to lose confidence in the system to which they are contributing. It is for that reason, and that reason alone, that I oppose teachers belonging to unions which are affiliated with outside organizations that believe in the strike to enforce their demands. There are some parents who have such strong convictions against organized labor that they do not desire their children to go to a public school taught by a teacher who believes in those things and is affiliated with such organizations.

Of course they can organize; of course they may have their unions, they may have their associations, and their fraternities, because I know, and you know, that every class of people have found it necessary to organize in order to protect their own interests. Merchants have their organizations, manufacturers have their associations, farmers have their unions, laborers have, and teachers might. But when teachers form their associations for their own protection and to present their views they should stop there and not go so far as to affiliate themselves with some organization outside which believes in the strike to enforce its demands.

When this particular teacher, Miss Wood, was suspended by the board of education from the public-school system here because she was charged in 12 or 14 counts of believing in or teaching bolshevistic doctrines, and in other things to which I will refer later, the teachers, through their union, wrote this letter to the president of the board of education:

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHERS' UNION,
HEADQUARTERS MCKINLEY HIGH SCHOOL,
Washington, D. C., March 22, 1919.

Mr. GEORGE E. HAMILTON,
President of the Board of Education,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HAMILTON: The executive committees of the High School Teachers' Union and Grade Teachers' Union have asked that we communicate with you in regard to the suspension of Miss Alice Wood.

We are interested both in the manner of her suspension and the grounds upon which it was based. It seems to be a matter of so much concern to all the teachers that we respectfully request to be fully informed on the following points:

1. What was the charge, if any, against Miss Wood?
2. Was Miss Wood informed of the charge and given the opportunity to reply to this charge before the board?
3. If there was a committee report on the matter, what was the action?
4. What was the action of the board?

We feel that it is due the teachers that they receive full information on a matter which so vitally concerns them.

Respectfully, yours,

ALICE DEAL,
President High School Teachers' Union.
CLARA K. STUTZ,
President Grade Teachers' Union.

So when they made that demand and received their reply they went out and employed counsel, put their proceedings in the courts, and fought it out, and brought such pressure on certain members of the board of education that the board failed to appeal the case to a higher court.

That is not all. Mr. Thurston testified, talking about the unions:

Mr. THURSTON. Part of their plan to which I did take exceptions was the selection of principals of buildings by their recommendation of several people from whom the superintendent should select.
Senator HARRISON. You say that Dr. Van Schaick had been in constant communication with the unions?
Mr. THURSTON. Constant touch.
Senator HARRISON. In constant touch with these leaders of the unions?
Mr. THURSTON. Yes.
Senator HARRISON. On what do you base that statement?
Mr. THURSTON. Through these letters he has submitted and showed by me, and constant references by Dr. Van Schaick in meetings and to me personally that Miss Deal wanted so-and-so, or he had been talking with Miss Deal.
Senator HARRISON. She is at the head of one of the unions?
Mr. THURSTON. She is at the head of the High School Teachers' Union.

* * * * * * *

Mr. THURSTON. I flatly disagreed with the union on their plan of selection of principals in grade schools and so on.
Senator WALSH. What was that plan of selection of principals?
Mr. THURSTON. They believed that the teachers in the school building should get together and nominate the principal of the building.
Senator WALSH. Have they actually made that suggestion to you?
Mr. THURSTON. They have not actually made it to me, but that was the suggestion that was included in some of their literature, to either directly select, or select two or three from whom the choice should be made. I claimed the administrative officer has a knowledge of teachers they never can have. A classroom teacher gets certain factors, perhaps, better than an administrative officer, but the administrative officer is bound to know the value of a teacher as an administrative officer or principal better than a lot of teachers could determine it.
Senator HARRISON. Why was it that the leaders of the union did not come to you about these matters, and would go to some one else?
Mr. THURSTON. The leaders of the union had worked steadily with Dr. Van Schaick. They do not approve of the present superintendent of schools.

So it is that they had such influence that they reversed the findings of the board and kept the board of education from appealing the case in which they had employed counsel to fight for one of the teachers belonging to the union, and going further by advocating the right to select the principals in the schools. The only way to stop it, in my opinion, is for the Congress to pass legislation which will prevent any of the teaching force from belonging to these unions which are affiliated with outside organizations. Such activity upon the part of the unions would eventually rob the superintendent and the board of the management of the schools and eventually destroy the system.

The committee, in its report, made certain recommendations touching buildings and playgrounds. We visited many of the schools in the city, and we found that in some instances there are school buildings as beautiful and as modern as can be found in any city of the Nation. The Central High School building is so attractive that, notwithstanding the Capitol and other beautiful and magnificent buildings, the equal of any in the world, this building compares most favorably with them. The Dunbar High School, the Armstrong Manual Training School, and the Miner Normal School are all wonderfully attractive buildings, modern and convenient in every way. But we found that there are many other buildings in the city that are old, antiquated, and incommodious, where the sewerage is not proper, where the lighting is not sufficient, and where the playgrounds are inadequate—where children are stacked in and herded in such numbers that no teacher can possibly teach them properly. We found some classrooms in the city here where as many as 56 children were being taught by one teacher.

At the Dunbar High School and the Armstrong Manual Training School there is no playground at all, although there are thousands of pupils there. There is a plot of ground there that the Government can take over and buy, and the acquisition of which is most urgent and needed, and Congress should have made some arrangement to purchase a sufficient playground at that particular place if it were possible at this time.

The same thing is true of the Park View School. I mention these in particular. There are many other schools in the city where the playgrounds are inadequate and very much needed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wanted to ask the Senator whether the committee ascertained why estimates were not sent down to Congress, for instance, for the purchase of ample land at the Dunbar School? I know the situation there; I have visited it myself, and some of the members of the Committee on Appropriations have been urging the purchase of additional land for that school. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who is now presiding, has taken a special interest in the matter, and we had hoped that in the sundry civil appropriation bill, which we passed to-day, we would have been able to have a sufficient appropriation to buy the remainder of the block where that school is located, because we deem it very necessary. We found, when we came to consider the estimates, that estimates of only about half of the amount of money necessary to buy it had been sent down.

The Senator understands the rules under which we work with reference to appropriations. So we felt that rather than appropriate the amount of money which was estimated for it would be better to make no appropriation, in the hope that an estimate will be sent down at the next session of Congress ample to purchase the land which ought to be purchased. I just wondered whether the committee found out a reason why, or who is to blame for not sending down ample estimates.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the committee did not ascertain. We viewed these premises. We found that land was there that we could buy, and that if we did not buy it soon perhaps some one else would buy it, some other person or concern would purchase it. It is needed most urgently. Of course, the Congress can not make the appropriation if the estimate is not here. It is really very regrettable that estimates did not come in, so we could take some immediate steps toward acquiring those playgrounds.

When I first came to Washington, just being a country fellow, I was somewhat prejudiced against playgrounds, but I am now soundly convinced that it is economy in a city such as Washington for the Congress to make liberal appropriations to provide playgrounds, not only around the schools, but in the thickly populated parts of the city. When I was a boy there was no restriction to playgrounds, because there were forests we could roam through as far as we desired; but here in these dingy places, where children are restricted all day, where they are trying to develop their minds, and where, when they get out at recess, there is no place to play except on the streets, where they are threatened by being run over—as one, I believe, was run over at the Dunbar High School by an automobile—it is an outrage, and it is a shortsighted policy for the Congress not to make adequate appropriations for ample playgrounds throughout the city.

The next subject to which I desire to address myself is the friction on the board of education and between the board of education and the superintendent and other employees in the public-school system of the District.

When this resolution was introduced and the investigation was begun, none of us had any idea what was the real condition in the schools here. We knew there was a deplorable situation. We knew there was great criticism—that there was something wrong—but we did not know just what it was. So we went to work impartially, with open minds, to ascertain what was the real cause of the trouble. I think after the six or seven weeks of earnest labor upon the part of the committee there now remains in the minds of the members of the committee no doubt as to what is the real cause of this disturbing, discouraging, terrible condition in the school system.

The present superintendent, Mr. Thurston, was elected in 1913. He was reelected in 1917. Notice has been served on him by the present board of education that he will not be reelected this year. From 1913 to 1917, when he was reelected, harmony, as stated by the committee, prevailed in the public-school system of Washington. There was complete cooperation between the board of education and the superintendent. There were men on the board at that time who were leading citizens of the city, men of large business affairs, of splendid educational qualifications, of high ideals and high standing.

I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate the testimony of some of the men whose names are household words in Washington, who served from 1913 to 1917 with the present superintendent, when there was complete cooperation and harmony in the system. I know of no better way than to take their testimony as to the fitness and qualifications of the superintendent and then to analyze the conditions since 1917, to study and analyze the personnel of the board since the deplorable condition arose, in order that we may form our conclusions therefrom.

Mr. Henry P. Blair was a member of the board prior to 1916, when Dr. Van Schaick, the present president of the board, became a member of the board. Mr. Blair says, at page 819 of the hearings, that Thurston was elected because he was the best qualified man in the system. He had grown up in the system. He had been assistant superintendent in charge of the white schools. Mr. Blair goes on further and says:

About the middle of that renovation, if one may call it that, Dr. Davidson received the Pittsburgh election and determined that he had gone far enough with this problem here so that he could in fairness leave the Washington schools, and yet there was a very considerable amount of work still to be done in connection with the business reorganization. That was successfully accomplished during the earlier years of Mr. Thurston's superintendency. It was problems of that character that had first to be dealt with. It seemed to me and it seemed to the board that he dealt with them efficiently.

After that was done we were feeling that the time had come when we could take up the other side of the work, if I may so call it, and go ahead with that. Mr. Thurston I always found in respect to these matters careful, conscientious, up to date, as far as I could see, examining propositions with caution and care rather than accepting them because somebody suggested they might be a nice thing to have in the Washington schools; good judgment as to what were fads and what were not fads, and as the growth and development, as it seemed to me, of the educational side of the school system was inaugurated and was being successfully carried on, starting with its beginnings about the time that my active service with the board ceased.

I felt that we had taken Mr. Thurston from the position of assistant superintendent, where his duties were confined to those assigned to him by the superintendent; that we had every reason to feel that he was growing and developing splendidly and that he was going to make an efficient and successful superintendent. I feel that he required cooperation. I feel that he required an opportunity to consult in a friendly spirit, not a hostile one, with the members of the board of education, and that he wanted that kind of cooperation, and if he had it that he was destined to grow and develop as I feel that he has, very much, since his original appointment.

I now desire to read to the Senate what Mr. William T. Galliher stated before the committee. He is another man who stands in the forefront among the citizenship of the District. About the only thing I know against him is that he is a Republican. You do not object to that, Senator SHERMAN?

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. HARRISON. Here is what Mr. Galliher says:

Senator HARRISON. Up until that time, while you were a member of the board, were the schools getting along in a fairly good way?

Mr. GALLIHER. They were.

Senator HARRISON. What was your opinion at that time, from your observation as a member of the board, of Mr. Thurston as superintendent of schools?

Mr. GALLIHER. I have always believed in Mr. Thurston's ability. He was a product of our own schools and had been a teacher for several years, and had been assistant superintendent since 1911, and in all the positions that he had occupied he had proven his ability and efficiency. The matter of the selection of some one within or without the system had been under consideration. The president of the board and the vice president had visited New York and had an interview with one or more persons there, and then returning to Washington and the school board, Mr. Thurston's election was determined on.

Now, I desire to read what Mr. John B. Larner said, another man who served on the board from 1913 to about 1917, who stands high in the city of Washington, and whose estimate of Mr. Thurston deserves consideration by the Senate. I read:

Mr. LARNER. The second reason was that for a long time, for several years, I had felt that I was not in sympathy with the ideas of the board in reference particularly to the school superintendent and to one or two other matters that came up besides that.

Senator DILLINGHAM. Since when have you felt so?

Mr. LARNER. I would say probably up to about the time that Dr. Van Schaick came on the board of education.

Senator DILLINGHAM. Going back at that time, when he came to the board, you had served how many years?

Mr. LARNER. I had served approximately four years beginning in 1912, and I think he came on the board in 1916.

Senator DILLINGHAM. I wish you would tell us in your own way what the conditions were during those four years, what problems the board were attempting to work out, how they were doing it, and generally what the conditions were in the board and in the schools.

Mr. LARNER. Mr. Blair was president of the board of education prior to that time. There is no better man in the city of Washington than Mr. Blair. I do not think there is any one in the city of Washington who understood the school system better than Mr. Blair. He is a perfect gentleman in all his dealings with everybody. His services as president of the board have been highly acceptable; they were to me and I think they were, perhaps, to the majority of the board. I think that everything moved along in the ordinary way. We would have our troubles, a great many complaints about teachers, charges against teachers, and threatened investigations, and all that sort of thing. We have those always and always will have them. But there was no friction so far as I knew in reference to the work of the superintendent. I believe the schools were progressing in a fairly good way. I want to say that I think the schools are coming along very nicely now, so far as the schools themselves are concerned. Considering all that has taken place in the last two or three years, I think it is remarkable that we have been able to keep our school system together as well as we have.

Now, I desire to read what Mr. George E. Hamilton, another business man, a person of high education, testifies. He was a member of the board and testifies as to the qualifications of Mr. Thurston. He went on the board as a friend of Van Schaick. I read:

Senator HARRISON. What was your observation of Mr. Thurston during the time you were a member of the board?

Mr. HAMILTON. My observation of Mr. Thurston was that he was a most excellent man, a man who had grown up in the system and was developing every day. I did not know Mr. Thurston until I met him at the first meeting of the board that I attended in 1917. I knew that Mr. Thurston felt that I had come on the board as a friend of Dr. Van Schaick's and I thought the best thing to do would be to have a frank talk with him, so I sent for him. He came to my office, I think the day or two days after the first meeting. I said you have heard, no doubt, that I am here on the board at the suggestion of Dr. Van Schaick—

"At the suggestion of Dr. Van Schaick." As we go along in the discussion we will see that many of these members who took the places of old members on the board were suggested by Dr. Van Schaick or were indorsed by him to the appointing power.

I said you have heard, no doubt, that I am here on the board at the suggestion of Dr. Van Schaick, and probably because of his desire I was elected vice president, and that I might share the feeling that was attributed to Dr. Van Schaick against you. I said I am entirely without prejudice. If you do your work as it should be done, you will have my cordial support and cooperation. Every superintendent should have the support and cooperation of the board. You are the executive officer in a large measure of this board, and I intend to stand behind you to the extent of my ability as long as matters are conducted as they should be conducted; and we talked very fully and frankly along those lines. My observation of Mr. Thurston was that he was an excellent man as superintendent of the schools, overcrowded with work, and a man who was oppressed by the dual duty of looking not only after the educational system proper but the physical side as well.

Mr. Ernest H. Daniel, who had served on the board from 1913 to 1917, and who was defeated in 1916 for president of the board by Dr. Van Schaick, was not in the city during the hearing and he did not testify before the committee, but the fact is that Mr. Daniel in 1917 voted for the reelection of Mr. Thurston as superintendent, thereby expressing himself that he held him in very high esteem as a superintendent of schools.

It is peculiarly strange that in 1917 those men on the board who voted for the reelection of Mr. Thurston have gradually been eliminated from the board and others have been placed in their stead; it is peculiarly strange also that in 1916, when Dr. Van Schaick was appointed on the board, and immediately sought the presidency of the board, or at least his friends placed his name there as a candidate for the presidency, those members of the board who voted against the election of Dr. Van Schaick as president have been gradually divorced from the system and others have been substituted in their stead. So by the process of elimination, during the past four years, those who did not agree with the policy and insisted on voting against the election of Dr. Van Schaick as president of the board and for the reelection of Thurston as superintendent have been separated from the public school system of Washington. Whether it is because the president of the board, Dr. Van Schaick, was so powerful and influential with the appointing power that his say controlled I can not state, but I will lay before the Senate the facts that appeared before the committee, and that was that the men who were appointed from 1916 until the present time have, in practically every instance, received the indorsement of Van Schaick for appointment, and in most instances the persons who were appointed did not seek the position until it was suggested to them by Dr. Van Schaick himself that they be appointed.

Appointments to the board of education come from the Supreme Court judges of the District, whose place and authority are such that they have no business in the world to mingle in such matters, and I can not believe that the Supreme Court judges desire to assume such a function. What business has the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia naming the board of education for the District of Columbia? Do they associate generally with the people? Do they study local conditions? Are not judges, by virtue of the very position that they hold, removed from the "common touch," dissociated from current events, secluded in the study of great and intricate judicial questions? But that authority was lodged with the Supreme Court judges of the District, and we find that since 1916 Dr. Van Schaick has been most popular and evidently influential with some members of the court.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. HENDERSON. When the Senator refers to appointments having been made by the supreme court judges, he refers to the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, does he not?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The old members of the board, who served from 1913 to 1917, except two—Mrs. Rhodes and Mrs. Cook—voted for the reelection of Thurston, and I want to discuss Mrs. Rhodes and Mrs. Cook a little later on.

In the election of the president of the board in July, 1916, the old members voted against Van Schaick, with but one exception, and that was Mrs. Rhodes. The only member now on the board who voted for Thurston in 1917 is Mrs. Gerry, and I shall show before I finish that she quickly changed her attitude toward Thurston and became the chief lieutenant of Dr. Van Schaick, the president of the board. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let there be order in the galleries. There must be no demonstrations of any kind on the part of occupants of the galleries.

Mr. HARRISON. Without analyzing the attitude of Dr. Simon and Dr. Neill, who became members of the board very recently, let us discuss the attitude of the members of the board, especially those who opposed the reelection of Mr. Thurston. Let us first take up Mrs. Cook. Anyone who reads the testimony can see a thread running all through it that Dr. Van Schaick absolutely dominated one faction of the board. Van Schaick had but to whistle and—

> Instant from copse and heath arose
> Bonnets and spears and bended bows.

His followers, like those of Roderick Dhu, started up in every direction, ready and eager to perform his bidding. I shall point out from the testimony that that description is not overdrawn.

Mrs. Cook is highly educated, a woman of fine poise, who under the fire of cross-examination took care of herself as well as any witness that I have ever seen on the witness stand, but anyone can see that Mrs. Cook was prejudiced against Thurston because she desired Bruce, the assistant superintendent of colored schools, to have greater authority in the school system. Time after time, instance after instance, in matters that came to their attention she would go over the head of the superintendent and either talk to the president of the board of education or to the assistant superintendent in charge of colored schools about matters which were solely within the jurisdiction of the superintendent himself. It was she who advocated that Bruce, the assistant superintendent of colored schools, should have a seat in the meetings of the board of education, although the law was silent on that point, and although the law had expressly given the right to the superintendent to sit in the meetings of the board of education and discuss with them questions, if need be, denying him only the right to a vote; it said nothing about the assistant superintendent of the white schools or the assistant superintendent of the colored schools being present at the meetings of the board of education. Yet this member of the board and Dr. Van Schaick and other members of the board extended the invitation that the assistant superintendent of the colored schools be admitted to the meetings of the board and there sit by the side of the superintendent, having, as they claimed, just as much right and authority and jurisdiction there as he. Of course, they based their action on the theory that the law says the assistant superintendent of the colored schools shall have sole charge of the colored schools, while the language of the law touching the assistant superintendent of the white schools does not say "sole charge." The law, however, expressly states that the superintendent may be permitted to attend all meetings of the board and denies him only the right of a vote, but it gives no such authority to the assistant superintendent of colored schools.

This member of the board voted against Thurston in 1917 and for Van Schaick against Daniels, although she had served with Daniels previous to 1917. Her whole attitude was in the direction of giving to Bruce greater power. She evidently thought she could carry out her plans through Van Schaick better than through Daniels. One had been tried out; the other had not.

I shall not detain the Senate to read from the hearings how she took matters up directly with Bruce, but when she was pressed for her reasons for her antagonism to Thurston, she cited what she called the Randall case, when the testimony, at page 571 of the hearings, discloses the fact that Bruce himself said in his report on the case, "I do not conceive that Syphax has what partisans are pleased to call a right to this temporary assignment because of his current rating as a principal of Bell and his paper record as a whole. I myself believe this rating question too high," and so forth; and further that when the recommendations of the superintendent, Mr. Thurston, who had indorsed a teacher by the name of Wilson, I believe, instead of Syphax, in the end, with perhaps one or two exceptions, were adopted, Dr. Johnson and Mrs. Cook alone voted against the recommendations, and Bruce, the assistant superintendent, finally recommended the person who was appointed before the board acted. Yet she cites the Randall case as one of the reasons why Thurston should not be reelected superintendent of the schools.

Referring to the Randall case, I quote the following from the hearings before the select committee:

Senator HARRISON. But when it went to the board he did not stand for Miss Wilson?

Referring to Bruce:

Mr. THURSTON. I think he might have felt that I having decided that way, he would not stand in the way. It is so far back that the details are not really clear in my mind.

My reason for standing for Miss Wilson were these: She was a woman who had been in the service for 20 years, a graduate of our own normal school. She had served in every grade from the first to the eighth. From 1906, under the present act, when we formally rated the teachers, she had been rated at the top the entire time without a question. She is a woman who, during her term of service, had worked in Howard University and obtained a degree of bachelor of arts while continuing her school work. She is a woman who had been selected as more or less a leader within her own division of divisional circle meetings where teachers get together for discussion of educational questions. She had been selected once by me, on recommendation from the force somehow, I do not recall how, and once by a former superintendent to serve on course of study committees, once on geography and once on arithmetic. She had to a very unusual degree been able to put her school; the Randall School, during the time she was temporary principal, in very effective touch with her community, and to a most unusual degree she had all the community with her. She knew how to work with them and knew how to interest them in the school. She seemed to me particularly the type of woman to be advanced into a principalship if we were seeking both educational standards, as I was, and the type of person who would connect up the school with the community, things that any worth-while superintendent wants to bring about.

When the question came before the board it took the form that many recommendations take, in my judgment not exactly the right one. It took the form immediately of a contest between Miss Wilson and Mr. Syphax.

Mrs. Cook was for Syphax, and also Dr. Johnson, another member of the board who stood out against Thurston and who was the second lieutenant of Dr. Van Schaick, was standing out for Syphax.

Mr. Thurston continues:

Really the proposition before the board, if I understand the law, is: "Does the board approve or disapprove of Miss Wilson's nomination?" That is the real question before the board. If I may make a very distinguished simile, it is as if the Senate acts on a recommendation coming from the White House.

Those are some of the reasons why she opposed Mr. Thurston. Another reason was a controversy between Dr. Moten, the head of the Miner Normal School, and Charlotte Hunter, a teacher in the school at that time, about whom the newspapers have published articles, about whom witnesses have testified in the courts of the District, about whom much testimony was given before the select committee, a woman who was forced to resign from the schools of the city of Washington because of her association with a man by the name of Moens, an impostor, a degenerate, a man of low character, who claimed to be an anthropologist from Holland or somewhere else.

There was a row on, or a controversy, between Dr. Moten and Miss Charlotte Hunter, who then taught in her school, and this member of the board about whom I am now speaking took the side of Charlotte Hunter; and since that time, as the evidence disclosed, there has been a feeling of antagonism against Dr. Moten. I visited, with the committee, the school over which this woman, Dr. Moten, presides, the Miner Normal School; and I say to you that I have never seen a school that impressed me so greatly as that.

I have never seen a school that I thought was better managed than the Miner Normal School; and as we came out of that building, and down the high steps of that school, another committeeman remarked to me, "Oh, what a pity it is that Dr. Moten is not serving as assistant superintendent over the colored schools in place of Bruce."

Anyone could see at a glance that the woman was of superb qualities when it came to managing a school; and yet one of the reasons why this particular member of the board was against Dr. Thurston was because of that little feeling that had crept into the controversy between Dr. Moten and Charlotte Hunter. Away back in 1914, I believe, Charlotte Hunter had been recommended by Mr. Thurston, then superintendent, to be removed or transferred from the Miner Normal School. It was the wish of Dr. Moten that she should be transferred, but the board even at that time overturned the action of Mr. Thurston. Mrs. Cook as a member assisted in overturning it. She was afterwards, in 1916 or 1917, I believe, transferred to the Dunbar High School, and still later she was fired, or, I should say, allowed to resign.

I want to speak next of another member of the board, a member whom I have known for seven or eight years, a woman of splendid character, and whom I respect very highly—Mrs. Rhodes.

Mrs. Rhodes was ill during the school investigation and was not able to come before the committee and testify. She was there, I think, while we examined Dr. Van Schaick. Unfortunately she was not able to give her testimony; but all the hearings disclosed the fact that Mrs. Rhodes was prejudiced against Dr. Thurston. She voted against his reelection. She voted for the election of Van Schaick no sooner than Van Schaick was placed on the board, although she had served with Daniels prior to Van Schaick's entrance on the board. Daniels was friendly to Thurston's reelection, and Mrs. Rhodes was unsympathetic with Daniels's reelection as president of the board. Let me read you from the mouth of Dr. Van Schaick himself what he says about Mrs. Rhodes, that you may for yourselves consider whether she was prejudiced against Thurston; whether she, as a member of the board, was in a position to give that high degree of cooperation that the schools of the District deserved if they were to develop and be on as high a standard as they should.

Senator WALSH. I suppose we ought to know who the member of the board is that took the course in that respect that you referred to.

Mr. THURSTON. That was Mrs. Rhodes. I think Mrs. Rhodes and I had a radical difference of opinion as to the functions of a board member and a superintendent; the old difference that has existed in all cities and on all boards, as to whether the superintendent or the board members should settle professional matters, especially with regard to advancement of teachers.

Senator WALSH. Let us see if we have that correctly. Previous to your reelection in 1917 this member of the board repeatedly sought to discuss and talk over with you appointments and transfers and the placing of people in the public service?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; and to give her opinion of where they should go.

Senator WALSH. Was it more marked during that period of time than any other time of her service on the board?

Mr. THURSTON. She voted against me in 1917, and after that she approached me very little on these matters. That was one point of difference we had.

* * * * * * *

Mr. THURSTON. Whenever any principalship was involved, any officership or important transfer, I should say very frequently. The embarrassment to me was simply the feeling that I had to make up my judgment after a board member had expressed a different opinion on that subject, and I had still to feel that I must make that regardless of that expression of opinion.

Senator WALSH. Do you mean that board member would call you up and say, "I understand there is a vacancy in the principalship of a certain building. Do you not think So-and-so would be a good person to put in there?"

Mr. THURSTON. "No, I think So-and-so should be transferred there."

Quoting from page 599:

Senator WALSH. That was the kind of influence you speak of?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; and sometimes that was done when my recommendation came in to the board.

Senator WALSH. Did that extend to such a degree as to be annoying to you?

Mr. THURSTON. That was thoroughly and constantly annoying to me, from that one individual, and embarrassing to me. I do not want to reflect too much on Mrs. Rhodes. I think it was a fundamental difference of opinion between us. Mrs. Rhodes is a very capable member, with a keen insight into many things, a woman whose ability I recognized, and recognize to-day.

Senator WALSH. You say it is the old difference that exists everywhere between superintendents and boards?

Mr. THURSTON. You take any book on school administration and you will find it plays it up. It is bound to come on any board at one time or another. Of course, the final difference with Mrs. Rhodes came in connection with another matter that was so affected by other factors at the time that I have not wanted to touch that.

Senator WALSH. You do not make that charge against any other member of the board?

Mr. THURSTON. Not to any extent. Other members of the board have been interested in certain individuals and have frequently presented their claims, which has, of course, embarrassed me.

Senator WALSH. But only to the extent that you would expect weak human nature to exert its influence?

Mr. THURSTON. Well, Senator, I do not believe that certain individuals should be continually raised before the superintendent's mind for place or advancement. That is embarrassing.

Here is a letter that was written on March 30, 1917, that is found in the hearings on page 179, written by Dr. Van Schaick to Mr. Oliver P. Newman, who was then president of the board of commissioners; and there has been no doubt, from the time that Dr. Van Schaick was first considered for a place on the board, that he was close to and influential with the members of the board of commissioners. Here is what he said. This letter is dated March 30, 1917. He had only been on the board a very little while then. He went on, I think, in July, 1916, or about that time; and yet on March 30, 1917, we find him writing this letter to the president of the board of commissioners in Washington.

He says:

DEAR MR. NEWMAN: Referring again to our conversation of this morning, I beg to say that I saw our friend S—— after I left you.

So he had a conversation with Newman that morning, and he writes this letter in the afternoon to Newman, and he says:

Referring again to our conversation of this morning, I beg to say that I saw our friend S—— after I left you.

I asked him, on cross-examination, who this man "S——" was. At first, he said he did not know, but his convenient memory finally, in answer to a question, stated that in all probability it was Mr. Siddons. No one doubts—no one can doubt—and Dr. Van Schaick does not doubt that the party referred to in that letter as Mr. S—— was Siddons.

Siddons was at that time one of the other commissioners in the District, who was afterwards taken from the commissionership and placed on the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; and through the hearings the fact is disclosed that Van Schaick belonged to the same club in the city of Washington—the Monday Evening Club, or some such club [laughter in the galleries]—to which certain members of the District Supreme Court bench belonged, and to which the commissioners, or most of them, of the District of Columbia belonged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend for a minute until the occupant of the chair again calls the attention of the occupants of the galleries to the fact that there must be no demonstration whatever? If there are any others, the rules of the Senate will be carried out, and the galleries will be cleared.

Mr. HARRISON. So he said:

I saw our friend S——

And no one can doubt that "S——" was Siddons, the other commissioner—

after I left you.

He says, in his letter, further:

He has no doubt about the wisdom of the action and we agreed to put it upon these grounds.

So they are agreeing upon their action.

1. The retirement of the individual concerned—

He stated that "the individual concerned" was Mrs. Rhodes, the member of the board about whom I am now talking.

The retirement of the individual concerned—

Says Dr. Van Schaick—

would strengthen the commissioners in their relations with the board of education.

This president of the board of education evidently desired to strengthen the commissioners with the board of education, and so he suggested, in this very loving letter—

The retirement of the individual concerned—

That is, Mrs. Rhodes—

would strengthen the commissioners in their relations with the board of education. At one time it was very desirable that they should have some one who was cooperative on the board—

Says the doctor.

This person—

Speaking of Mrs. Rhodes—

was the most practicable one. As it is now, any action which the board takes in close cooperation with the commissioners is discounted by her presence.

And then he further says, in the letter away back on March 30, 1917:

Her lack of proportion—

Speaking of Mrs. Rhodes—

Her lack of proportion and balance in her attitude toward the superintendent, her venom and embitterness, embarrasses the administration of the schools in dealing with this important question of the superintendent.

So we have it from the pen of Dr. Van Schaick himself, in speaking of one of the members of the board who had helped to promote him to the presidency and who had constantly stood with him in his fight against Thurston. He says:

Her lack of proportion and balance in her attitude toward the superintendent, her venom and embitterness, embarrasses the administration of the schools in dealing with this important question of the superintendent.

Need I say more touching this member, when the president of the board himself has such an opinion of her that even he thinks that she could not give justice to Thurston at any stage at any time? "That she embarrasses the administration of the schools in dealing with this important question of the superintendent."

Further, I quote from the testimony of Mr. Thurston, at page 16. He said, speaking of Mrs. Rhodes:

One board member not only constantly sought the nomination of others but personally sought the member's own appointment at my hands to one of our higher-paid positions. So heavily was this member's candidacy pushed that for my protection and the board's a majority of the board members took this action in February [16], 1916.

Here is the action which the board took and spread on the minutes of the board:

A majority of the board as at present constituted are of the opinion that no one of its members should be considered for an appointive office in the school system under the authority of the board.

I think their action was justified and well taken.

So I shall pass from a discussion of this good lady. I regret very much to have to read into the RECORD this estimate of her prejudice and her venom against the superintendent of schools, but my duty must be performed.

Now, let us see about Mrs. Gerry. I read from the hearings, at page 304:

Senator HARRISON. I want you to give the incidents you were talking about now of delayed action which, if the board had not stepped in, would have been disastrous to the school system.

Mrs. GERRY. I will be very glad to. I will call your attention to one incident when Mr. Thurston was first reappointed. I think I stated before that I began my work on the board that year with the most absolute spirit of cooperation. There were various questions of difficulty about textbooks, as I recall it. Some of the recommendations of the superintendent were objected to by other board members.

Senator HARRISON. What other board members?

Mrs. GERRY. Two, I think. In that case, that was a question of the textbook committee. Is it necessary to go over all these details?

Senator HARRISON. Yes; we are going into the textbook matter fully.

Mrs. GERRY. I am delighted. We will furnish the committee with some facts.

Senator HARRISON. And we hope some revelations.

Mrs. GERRY. Revelations?

Senator HARRISON. Just proceed.

Mrs. GERRY. As it happened, I think, in that case it was a question of reading books for the primary department.

Senator HARRISON. You did not tell me the members of the board who objected to the recommendation of the superintendent.

Mrs. GERRY. Mrs. Rhodes, I think, was in opposition to the recommendation. She has a wide knowledge of school matters. It was purely a question of difference of opinion about the advisability of certain reading books—the relative value, I mean. Mr. Larner and I, as I recall, voted for the recommendation which the director of primary instruction had transmitted through the superintendent.

Senator HARRISON. You were placed on the committee for the adoption of textbooks immediately on your election, were you?

Mrs. GERRY. I think that was my first assignment. At that time we had a number of standing committees. Mr. Hamilton dissolved those standing committees, and we have been too busy with other matters since that time to work out what we want to do. However, that is not material at this moment. I absolutely cooperated with the superintendent. I felt during the first year I was on the board that I was not in a position to come to a definite enough conclusion regarding the way in which the system was administered to feel justified in taking a position in opposition to the reappointment of the superintendent. I took a long time to make up my mind regarding that matter, and, as I have stated, I decided to vote for his retention.

The first matter, I think, in which I felt action should be taken was one that I had first-hand knowledge of. I have always attempted to go on the principle that it is utterly impossible for any one board member to be acquainted with all the details of this very complex system.

I would like to state, by the way, that I think if the board of education could be relieved from certain of the rather perfunctory and technical matters over which by law it is given jurisdiction, that would be enormously to the advantage of the school system.

So she voted, when she first went on the board, for the reelection of Mr. Thurston. At the same time she voted to substitute Dr. Van Schaick as president of the board for Mr. Daniel, who had served faithfully on the board before and who was eminently qualified to continue as president of the board.

But she changed so quickly against Thurston after she had voted for him that it was quite amusing in the committee room when Dr. Van Schaick was on the stand and the question was asked him who voted against Mr. Thurston for reelection in 1917. Hers was one of the names which first came into the mind of Dr. Van Schaick, and among the names he mentioned he said, "Mrs. Gerry." Mrs. Gerry promptly rose in the audience and said, "You are mistaken, Doctor; I voted the first time for the reelection of Mr. Thurston."

But the doctor can not be blamed for making that admission. It was perfectly natural that he might have stated to the committee that in his opinion Mrs. Gerry was one of the members who had voted against Thurston—she was one of his mainstays, she was one of his lieutenants, she was one of the members on whom he at all times had counted, as shown by the testimony. That condition had prevailed for a long time. She was one of the members who, after the regular meetings of the board, would quietly retire to some little ante room and, with three or four other members, the dominant faction, there in a secret council, in a star chamber proceeding, would talk over certain matters and adopt certain policies. She never failed to be there in that little clique, unless she was prevented either by sickness or some unexplained circumstances.

So he naturally thought when he was telling who was against Thurston's reappointment in 1917 that Mrs. Gerry was surely one of the parties. She became so enamored of the qaulifications of Van Schaick as the president of the board that in 1918, while Van Schaick was in Europe, and had been for more than a year, and the election of a president of the board came up, and every other member of the board was in favor of electing Mr. Hamilton, she raised her voice in protest, and communicated with Van Schaick in Europe to obtain his views and ascertain the bent of his mind.

Let me read just a little of her testimony to show how she felt certain members stood as between Thurston and Van Schaick or about any matter that might arise:

Mrs. GERRY. He held himself as I held myself, in what I think is entirely a proper attitude in a matter of that kind—if duty is thrust upon him or upon her, you have a moral obligation to accept that duty. He did not say he would accept, nor did he say he would refuse.

Senator HARRISON. Did you ask him to offer himself as a candidate for reelection as president of the board, or to allow his friends on the board to present his name?

Mrs. GERRY. I do not recall, Senator, whether I did that or not.

Senator HARRISON. It is possible that you did, is it not?

Mrs. GERRY. As I recall, the subject matter of my letter was to ask Dr. Van Schaick whether he would return or not, so that we might be informed in what manner to act.

Senator HARRISON. Was it your idea, if he told you he would return and desired to be reelected, to see other members of the board, so that you could get it fixed up for him?

Mrs. GERRY. There was no question of fixing the matter, Senator.

Senator HARRISON. Of course, I do not mean "fixing" in any improper sense.

Mrs. GERRY. There was very little talk, as far as I can recall.

Senator HARRISON. I mean, to confer with other members of the board. Was it your object to confer with some of the friends of Dr. Van Schaick and see if you had enough votes to reelect him?

Mrs. GERRY. I think I knew it without conferring.

Senator HARRISON. You knew who would vote for him and who would vote against him?

Mrs. GERRY. I think I did.

Senator HARRISON. Whom do you suggest was on the board that would vote for him in all circumstances and on all occasions?

Mrs. GERRY. I think it was inevitable that we knew who was for him and who was against him. There was no question of caucusing, no question of influence.

Senator HARRISON. Then it was a fact that the board just naturally divided into two camps, so to speak?

Mrs. GERRY. I think so.

Senator HARRISON. What do you base that on, Mrs. Gerry?

Mrs. GERRY. Well, I think that the board, as every board should be, was composed of a conservative element and an element which desired to progress.

Senator HARRISON. Who was the conservative element on the board?

Mrs. GERRY. I should say the business element, very naturally, would be conservative.

Senator HARRISON. Who was the radical element?

Mrs. GERRY. There was no radical element.

Senator HARRISON. Well, the progressive element?

Mrs. GERRY. Those of us who were interested primarily in educational advancement.

So she at all times knew how the board stood in all these matters, and it was not necessary to fix anything. They were already fixed.

Now, I want to talk about another member of the board, Dr. Johnson. Dr. Johnson knows just about as much about the school system of Washington as he does about the nebular hypothesis. He has conferred so much with Dr. Van Schaick and other members of the board who are opposed to Thurston that when he started to talk he spoke like a parrot and employed practically the same language as had been used by his confederates who had preceded him.

May I quote part of his testimony? He said he went on the board prejudiced against Bruce. Then the following occurred:

Senator HARRISON. Did you vote for or against Dr. Van Schaick for president at that time?

Dr. JOHNSON. I voted for him.

Senator HARRISON. What were your reasons at that time for voting for Dr. Van Schaick?

Dr. JOHNSON. Well, when I went on the board I was very much prejudiced against the assistant superintendent.

Senator HARRISON. Bruce?

Dr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Senator HARRISON. Why were you prejudiced against him?

Dr. JOHNSON. Like most of the other people in the community, I believed that he was wholly responsible for the condition of the colored schools.

Senator HARRISON. The condition was bad at that time, was it?

Dr. JOHNSON. There was a lot of grumbling about transfers and appointments and promotions, and had been all along.

Then he suddenly changed his mind about Bruce, and in a very short while after Johnson became a member of the board he was at all times and under all circumstances a champion of Bruce. It was Dr. Johnson and Mrs. Cook, two colored members of the board, who fought for Bruce to have a place on the board of education when the law did not grant it, going constantly over the head of the superintendent and to the head of the board in order to consult.

I read further from the testimony:

Senator HARRISON. When did you make up your mind as to the superintendent's weaknesses, as you told him that day?

Dr. JOHNSON. All through the year.

Senator HARRISON. You ascertained that after you got on the board?

Dr. JOHNSON. Oh, yes.

Senator HARRISON. What incidents had happened that made you come to that conclusion?

Although Johnson had sat at these hearings for almost three weeks when he testified, had heard the examinations of the witnesses, and knew the character of questioning which we had put to the witnesses, he testified as follows:

Well, out of the mass of detail on the board of education that we had to deal with at every meeting, I could not pick out particular things. Had I known this investigation was coming on I could possibly have noted them down and refreshed my mind.

I shall not go into the Randall case further. That was one of the things, he said, that caused him to change. I have already alluded to that case, a fight between Syphax and Miss Wilson.

This same Dr. Johnson, a colored member of the board, in speaking of his own race in the city of Washington, indorsed language that had been used by Dr. Van Schaick. In speaking of those of his race who comprised the Parents' League, he said that they are more than one-third savage. That was the compliment which was paid by Dr. Van Schaick to the Parents' League, which had been organized by the colored population here, or some of them, in order to rid the public schools of teachers such as Charlotte Hunter, who they thought might have associated with Moens, this degenerate and profligate anthropologist, this vile and low pervert.

Then I read further:

Senator HARRISON. At that time you had received a letter from Dr. Van Schaick, had you not?
Dr. JOHNSON. A similar letter.
Senator HARRISON. Have you got the original?
Dr. JOHNSON. No; I have not. I handed it to the District Committee. It is on page 53.
Senator HARRISON. He had written you a letter that this outfit was one-third child, one-third savage, and one-third shell-game man, had he?
Dr. JOHNSON. He had.
Senator HARRISON. Did you approve of that statement?
Dr. JOHNSON. Every word of it. I modified the proposition, if you will read further.
Senator HARRISON. You thought they were two-thirds child?
Dr. JOHNSON. That is it.
Senator HARRISON. And two-thirds savage?
Dr. JOHNSON. No; with the rest divided up.
Senator HARRISON. You were not going to get too many parts?
Dr. JOHNSON. No.
Senator HARRISON. That is a pretty bad allegation to bring against a part of your own race, is it not?
Dr. JOHNSON. Knowing them as I do, and as you can not know them, I do not think so.

And while he expressed himself as believing these members of his race composing the Parents' League were two-thirds savage and the balance divided as childlike and "shell game," he wrote a letter to these people April 14, 1919, in answer to an invitation to attend one of their mass meetings, in which he said, "While I can not be with you in person, I am with you in spirit," and so forth. "The Parents' League was organized in a good cause, is capable of doing a splendid work for our school system, and, as I told you then, you have my hearty support in your efforts."

The people that he speaks of there organized themselves from amongst the colored population here in order to purify and clarify the atmosphere touching this controversy that had arisen respecting Moens, who, as I will show later, entered the school system here through a letter given by Dr. Van Schaick as president of the board, and took pictures of little school children, took pictures in the nude of women throughout the city, in his studio in Washington, and for which action this man Moens was afterwards indicted and tried and convicted in the courts of the District. When this part of the colored population, desirous of removing the stain from the right living and better element of school-teachers who were trying to do their duty, and upon whom a foul suspicion rested, desirous of ridding the schools of such teachers as Charlotte Hunter, who had associated with Moens for years, then this Dr. Johnson, member of the board, says that they are "one-third savage, one-third child, and one-third shell-game persons." He changed as quickly in his estimate of the Parents' League as he did about Thurston as superintendent.

Believing in the motives that were behind most of the people who were in the Parents' League, many of them must have been from the best people of the colored population of Washington—they were good because preachers were there of every kind and every denomination. I read the speeches at their big meeting at one of the churches here, and every speech was pitched upon a high plane, all advocating the one proposition to clarify the atmosphere and rid the schools of these nefarious influences that were calculated to tear down and destroy the colored schools. I have more respect for them, knowing the motives behind them, than I have for this man who makes the allegation that a part of his people are two-thirds savage and one-third child, when they are embarked upon such a good purpose as they were.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Was it not in connection with that episode that Mr. Van Schaick wrote another letter to Prof. Learned, in which he described the colored population who belonged to the Parents' League as one-third child, one-third savage, and one-third shell game; that he also referred to the fact that he had attempted to corrupt the board and to get them in advance to prejudge the guilt or innocence of Mr. Bruce?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, the Senator is correct; and when I get down to Dr. Van Schaick, which I will do presently, I wish to read that letter and analyze it and elaborate upon it.

Let me read it now:

I have read the testimony in the Bruce hearing. It confirms me in my judgment that he should be retained. Of those against him—Chestnut used to come to see me, and I regarded him as a joke. Montgomery has sat on the Miner board with me for several years, and I have liked him personally, but regarded him as old and past usefulness. Poor Miss —— thrown out for alleged immoral relations with a white man—I believe to be an honest woman and a good woman, but life has been very hard on her. Mrs. Murray, I don't know, but I see she promised to produce a dead man to swear to a petty thing, etc. Now, to the point. You have done a valuable piece of work. I personally am very grateful to you. You handled the thing exactly on the lines you projected. I am sorry that Peyton kicked over the traces. He did a very stupid thing for a shrewd fellow, and he did exactly what he promised he would not do.

You stay up there now and get your rest. Take your time and make your report when you get ready. Tanner's last attack on you convinces me that it is perfectly hopeless to fuss with that Parents' League. In the make-up of a lot of them there is about one-third child, one-third savage, and one-third shell-game man.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, any man who has such a misconception of his duty and such a lack of perception of the immorality of the act as to try to debauch men who are called upon to judge under the law of the actions of individuals is wholly unfit to be connected with the school board and certainly is unfit to be a member of the board of commissioners of this District.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator and myself are not far apart.

Dr. Johnson further testified about this little clique that was on the board of education, to which I have referred. At pages 488, 489, 490, 491, and 492 of the hearings, in speaking of the meetings of this clique, he testified:

Dr. JOHNSON. Not in the regular meeting.
Senator HARRISON. But after the meeting adjourned, you all met upstairs in Mr. Hines's office?
Dr. JOHNSON. In Mr. Hines's office.
Senator HARRISON. Who told you to meet upstairs?
Dr. JOHNSON. I think I received my information from Mrs. Rhodes.
Senator HARRISON. During the formal meeting?
Dr. JOHNSON. During the formal meeting.
Senator HARRISON. Did she whisper it to you or speak out in the meeting?
Dr. JOHNSON. After the meeting had adjourned.
Senator HARRISON. What did she say to you?
Dr. JOHNSON. She said, "I want you to go up to Mr. Hines's office. Some of us are going to meet up there." That may not be her exact words.
Senator HARRISON. That is the substance of them?
* * * * * * *
Senator HARRISON. You did not know that Mrs. Cook had been invited to be there, did you?
Dr. JOHNSON. I did not.
Senator HARRISON. You were just assuming she was going to be in that crowd, were you?
Dr. JOHNSON. I was assuming that she ought to be there.
Senator HARRISON. You did not ask Peyton, did you?
Dr. JOHNSON. Peyton had gone.
Senator HARRISON. The rest of you tarried until the others had gone?
Dr. JOHNSON. We did not tarry.
Senator HARRISON. You just stayed there?
Dr. JOHNSON. That is right.
Senator HARRISON. Why did you not meet in the same room?
Dr. JOHNSON. I do not know that, except I suppose they wanted to discuss things that they did not want everybody else to hear about.
Senator HARRISON. Was there a kind of a secret meeting on that proposition?
Dr. JOHNSON. Whatever it was; yes.
Senator HARRISON. You got up there right away and you saw these members there. Who called the meeting to order?
Dr. JOHNSON. Dr. Van Schaick started out.
Senator HARRISON. What did he say?
Dr. JOHNSON. Do you want me to remember everything that he said?
Senator HARRISON. The substance of it.
Dr. JOHNSON. Well, Dr. Learned was preparing to go away, and we discussed at that meeting the advisability of letting Mr. Thurston know that we were not going to vote for him when his reelection came up.
Senator HARRISON. Were you all agreed on that proposition?
Dr. JOHNSON. We were not all agreed on the proposition at that time.
Senator HARRISON. Who disagreed?
Dr. JOHNSON. As to what proposition? As to whether we should notify him or not?
Senator HARRISON. Yes.
Dr. JOHNSON. I think I suggested that we should wait.
Senator HARRISON. You agreed that you were not going to vote for him for reelection, did you not?
Dr. JOHNSON. Oh, yes.
Senator HARRISON. There was no question about how that crowd stood on that proposition, was there?
Dr. JOHNSON. There was no doubt about myself.
Senator HARRISON. There wasn't any question about how all the members present at that informal conference felt toward the reelection of Mr. Thurston, was there?
Dr. JOHNSON. No question about that. No; it was not finally decided at that meeting what we should do.
Senator HARRISON. So the meeting broke up without coming to any conclusion?
Dr. JOHNSON. Any definite conclusion.
Senator HARRISON. When was the next informal conference called by those who agreed on that proposition? Was that at Dr. Van Schaick's house?
Dr. JOHNSON. Just prior to sending the letter.
Senator HARRISON. At Dr. Van Schaick's house?
Dr. JOHNSON. At Dr. Van Schaick's house.
Senator HARRISON. Was the same crowd present?
Dr. JOHNSON. No; Dr. Learned was in California.
Senator HARRISON. The same ones were present with the exception of Dr. Learned?
Dr. JOHNSON. Yes.
Senator HARRISON. If he had been here, he would probably have been present, would he not?
Dr. JOHNSON. I can not answer as to that.
Senator HARRISON. Would he have been invited?
Dr. JOHNSON. There is no doubt about it.
Senator HARRISON. Why?
Dr. JOHNSON. Because I knew his stand on the matter.

Senator HARRISON. Then you did not want anybody at these informal meetings except those whose stand you knew in regard to Thurston? Is that right?
Dr. JOHNSON. That is possible.
Senator HARRISON. That is right, is it not?
Dr. JOHNSON. That is possible; I do not know if it is right.
Senator HARRISON. Well, it is a fact, is it not?
Dr. JOHNSON. It is a fact that it did not happen.
Senator HARRISON. What did not happen?
Dr. JOHNSON. Dr. Learned was not present.
Senator HARRISON. He was in California?
Dr. JOHNSON. He was.
Senator HARRISON. The rest were present?
Dr. JOHNSON. They were.
Senator HARRISON. And you think if he had been in Washington he would have been invited to that meeting, do you?
Dr. JOHNSON. No doubt about it.
Senator HARRISON. Because of his attitude toward Mr. Thurston?
Dr. JOHNSON. Yes.
Senator HARRISON. You took care not to have any of the members of the board present at these informal meetings except those you knew were against Mr. Thurston's reelection, did you not?
Dr. JOHNSON. I think, Senator, it was a matter of having present those who were in agreement with us on that matter.
Senator HARRISON. Absolutely.
Dr. JOHNSON. That is so.
Senator HARRISON. There is no question about that.
Dr. JOHNSON. That is right.

And so throughout the hearings I might read of their secret meetings, not only in Hines's office after the regular meetings of the board, but sometimes they met in Dr. Van Schaick's home and then transacted their business out of an informal gathering there.

I wish next to address myself to another member of the board who opposed Thurston, Dr. Learned, who came all the way from California to testify before the committee. He was one of those who was requested by Dr. Van Schaick to go on the board, taking the place of one who had voted for Thurston's reelection and who had voted against Van Schaick's election as president of the board. Dr. Learned says his first impressions about Mr. Thurston were good, and then:

Senator HARRISON. That was at what time?
Mr. LEARNED. That was in July, 1918. On the whole, it seemed to me that things had run smoothly—

That is, from 1917 to the latter part of 1918, during the war, he says:

On the whole, it seemed to me that things had run smoothly, and that Mr. Thurston had given us, so far as I could judge, a pretty good piece of work as director of the schools, and I let the matter lapse.
Senator HARRISON. During that time Dr. Van Schaick was abroad, or a greater part of the time, was he not?
Mr. LEARNED. During the entire time, sir.
Senator HARRISON. During that time you thought the schools were run pretty well under Supt. Thurston?
Mr. LEARNED. I thought so.
Senator HARRISON. You said the schools got along very well under Mr. Thurston that first year, did you not?
Mr. LEARNED. The first year I thought the schools got along very well, as far as I could observe.

So this man who stood with Van Schaick said that while Van Schaick was away from Washington and abroad "the schools got along very well under Thurston," but as soon as Van Schaick returned we see from the hearings that the controversy started again and the deplorable conditions returned. He said he did not change his opinion until June or July of 1918 or 1919. Well, he changed his opinion when Dr. Van Schaick returned—that is when, and not until then.

At page 653 of the hearings, in answer to the question why he had changed his opinion with reference to Thurston, he said this:

Mr. LEARNED. I would not say "all right," but they were getting along, as far as I could observe. I think they are getting along now, if I may say so, in a way.
Senator HARRISON. Yes; in a way. That is very appropriate.
What was the first thing that came up that caused you to come to the conclusion there was something wrong?
Mr. LEARNED. It is impossible for me to say there was any first thing. It was the result of impressions and sundry matters that probably helped to explain these impressions. I was very much disturbed at the time of the Moens case, and, as you are well aware, I was at that time a special agent of the Department of Justice.
Senator HARRISON. But you had formed your conclusion, as I understand, before the Moens case arose, had you not?
Mr. LEARNED. No.
Senator HARRISON. Was that the first thing that caused you to form that conclusion?
Mr. LEARNED. That was an incident in the situation.
Senator HARRISON. Was that one of the first incidents?
Mr. LEARNED. It was among the earlier incidents.

So he says that while Van Schaick was away the school got along pretty well under Thurston, but he changed his opinion, and one of the first things that caused him to change his opinion was the Moens case. Now, let us analyze the Moens case. What are the facts touching the Moens case? And what was Learned's connection with it?

Dr. Learned was working during the war in the Department of Justice. The Moens case arose. Moens had come to America in 1914 claiming to be an anthropologist, an expert in the study of races. So he came to Dr. Van Schaick in 1916 and presented himself to him, having some kind of a letter from the minister of the Netherlands. He said, "I want entrée to the public schools of Washington. I desire you to give me a letter, Mr. President, so I can go there." So Van Schaick wrote a letter for Moens, about whom he made no investigations and about whom he knew little or nothing, and off Moens goes with that letter to the various schools in Washington and, presenting that letter, had entrée to the schools. He meets Charlotte Hunter, one of the teachers in the schools. He may have met her before. She likes the study of anthropology; she has been interested in anthropology for a long time; and so she takes up with this man Moens; she a colored woman and he a white man.

He rents rooms from her; establishes a studio, where she sometimes goes; and, as the investigation of the Department of Justice reveals, but which she denies, she received pay when she would procure for him certain types of female pupils whom he might photograph, sometimes in the nude. So when his association became too constant with Charlotte Hunter and his operations became so notorious in photographing little children, and nude women in some instances in Washington, and questionable characters in other instances here, there arose a complaint on the part of the parents.

Some little girl who was approached by Moens on one occasion back in 1917 to have her picture taken by him in his studio reported to her parent, and her parent, the good parent that he was, reported the matter to her teacher or principal, Dr. Moten, head of the Miner Normal School, with whom Mrs. Cook could not at all times agree, who reported the matter to the assistant superintendent of colored schools. Then it came to the knowledge of another principal by the name of Newman, and then of Wilkinson in January, 1917. Wilkinson, the good principal that he was, and whose testimony and bearing before the committee impressed it greatly, immediately went to the Smithsonian Institution, where this pupil of his was being threatened to be photographed by Moens, and when Moens attempted to photograph her in secrecy, in some secluded place, and to remove a part of her clothing, he raised his voice in protest and carried the girl back to her parent and the school. These occurrences were constantly happening in Washington.

Mind you, on January 12, 1917, this man Wilkinson immediately reported this matter to Van Schaick, as president of the board, through Bruce, the assistant, and Van Schaick, apparently not satisfied with having already given the proper credentials to Moens to visit the schools, as he had done in his letter of July, 1916, made an investigation of Moens, talked with him, and exonerated him without consultation with Thurston, the superintendent, and in July or October, 1917, wrote another letter to Moens giving him entrée into the schools. Mind you, after the knowledge had come to him which had come to Wilkinson, the principal of the Dunbar High School; after rumors were flying thick and fast around Washington, just before Van Schaick's departure for Europe, he gives a second letter to Moens to visit the schools.

Learned says that it was the Moens case that first caused him to change his opinion in regard to Thurston. Learned knew more about the Moens case than any other member of the board. He knew even more about it than any other man in the United States, save the assistant district attorney, Mr. Arth, and the detectives who had worked on the case, because he was in charge, in the Department of Justice, of the whole Moens file of papers.

Every report came to him; the letter that Wilkinson had written had come to him; all the facts were there; and yet it was not until November, 1918, that Learned approached Thurston and said to him, "Certain information has come to me about Charlotte Hunter being connected with Moens; I wish you to get up all the data that you can and send it to me; but let us not do anything about it yet; I am still investigating." Then in December following, 1918, Learned again went to Thurston and to members of the board, handed them a memorandum that was prepared by employees in the Department of Justice, showing Moens's operations, showing his connection with Charlotte Hunter, one of the teachers of the schools, setting forth the facts as to his being suspected as a German spy, and how he had been employed by some great oil corporation in Oklahoma that was affiliated with some organization made up in part of German capital; and yet in December, 1918, Learned said to Thurston, "We must not fire Charlotte Hunter yet, although she is suspected of being implicated with this man Moens. We want to try him, and if you dismiss her it might affect the trial of the case." He told the same thing to Mr. Hamilton, another member of the board. The testimony of Mr. Thurston and Mr. Bruce and Mr. Hamilton all agree on the proposition that Learned requested them not to take any steps touching Charlotte Hunter; and in February following, 1919, he even appealed to the board of education not to take any steps to remove Charlotte Hunter for fear that it might affect the trial of Moens that was coming on shortly. Although he, more than any other man connected with the public-school system, was responsible for keeping Charlotte Hunter in the schools of Washington after the fact had been known that she was connected with Moens, he lays it all on Thurston and says that that was one of the first reasons why he formed an opinion against Thurston and thought he should be removed.

Let us go further with Dr. Learned. This same man Learned was placed on the committee to investigate the charges preferred against Bruce. Some of the charges involved his moral character, while others were directed to his efficiency as an administrative officer. Dr. Van Schaick named Dr. Learned as one of the members of the board to investigate the charges.

Now, what happened? You have heard read the letter written by Van Schaick to Learned before the report was made. Did that committee take up and investigate the moral questions involved? Did they go into any of those charges that were filed by Smith in the District as well as by the Parents' League? No. Was it not reasonable to believe and expect that that committee would go into a thorough investigation to ascertain all the facts touching that official of the schools? I think that will be conceded; but they did not do it. What they did was to refer the charges as to immorality to the corporation counsel, and then they went into an investigation of the charges against Bruce as an administrative officer.

And before they made their findings Dr. Learned sought from Dr. Van Schaick his opinion as to the testimony and the report. Van Schaick on that occasion went further than that. He went to Peyton, another member of the committee, who was serving with Learned, so says Peyton, and stated to Peyton that he would get rid of Bruce if he, Peyton, would agree with Learned and the other committee member in their findings about Bruce.

It was the same man who was a member of the committee who investigated Miss Wood, one of the teachers in the District schools. Before I get to that, however, let me inform the Senate that it was the same Dr. Learned who invited this man Moens out to his home, had him to dinner, and, as he said, played on the piano while he, Moens, sang. It was Learned, too, together with Van Schaick, who denied Thurston a copy of the testimony, had it destroyed, and refused him entrée into the meetings of the investigating committee.

He is the same man who made a report on the Wood charges, which alleged that Miss Wood had stated that there was no more reason why dogs should not go to Heaven than human beings; and when I asked Learned if he put the question to Miss Wood as to whether or not she had given utterance to any such expression as that, he said, "It appeared to me as so ridiculous that I did not put that question to her." I asked him if he believed in that utterance, and he said that he did not know; that perhaps they might. I then asked him the question if he thought an atheist should teach in the schools of the city of Washington, and he said he did not know what an atheist was. Yet that is the character of man who was on the board of education, and a part of the dominant faction and clique who met in their secret chambers, in their little off and far-away places, to conjure up their policies and adopt their schemes touching Thurston and the schools.

Now, let me get to the "storm petrel" of this controversy, the man who merely had to crack his whip to have certain other members of the board jump. I refer to Dr. Van Schaick.

Mr. President, we delight to read in history and fiction and see upon the screen those beautiful portrayals of the village parson as he goes about his simple work in a modest way, preaching the word of the lowly Nazarene, trying to remove controversies in the neighborhood, doing everything he can to influence people for good, and to aid in the betterment of society.

That character impresses and inspires us. Such a man in his humble way, serving as the modest violet in the lonely valley, unseen by the haughty eye, shedding the sweetness of its perfume in the peaceful air, is doing a noble work. Dr. Van Schaick, although unlike the modest village parson, did well for a while, as long as he served the church of God, preached from his sacred pulpit, and remained away from the storms of political strife. Before he aroused this controversy that has awakened the city of Washington and became inoculated with the virus of getting into civic affairs he was doing a great work. After serving his congregation well for a number of years, this character leaves his pulpit and seeks a place on the board of education.

He finds that it takes a good deal of his time from religious work, so much that he first goes into his own pocket, as Mrs. Gerry states, and pays money for a substitute to preach for him. But he is not satisfied with that. He hears the cry of politics. He wants to get into the fray. He desires to take a greater part in the affairs of the District of Columbia, and so he refuses longer to pay out of his pocket for a substitute to preach for him. As pastor he quits the church entirely, practically stops preaching, and is nominated as one of the District commissioners.

There is a great deal about Dr. Van Schaick that I admire. I think he is a man of good intentions, of high motives, of splendid intellect. He is a strong character. He can not stand opposition. Why, if he were a member of the Board of District Commissioners, you would never hear of the other two at all. He makes those who are weaker than he but putty in his hands; and so, as soon as he was appointed on the board in 1916, he was not willing to occupy the simpler and unobtrusive place of a mere member of the board. He wanted to sit at the head of the table. He desired to be the whole cheese; and so he gets his crowd around him, and because of feelings upon the part of some, and a desire to punish others, he is smart enough to form a coalition, and so he is elected president of the board of education. Those of us who understand his peculiar characteristics, his dominating disposition, his impulsive temperamentality, and ambitious proclivities, realize now that he would not have been content to have remained a mere member of the board.

Did he seek reelection? Why, of course he did; and he was smart enough, strong enough, dominating enough, to punish everyone who ever opposed him by indorsing some other person for their place, and seeing them go, and others come in.

Why, of course, some of these other members of the board were going to do what Van Schaick told them to do. They had seen Daniel go off the board. They had seen Larner go off the board. They had seen Galliher go, Blair go, and various others go, who had the courage to combat the doctor in what he desired; and so, when their time came to vote, I am inclined to think they took their cue from this fable:

And how did it happen that certain members of the board always kept in with the doctor as they did?

"Why, I'm thinking, Murphy, it was because they had such a bad could, jist!"

"And what had their having a could to do with the matter at all, at all?"

"Why, did you never hear, Murphy, my boy, of the fox that had a could? Then I'll tell ye.

"Once there was a lion that wanted to know how polite all the bastes were. So he made a great smell in his den with brimstone, or something else—I don't mind what jist—but it smelt enough to knock you down intirely; and then he called in the bear, and says he, 'Good morning, Mr. Bear, and what d'ye think of the smell here this morning?' and says the bear, says he, 'Why, it smells bad.' 'What's that you say?' says the lion; 'take that,' says he, ating him up altogether; 'take that, and see if it will tache ye politeness, ye unmannerly son of a cub!'

"Now, when the bear was ate up the lion called in the monkey and asked him the same question precisely. Now, the monkey, seeing the bear that the lion had swallowed lying dead in the corner, says he, 'May it please your majesty,' says he, 'it's jist the most delightful smell I ever smelt in my life at all, at all.' 'So it is,' said the lion patting him on the head, aisy like, so as to bate the breath clan out of his body; 'so it is,' said he, 'and now you'll not tell another lie soon, I'm thinking.'

"Now, when the lion had kil't the bear and the monkey, he called in the fox to him and, says he, looking very savage and ready to ate him up if he should make the laste fox paw at all, 'Good morning, Fox,' says he, 'how does my parlor smell to-day?' And, says the fox, wiping his nose with the brush of his tail and pulling down his eyelid with his paw, as much as to say, 'D'ye see any green there, my honey?' 'Faith,' says he, 'may it please your majesty, I've a very bad could this morning, and it's me that can't smell at all, at all!' So the lion laughed and tould the fox he was a very clever baste and that he might tread in his footsteps if he could straddle wide enough and that all the other bastes should mind him or he would ate them up, as he had done the bear."

So we have these members who had stood with Dr. Van Schaick still on the board and suffering, no doubt, from a very "bad cold."

Now, Mr. President, Dr. Van Schaick says that when he went on the board he went on "with an open mind and a friendly disposition"; and yet the hearing revealed the fact that in February, 1917, he attended a convention in Kansas City of school-teachers, and there tried to interest certain school-teachers to accept the place of superintendent of the Washington schools, without any authority from the board of education. So he began to lay his plans to oust Thurston within six months after he became a member of the board of education.

Here is what Mr. Galliher said about him:

But it caused you to say that you could take care of yourself. How did you happen to say that?

Mr. GALLIHER. Let me go further now, leaving out that one little statement on his part. He said, "This attack of yours, Mr. Galliher, is so violent that I think I will report it to the appointing power."

So close was he to some of the District Supreme Court judges that when a controversy arose in the board he threatened to go to the judges and tell them about it; he wrote a letter when the reelection of Thurston came up in 1917—and that is according to the testimony of Dr. Van Schaick himself—saying that he told the judges all the facts connected with the reappointment of Thurston—working in connection with them, working in complete harmony with the District Commissioners.

Why, sir, when he left to go abroad in 1917, did he resign? No; but, according to his testimony, he wrote out his resignation, both on the Board of Charities and on the board of education, and he placed it in the hands of one of the commissioners of the District, and told him if he had to resign, then to send it in. Of course the commissioner never did present it and his resignation, so far as the committee knows, has been in his hands from that day up to this.

Mr. Oyster, president of the Board of Trade of Washington, a man who has served on the board of education for years, who stands as high as any citizen in Washington, says this about Dr. Van Schaick:

Senator HARRISON. What were his views three years ago?

Capt. Oyster did not want to state this particularly. We just had to corkscrew it out of him. We had to deal with him quite a while before we could extract an answer from him; but Capt. Oyster said finally:

Three years ago he called at my place, and I think he talked over what might be a change in the board and asked me if I would care to or would be willing to go back on the board.

That was one of his duties—to go around when there was likely to be a vacancy on the board and select whom he wanted, and then he would suggest it to the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. That is one of the reasons why the committee that investigated this matter thought it wise that the law should be changed and that this board should be abolished and that in the future the President should name a board, not so large as now composed, to be six in number, and that the Senate should hold the lever and have the power of rejection or confirmation.

Capt. Oyster said:

I told him that I did not care to, that I had given up about as much time to serving on the board of education as I could afford. I asked him what he was going to do with the superintendent and he said he was going to put him out. I said, "Why, he has been on probation but a short time." He said, "He has not handled the situation very satisfactorily but he has improved." I said, "Well, if he has improved and being a local man, a man that the people know, and the people would like to have Mr. Thurston as superintendent of the schools, the public wants him, why don't you think you ought to consider that?" His answer was, to the best of my recollection, "The public be damned."

This man of God, this preacher of Washington, this leader of a congregation, said, according to Mr. Oyster, "The public be damned."

I continue—

"Well," I said, "Doctor, that might sound all right coming from me, but from you, I am a little surprised." He said, "I have the courage of my convictions. I know what I am doing and I propose to exercise that right." I said, "Have you got the votes?" He said that he had. I said, "How many have you?" He said, "I have five."

He knew what he had, and what difference did it make to the people? What did he care for mass meetings petitioning the board to reelect Thurston? What did he care about the wishes of the school-teachers of the city of Washington about Thurston? He was a man of strong convictions. He had five, and he knew what he could do with them. He said, "The people be dammed." A little later, in speaking of the Parents' League, he was equally as emphatic in saying, "I will see them in hell before I accede to their wishes."

I shall not take up the time of the Senate further, because I have talked now longer than I had expected. But I wish I could read to you the testimony of Peyton, how Van Schaick approached him and made certain promises to him. I wish I could read you the testimony of Johnson, how these secret meetings were constantly being held.

On the question of the assumption of authority, I shall briefly state some of the things which he did. Immediately upon his election as president he moved his office and put it in the Franklin Building next to the superintendent's. He advocated Bruce sitting in the regular meetings of the board of education. He advised the committee which went into the investigation of Bruce just what to do. While the members of the board were permitted to attend the meetings of that committee and hear the evidence, Learned and Dr. Van Schaick refused to admit the superintendent of schools. If there was one man who should have been present at the hearing investigating the superintendent of the colored schools, it was the superintendent of schools, because it was he who was to make the recommendation for his removal, and it was his recommendation upon which he was appointed.

When it came time to suggest to the Congress the passage of a law increasing the pay of teachers Van Schaick went over the head of the superintendent and appointed the assistant superintendent of white schools and others to draft the bill for the consideration of Congress.

He constantly showed his partiality toward unions, as disclosed by the hearing. He projected himself into the Wood case, and used the power of his office and his great influence with the members of the board to prevent an appeal from the decision of the court. He projected himself into the Moens proposition by giving letters, without consultation with the superintendent of schools, so that Moens might visit the schools.

Here is what the assistant superintendent of schools said when the Wilkinson and the Newman letters were presented to Van Schaick: That Moens was taking pictures of the little children, telling them of the studio which was being operated by Moens; taking pictures in the nude of lewd and profligate women in the city of Washington. Wilkinson said this in his letter to Bruce of January 12, 1917, or immediately after, mind, you, before Van Schaick had written the second letter to Moens giving him entrée into the schools. Van Schaick got Moens, brought him to Bruce, and Bruce said this:

The president—

Meaning Van Schaick—

questioned Moens closely, had him demonstrate his procedure in inspecting pupils in a classroom at Magruder School, but finally sustained Moens on the grounds that his purposes were purely scientific, and that there was no evidence that he was taking nude pictures of school girls, or was acting without the knowledge and consent of the parents.

Senator HARRISON. How did he question him?

Mr. BRUCE. Dr. Van Schaick brought Mr. Moens to my office and suggested that Mr. Moens go to the nearest school—the Magruder School being the nearest to the Franklin—to demonstrate his method; and, in Dr. Van Schaick's car, Dr. Van Schaick, Mr. Moens, and I went to the Magruder School, where Mr. Moens looked at the hair, the eyes, and the complexions of some of the children.

Senator HARRISON. Was that in a big room where all the children were?

Mr. BRUCE. It was in one of the classrooms.

Senator HARRISON. Did you say Mr. Moens was taking pictures at the Smithsonian Institute?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes. The statement was not that he was taking pictures himself but that he was having pictures taken by a photographer at the Smithsonian Institute.

Senator HARRISON. What all did he do?

Mr. BRUCE. That was about all that I can recall.

Senator HARRISON. What did he say to you or what did you say to him?

Mr. BRUCE. I do not recall, except that we went to the classroom—I think it was Miss Syphax's classroom—and Mr. Moens, in a very respectful manner, looked at some of the children and asked questions. He suggested that this girl was of a German type and this other girl or boy of Indian extraction, and so on. It was harmless so far as it went, of course, in our presence.

Senator HARRISON. Well, let us get that in our minds clear. Dr. Van Schaick sought this interview with Moens, and this examination was held—as a result of the protest?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Senator HARRISON. How long was this after you received the protest?

Mr. BRUCE. I am not sure, but I think perhaps the next day.

Senator HARRISON. And this was after the superintendent, Mr. Thurston, had taken it up with Dr. Van Schaick, informing Dr. Van Schaick about this letter and this protest?

Mr. BRUCE. I presume so.

Senator HARRISON. Did the superintendent know that you and Moens and Dr. Van Schaick had gone down to this school?

Mr. BRUCE. I don't know definitely that he did.

Senator HARRISON. Before you went?

Mr. BRUCE. Not before, because Dr. Van Schaick came to the office with Moens and we went immediately.

Senator HARRISON. You don't know where Moens met Dr. Van Schaick?

Mr. BRUCE. I know nothing about that. I simply know he brought Mr. Moens into my office.

Senator HARRISON. Did Moens tell you that was how he was examining these children?

Mr. BRUCE. That was his statement, I think. He said, as I recall, that he had had photographs taken, but protested vigorously that he had ever had any photograph taken in the nude of a school child. I do not think he denied that for scientific purposes he had nude photographs of other persons.

Senator HARRISON. Did you read to him or to Dr. Van Schaick that letter you had received from Prof. Wilkinson?

Mr. BRUCE. I do not know whether Dr. Van Schaick did or not. I am sure I did not. I believe the letter was in the doctor's possession at the time.

Senator HARRISON. Did you inform him of the contents of that letter?

Mr. BRUCE. Dr. Van Schaick did.

Senator HARRISON. And he denied it?

Mr. BRUCE. He denied that he had ever had photographs taken of nude school girls. He denied it emphatically.

Senator HARRISON. After this visit you and the doctor had a talk about the propriety of allowing him to continue in the schools?

Mr. BRUCE. I think that as we came away Dr. Van Schaick expressed himself as feeling that there was nothing offensive in anything that Dr. Moens had done; and, as far as he could see, there being no protest on the part of any parent, there was no reason why he should not continue to visit the schools.

So it is that it was on the letters of Van Schaick, over the head of the superintendent of schools, that Moens entered the schools and took pictures of the children, and took at least one of the teachers and associated with her.

Yet a great cry goes up from Bruce, the assistant superintendent, and from Dr. Johnson and from Mrs. Cook about the colored people of Washington protesting against the action of the board in continuing to allow Charlotte Hunter to teach in the schools six months after this information had come to the attention of the board of education.

Why, sirs, if one of the white teachers in Washington had been connected and had associated with Moens as the facts reveal the relations between Moens and Charlotte Hunter, and the board had allowed her to continue to teach in the white schools of Washington, there would not only have been a mass meeting in one of the churches of the city, there would not only have been picketing at the school in which she was teaching, but the whole city would have risen and driven her and the board of education from their indefensible position. Ah! They may have gone further than that.

So I must close. I know not, I care not, what the board of education, or certain members of the board of education, think about the finding of the select committee touching the condition of the schools. Personally, I do not believe that the present superintendent ought to be fired. I believe, against the great obstacles that he has had to combat, under most abnormal conditions and circumstances that are inexcusable on the part of the board, or certain members of the board, he has performed his work wonderfully well. He is what we would call a young educator. I think he will develop as the years go on. The people of Washington, in my opinion, want him retained as superintendent. I believe he measures up to the requirements that are called for in the superintendency of the schools of Washington. The board of education, or certain members of it whom I have analyzed in this discussion, will perhaps not approve of the report; they will not applaud my utterances; they will not be appreciative of the consideration the committee has given this subject.

I care not for that. When I introduced this resolution months ago it was because I believed the public schools were in a deplorable condition. Others knew not, nor did I, what that condition was, but we have found the source of the trouble. We have found the true condition, in my opinion. A faction of the board is dominated by Van Schaick—ambitious, seeking political preferment, not satisfied unless he is the storm center of political strife, antagonistic to the superintendent. They embarrassed him, they overlapped his authority, they usurped his functions.

With such a condition as that prevailing there can not be harmony, there must necessarily be lack of cooperation, and the schools must suffer.

So your committee believes that the board should be gotten rid of, that a new mode of appointment should be adopted, and if this board, drunk with power, perhaps, should feel so aggrieved at our action and desire to flaunt back into our faces, and flaunt into the faces of the American Congress, the power which they still hold and which they will hold until Congress passes legislation amending the present law, they can repudiate our report to-morrow by saying, if they desire, "We do not respect their findings. We disregard their investigation, and we are going to fire Thurston out of the schools and elect another."

Then they can go ahead and elect another. But I can not believe that any member of the board could possibly take such a step as that. I can not believe that they would become so audacious that they would pursue such a policy as that. If they did, they would deserve the repudiation of Congress and of the self-respecting manhood and womanhood of the city of Washington. If they do that, I can not believe that the man whom they would elect could show such bad judgment and such little common sense that he would accept the position under the peculiar conditions prevailing here.

I hope that before the end of this session of Congress we can amend the laws so that we can take care of the situation; but if we can not and it must go over until the next session, it is to be hoped, as the committee have expressed in their report, that this board and the superintendent will work together in a spirit of harmony, with one desire and one ambition, and that is to serve the school children of the District and to better the school system of Washington. If that should be their desire and that policy should be pursued, the conditions will be very greatly improved. It is to be hoped that before Congress closes we can obtain an adequate appropriation to provide for a survey such as is desired by disinterested, outside persons, so that they can report back to Congress at the next session with reference to the condition of the schools here, how many buildings, what playgrounds, and other improvements are desired. It is believed we can greatly help in that way.

We provide in this proposed legislation for a business management to remove from the superintendent many of the arduous duties that have been thrust upon him because of the increased population and increasing delicate questions that demand his attention.

Mr. President, I have delayed the Senate much too long, but I have thought it necessary to give my reasons for signing the report. I have felt that we owed it to the people of the city that we should express candidly and fully and courageously what we conceived to be the true condition touching the schools here.

May I say, as I believe, that Dr. Van Schaick has shown by his temperamental moods, by his deportment, by his dominating disposition, that he is unfit to be a member of the board of education of the District, and that the same rule that guides me in that conclusion will guide me in casting my vote whenever we take up for consideration his confirmation as Commissioner of the District of Columbia. I shall vote against him, even though when I began this investigation I believed that I would vote for his confirmation.

Surely the doctor may now well exclaim, like the lone spirit in Manfred:

> I am the rider of the wind,
> The stirrer of the storm,
> The hurricane I left behind
> Is yet with lightning warm.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to go into a discussion of the report of the select committee appointed by the Senate to investigate the public-school system of the District. I am, however, especially interested in that portion of the report which recommends the approval of the recommendation adopted by the Congressional Joint Reclassification Commission relating to the salaries of the teachers in the District of Columbia. I feel it is due the Senate that some statement be made showing the facts upon which that commission based its recommendations.

There were a number of factors considered by the Reclassification Commission in the adjustment of salaries of teachers and school officials. The chief determining factors were:

1. A comparison of the salaries paid by a number of progressive cities of the eastern and middle western part of the country for the school year 1919–20.

Since the minimum and maximum salary was given the middle figure was taken in every instance in order to arrive at what the commission thought would be a fair salary to be recommended to the Congress.

On this basis the salaries recommended for elementary-school teachers are lower than those of New York City, higher than those of Chicago, Boston, Newark, and East Orange, N. J., and similar to those of Detroit. Similarly the scale recommended for high-school teachers is lower than that of Chicago and Newark, higher than that of Boston and Detroit, and similar to that of New York and East Orange.

For administrative officers the salaries recommended are generally lower than those of the cities under comparison. In view of the fact that salaries of teachers throughout the country are low, and that a general movement is now under way to increase salaries, it is possible that the recommended salaries may not for any considerable length of time attract and hold adequately qualified teachers.

2. A comparison with salaries recommended for other services requiring similar qualifications. On account of the longer vacation allowed the teaching force, the initial salary recommended for the several classes runs proportionately lower. In view of the exacting requirements and the nerve energy expended by conscientious teachers, it is a question whether they should not be entitled to this additional leave without reduction in compensation.

3. The teaching service should offer an opportunity for a career without change in duties. Unlike other services, there are few opportunities for advancement to positions of greater responsibility; that is, there are relatively few administrative positions in the service. Furthermore, it is the belief of the Reclassification Commission that it should not be necessary for a good teacher to accept administrative responsibility in order to obtain a higher salary, for such a practice may often result in the loss of good teachers and the gain of poor administrative officers.

Since it is expected that a teacher shall remain a teacher, and because teachers have common duties, they must be grouped into a general class and be provided with a correspondingly wider range of salaries than is customary in other services. The higher salaries in the range, therefore, should not be compared with those of the lower classes of other professional services, but with the associate or full professional classes. Such a comparison will indicate that teachers' salaries are relatively lower. Justification for such apparent discrimination, if justification is possible, may be looked for in (1) the salaries received by teachers in other cities and (2) the long summer vacation.

4. The salaries received at the present time in Washington influenced the commission to some extent. Such influence probably resulted in keeping the recommendations down to a level which may be regarded as just compensation for the teachers now in the service.

5. The recommendations of the board of education concerning salaries, and also those of the teachers themselves, exerted a limited influence in the proposed salary scale. An examination of the wage scale adopted by the commission will show that the proposed scale for both elementary and high school teachers is lower than that suggested by either the administration or the teachers.

Inasmuch as the commission was influenced to a considerable extent by the salaries paid in certain selected cities with which Washington might properly be compared, I have prepared a table showing the salaries paid in the key classes in the educational service. The cities selected were New York, Chicago, Boston, Newark, East Orange, and Detroit. For the sake of comparison, I have also listed the recommendations of the commission for the same classes. I ask that this be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Educational service key classes.

Title.	New York.		Chicago.		Boston.		Newark.		East Orange.		Detroit.		Recommendations of the commission.
	Minimum.	Maximum.	Minimum.	Maximum.	Minimum.	Maximum.	Minimum.	Maximum.	Minimum.	Maximum.	Minimum.	Maximum.	Minimum.	Maximum.

Principal elementary school	3,000	4,000	2,500	4,250	3,060	3,660	1,700	3,500	2,200	4,000	2,000	3,600	2,600	3,320
Principal high school	5,000	5,500	3,760	5,100	3,636	4,500	3,600	4,800	3,500	4,900	5,000	.....	3,600	4,500
Senior director manual training	4,000	5,000	4,000	5,000	3,420	3,780	.....	.....	2,500	3,600	2,500	4,000	2,500	3,220

Mr. HENDERSON. The table comprises only the so-called "key classes" in the teaching service. It was considered that if the salaries for key classes could once be established it would be relatively simple to apply this scale as a standard to other classes. For instance, if the rate for the principal of high schools were determined, the rate for the assistant principal, the heads of departments, and the head teachers would bear a very definite relationship to the salary of the principal. In the same way the determination of the rate for the high-school teacher would serve as a norm for setting up the salary range for the special teachers in the high school, such, for instance, as the teacher of manual training, military instructor, and so forth.

The policy of the commission was, therefore, to determine the key classes by reference to present salaries and to those paid on the outside and then to set up a salary range for other classes which might be referred to them. In this way the commission believed that uniform and equitable salaries might be secured.

Another feature that should be noted is the provision for annual increments from the minimum to the maximum salary. The steps between the minimum and the maximum are in some instances an increase of $100 per annum and in others $150 per annum until the maximum is reached. According to the recommendations of the commission, however, these increases are definitely not to be considered automatic, but, rather, to be determined by an increasing degree of efficiency as shown in the efficiency records of the teacher.

Mr. President, since the select committee has recommended the adoption of the report of the Congressional Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries as they relate to the teaching service, the Members of the Senate may be interested to refer to part 2, which contains the classification of positions and the schedules of compensation for the respective classes. On page 581 is found the classification of the educational service in the District of Columbia. I simply wish to call the attention of the Senators to the method defining duties, qualifications, and compensation. On page 597 is an illustration that bears on this discussion, to wit, a teacher in the elementary schools. We give there the specifications of the class, which include the duties under that head, together with the qualifications that an elementary teacher in the school is supposed to possess. Then following the qualifications come the principal lines of promotion and the compensation for the class.

At the bottom of that page it will be found that the annual minimum compensation for this class is $1,200 . Then come the annual increases in salary ranging from $1,200 to $2,100. The object of the series of steps is to hold out an inducement to the teacher to remain in the service. The turnover has been very great of late, and it seemed to our committee that it would be highly desirable to provide an increase of salary covering a number of years—in this case nine—in order that when a competent teacher is once obtained and is becoming trained in the service he may be interested to remain.

Mr. CURTIS obtained the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

NOMINATION OF REV. JOHN VAN SCHAICK, JR.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to give notice, on behalf of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that at the earliest practicable moment we shall urge that the Senate go into executive session for the purpose of considering the nomination sent to the Senate of Dr. Van Schaick to be a member of the Board of Commissioners of the District.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., Wednesday, May 26) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, May 27, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 26, 1920.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

With unfeigned love and pure devotion, our Father in heaven, we wait upon Thee for that holy influence ever emanating from Thy heart, to inspire, uphold, and sustain Thy children in every great thought and noble aspiration.

Be with us this day and uphold, sustain, and guide us in all our acts, that we may inherit the well done good and faithful servant. Under the spiritual guidance of the world's Great Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS TO THE WOODEN-SHIP BUILDERS.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Clerk called the roll, and when the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries was reached:

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 3451, on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up the bill S. 3451, on the Union Calendar. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GARD. I think the bill ought to be read. It is short.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 3451. An act authorizing and directing the United States Shipping Board to adjust and pay the claims of wooden-ship builders arising out of the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Shipping Board be, and it is hereby, authorized to adjust, liquidate, and pay the claims of individuals, firms, or corporations who built or contracted to build wooden ships for the United States, the United States Shipping Board, or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation after April 6, 1917, which can not be paid under the law as it now is, and said board shall adjust and liquidate each claim upon such terms as it shall determine from the facts in the case to be just and equitable, and its decision shall be deemed conclusive and final, except as herein otherwise provided: Provided, That no claim shall be liquidated or paid unless it is alleged and found to be based upon a request or demand of the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or any officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board and corporation, or either of them: Provided further, That said board shall consider, approve, and dispose of only such claims as shall be made hereunder and filed with the board within three months from and after the date when this act shall become a law: Provided further, That no claims shall be allowed and paid by said board unless it shall appear to its satisfaction that the expenditures made or obligations incurred by the claimant were made in good faith and upon assurances by the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or any officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board and corporation, or either of them, that reimbursement would be provided for in money or contracts for additional work: And provided further, That no claim shall be paid unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said board that moneys were invested or obligations incurred subsequent to April 6, 1917, and prior to November 12, 1918, in a proper and legitimate attempt to produce ships for the needs of the Nation in connection with the prosecution of the war; and that no profits of any kind shall be included in the allowance of any of said claims, and that no investment for merely speculative purposes shall be recognized in any manner by said board: And provided also, That the settlement of any claim arising under the provisions of this section shall not bar the United States Government, through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement, nor the right of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to recover any money paid by the Government to any party under and by virtue of the provisions of this section, if the Government has been defrauded; and the right of recovery in all such cases shall extend to the executors, administrators, heirs, and assigns of any party.

SEC. 2. That a report of all operations under this section, including receipts and disbursements, shall be made to Congress on or before the first Monday in December of each year: Provided, That in the event any claimant shall be dissatisfied with any allowance or award made by said board pursuant hereto, such claimant may appeal therefrom with respect thereto to the Court of Claims, which is hereby given jurisdiction to make such allowances and awards, in the case of such appeals, as it may deem just and equitable.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this section shall be construed to confer jurisdiction upon any court to entertain a suit against the United States: Provided, That in determining the net losses of any claimant the Shipping Board shall, among other things, take into consideration and charge to the claimant the then market value of any such plants or the lumber or materials on hand belonging to the claimant and acquired to be used in the construction of any wooden-ship building plant, and also the salvage or usable value of any machinery or other appliances which may be claimed was purchased to equip any wooden-ship building plant, for the purpose of complying with the request or demand of the agencies of the Government above mentioned in the manner aforesaid: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be held or construed to delay or excuse prompt settlement of any claims that can be settled under existing law.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the United States Shipping Board be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, adjust, liquidate, and pay the claims of individuals, firms, or corporations who built or contracted to build wooden ships for the United States, the United States Shipping Board, or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation after April 6, 1917; and said board shall adjust and liquidate each claim upon such terms as it shall determine from the facts in the case to be just and equitable, and may take into consideration, among other things, the conditions under which the contracts were entered into and the conditions under which the work was performed; and its decision shall be deemed conclusive and final, except as herein otherwise provided: Provided, That no claim shall be liquidated or paid unless it is alleged and found to be based upon a request or demand of the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or some officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board or corporation, or either of them: Provided further, That no claim shall be liquidated or paid unless it is alleged such claims as shall be made hereunder and filed with the board within three months from and after the date when this act shall become a law; And provided further, That no claims shall be allowed and paid by said board unless it shall appear to its satisfaction that the expenditures made or obligations incurred by the claimant were made in good faith and upon assurances by the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or some officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board or corporation, or either of them, that reimbursement would be provided for in money or contracts for additional work: And provided further, That no such claim shall be paid unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said board that moneys were invested or obligations incurred subsequent to April 6, 1917, in a proper and legitimate attempt to produce ships for the needs of the Nation in connection with the prosecution of the war; and that no profits of any kind shall be included in the allowance of any of such claims, except upon completed ships or on ships partly constructed: Provided, That on ships partly constructed only such profits may be allowed on that part of the work of construction actually done at the time of the cancellation of contracts, or on work done thereafter on ships not canceled, as in the judgment of the Shipping Board are warranted by all the facts in the case; and that no investment for merely speculative purposes, or where under the facts it could not have been reasonably expected that ships would be built, shall be recognized in any manner by said board: And provided further, That the settlement of any claim arising under the provisions of this section shall not bar the United States Government, through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement, nor the right of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to recover any money paid by the Government to any party under and by virtue of the provisions of this section, if such settlement is affected by fraud or mistake of fact; and the right of recovery in all such cases shall extend against the executors, administrators, trustees in bankruptcy, heirs, assigns, and successors, whether by operation of law, consolidation, sale, or otherwise of any claimant or claimants.

"A report of all proceedings under this section, including receipts and disbursements, shall be made to the Congress on the first Monday in December of each year.

"SEC. 2. That whenever the amount found to be due any claimant under the provisions of this act shall be unsatisfactory to the claimant, the claimant, within 90 days after the making of any such allowance or award, shall be entitled to reject such award and sue the United States to recover such sum as may be justly due under the terms and provisions of this act in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code, and the amount so determined by said court shall be paid by the United States Shipping Board in the same manner as awards made by the said board under section 1 of this act.

"SEC. 3. That in determining the amount due any claimant the Shipping Board shall, among other things, take into consideration and charge to the claimant the then market value of any shipbuilding plant, lumber, or materials on hand belonging to the claimant used in the construction or acquired to be used in the construction of any wooden ship or shipbuilding plant, and also the salvage or usable value of any machinery or other appliances which were purchased to equip any wooden ship or shipbuilding plant."

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this bill which is brought before you to-day for consideration——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I want to find out about the time.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two hours of debate.

Mr. BLANTON. Who is to control the time?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The ranking member on the minority side and myself.

Mr. BLANTON. We ought to have some understanding about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any member of the committee opposed to the bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I am opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time will be controlled, then, one half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] and the other half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The senior minority member is the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HARDY. I suppose he will be here. The bill was reported, as I supposed, unanimously.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The gentleman is in error about that. I opposed the bill, but, of course, if Judge HARDY or any senior member of the minority desires to control the time on this side he will be entitled to it if he is here to claim that right.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have no objection to Mr. DAVIS controlling the time in opposition. Mr. Chairman, this bill was made necessary because it was found that the Shipping Board had not sufficient authority to settle the claims of wooden-ship builders, who claimed that they were entitled to remuneration because of their being deprived of the opportunity to complete the contracts that had been awarded to them by the Shipping Board.

Before the war broke out we had no shipbuilders practically in this country and very few private shipyards. The shipping act provided for the construction of vessels, and when the war broke out provision was made to construct these vessels for use during the war and also to use for the purpose of building up a merchant marine.

A large number of wooden-ship yards were created, because it was thought that they could build ships much more readily than to postpone construction, with the delay that might ensue if it became necessary to provide contracts and complete plans for construction of vessels of iron and steel, and it was believed that wooden ships were very much in demand and could be more readily constructed. A great number of shipyards were distributed through the Southern States, where there was an ample amount of timber suitable for the construction of wooden vessels, and a number on the eastern coasts, where was located the former shipbuilding plants, in order that they might rush the work of building these ships for use either in the war or in peace.

It was necessary, of course, to instruct a great many people in the construction of ships.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood the gentleman to give only two locations where these shipyards were located—in the South and in the East. Were there not some in the West, in Washington?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes; but there was no great amount of shipbuilding in this country until the war seemed imminent. On the western coast, where there were also an abundance of timber and some experienced shipbuilders, contracts were entered into for the construction of wooden ships. When the armistice was signed work was stopped under orders from the Shipping Board. Men who had contracts were told that they must cease work upon the contracts. Shortly afterwards I understood they were told to go ahead and complete contracts that were incomplete. The contractors went to work again, and after a short time they were suddenly stopped, because they were informed that no more wooden ships would be needed, and then the claims for damages began to arise.

In some cases these claims were settled by the Shipping Board, they supposing that as they had authority to make the contracts they had the authority to adjust the claims. Some 70 claims were adjusted, and then on examination into the matter they found that they had not the authority to settle these cases. Consequently the representatives of the Shipping Board came to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the House and to the Commerce Committee of the Senate and sought to provide some law by which these cases could be heard or to provide some law by which they would have authority to act in the settlement or adjustment of the pending claims.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. In many cases the ships were partially constructed and in a great many other cases timber was ordered and assembled at the plant for the fabrication of the ships according to the type.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes; according to the contracts made by the Shipping Board.

Mr. MILLER. According to the peculiar type of the vessel which the Shipping Board had adopted.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes; and the funds that the Shipping Board had at their control were used in the construction of these ships. Then when they came to adjust the claims for these uncompleted ships and ships that had not been begun, it was found that they did not have authority under the law to adjust these claims.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I have been so busy with other matters that I have not had time to read the bill. I see that it is a Senate bill.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It is a Senate bill, but we struck out all after the enacting clause and proceeded to construct a bill embodying the views of the committee, presenting the bill which is now under consideration.

Mr. CANNON. There is so much to know about unscrambling eggs to meet our legal obligations that I think no single Member of Congress can get outside of all of it, and frankly I am not outside of this.

I would like to ask the gentleman, did the Shipping Board have statutory authority to build these ships?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. They did.

Mr. CANNON. There is no question raised about that?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Not at all.

Mr. CANNON. And they made the contracts which were made, hastily, of course——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. But legally made?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Legally made; but they were made hastily, with incomplete plans, and sometimes they changed the plans. They had plans completed and after they made the contract they changed their ideas relative to the construction of the ships. Of course, it was practically beginning a new business when we commenced to do shipbuilding under Government control.

Mr. CANNON. Well, at any time in the execution of these contracts, which the gentleman says were legal, did the Shipping Board exceed their statutory authority?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Why, I do not think they did, unless they did it in the adjustment of some 70 accounts.

Mr. CANNON. I am not speaking of adjustments. I have just hastily hop-skipped in reading this bill——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. No; there was full authority given them under the bill to construct ships which was enacted into law by the Congress, and the cry was from all over the country, "Build ships! Build ships!" because everybody believed that ships were a necessity.

Mr. CANNON. Have these claims that were adjusted been paid?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I can not tell the gentleman about that. I presume they were paid. They had the funds and they believed they had the jurisdiction to carry out to completion.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman any information as to the amount they adjusted? Mr. Alexander was the chairman of the committee at that time and I was at that time a minority member of the committee.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Well, if the gentleman wants the amount covered by this bill——

Mr. CANNON. I see about $15,000,000 is the probable amount that this bill would authorize.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And how much has been paid, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The money provided for the Shipping Board was provided in bills prepared by the Committee on Appropriations. All contracts were canceled, and work was stopped on the partially completed ships, and the amount claimed to have been saved to the United States by this change in policy was estimated to be between $125,000,000 and $130,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I do not think any estimate of that expense was given, but the fact was that it was discovered that the Shipping Board has been adjusting some accounts and that they had not authority, and so they came to the committees of the Senate and House for authority to make final adjustments.

Mr. CANNON. An inquiry from the Shipping Board or the Treasury would develop how much has been paid?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I think so.

Mr. CANNON. Without authority; but they believed they had the authority?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. They believed they had the authority.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, perhaps I can say to my colleague from Illinois, if I may, that these settlements were made by the Shipping Board until Judge Payne, of Chicago, became the head of the Shipping Board. He viewed the matter from a strictly legal standpoint and made the point that there was some question about the authority of the board to go ahead and make these settlements without specific authority from Congress, and he stated to the committee in the hearings very frankly, as I recall, that he thought it better not to continue to make settlements but to go to Congress for authority rather than to continue making them.

Mr. CANNON. What amount was settled and paid? Has the gentleman any information about that?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. My recollection is 70 claims or thereabouts were adjusted, and none of them for a very large amount.

Mr. CANNON. There are some figures in the report that $15,000,000 would probably——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. That was the estimate of the Shipping Board, as I understand.

Mr. CANNON. That is the estimate of the Shipping Board?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman will permit—from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It may run to $25,000,000. I would not be surprised if it should so appear.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Do I understand that is the estimate of the Shipping Board?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I understood so; yes. That is what they thought would be expended under the bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I understood they declined to make any estimate but thought——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Not exactly an estimate.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Fahey gave that as an estimate but Mr.——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Fahey would not be likely to make any larger estimate than he believed necessary to adjust these claims.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will permit, I think the figure of the estimate of Mr. Fahey was $17,000,000.

Mr. MILLER. The money is available. There is no question about the Shipping Board having it available.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. They have the funds on hand.

Mr. MILLER. And the question is the legal authority to use it?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. They have the funds and there will be no money called from the Treasury. There is money in the Treasury to the credit of the Shipping Board that will pay all the bills coming from this bill and there will be no need of an appropriation from the Treasury to meet the probable requirements under the bill.

Mr. BEE. If the gentleman will yield, the effect of this bill will be to confer upon the department the legal authority to settle these just claims wherein they are just, and the money is now available; that is all.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. That is it exactly.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that the chairman of the Shipping Board, who caused the change of policy with reference to the settlement of these claims, after he had stopped settling upon the basis which had formerly been used, was willing to go ahead and resume settlement provided he could get a resolution from the two committees of the House and Senate?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. Did not he ask——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. He may have asked them first to pass a resolution, but the committee did not think they should do that.

Mr. WALSH. But if he got a resolution, he intended to resume settlement?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. He might have believed that would throw the responsibility on Congress, but I did not think the committee thought that it would require congressional action. Of course, this matter has been lying quiet awhile, because I have not had the opportunity to call this bill up by reason of delay from time to time. If there are any other questions, I shall be glad to answer them now or at any time. If not, I shall ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he would like to occupy any time now?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SCOTT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13416) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, and had appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. NEW, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and Mr. THOMAS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4411. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Pembina, N. Dak., and Kittson, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.;

S. 4427. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Columbus, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Chattahoochee River;

S. 4431. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Rock River in Lee County, Ill., at or near the city of Dixon, in said county; and

S. 4402. An act granting the consent of Congress to Troup County, Ga., and Chambers County, Ala., to construct a bridge across the Chattahoochee River on the boundary line between the said States.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS TO THE WOODEN-SHIP BUILDERS.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for one hour.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves 45 minutes of his time.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I regret exceedingly that I am unable to agree with my colleagues on the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which reported out this bill. I have the very highest regard and most profound respect for each and every one of them. I accord each and every one of them entire honesty of purpose, and I have worried considerably over this matter in an effort to so become reconciled to the bill that I would not feel impelled to oppose it. But after studying it assiduously, and having read and reread the hearings, and having considered it from every standpoint, I can not do otherwise than to enter my feeble protest against the passage of the bill, especially in its present form, even though in so doing I go counter to the views of all my colleagues on the committee. I do not delude myself into the belief that I will be able to prevent its passage. But I deem it my duty to express my views, feeble though they may be, with regard to this measure.

It is an extraordinary bill in that it provides for the payment of the public money, not in accordance with contracts either express or implied, but it is designed to allow the payment of the public money beyond any contracts or legal obligations. In other words, this bill proposes a payment of a vast sum of money which these contractors could not possibly recover in any court of the land.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then the gentleman would take the same view with reference to other bills which have become laws and which have been passed by this and the preceding Congress, where equitable claims which could not be enforced in the courts of the land have been recognized and ordered paid? Is not that so?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not consider that this bill is analogous to the bills the gentleman refers to. For instance, you take the Dent bill, to which I presume you refer, and how does that read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis—

And so forth.

That bill was predicated directly upon an agreement, and it was simply a recognition of what might be proven to have been oral contracts. But the bill now in question goes beyond that. It is admitted that the Shipping Board has been willing, and is now willing, to settle all of those claims according to the legal rights of the parties involved.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The language quoted from the bill referred to is "any agreement, express or implied." That certainly implies they were not settling those claims by written agreement, does it not, but they were going outside?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I say the purpose of the Dent bill was to recognize oral contracts.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. And also agreements expressed or implied. It was to recognize equitable claims, was it not?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In a sense, when based upon an implied contract, and yet I insist that the bill under consideration goes beyond that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will my colleague from Tennessee yield for a brief question in that connection?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I call the gentleman's attention to the following language in the pending bill, in connection with the gentleman's argument:

That the United States Shipping Board be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, adjust, liquidate, and pay the claims of individuals, firms, or corporations who built or contracted to build wooden ships for the United States—

And so forth; limiting the adjustment of either to the work that was actually done by these parties or which was contracted to be done under the authority of the Shipping Board.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not understand that the primary purpose of this bill is in order that the Government will be authorized to pay these contractors for their shipyards?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think so, yes; under proper limitations and construction of——

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to be permitted to make a statement before I yield further.

Now, on that question, Judge Payne was the chairman of this Shipping Board, and he testified before both the Senate and the House committees in regard to the purposes of the bill, and the controversy between the contractors and the Government through the Shipping Board. I presume that it is conceded that he is good authority, and I do not think his statement will be controverted. Now, here is what he says about it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Where is that?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I read from page 5 of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BEE. Whose testimony?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. John Barton Payne's. He was chairman of the Shipping Board. He says:

The question, therefore, which presents itself to us as to the payment of damages, or compensation, divides itself into three classes—all of these gentlemen having contracts which fixed a definite contract price—

First is the question of work they have done and the material they have furnished.

Second, the legal damages which result under the contract on account of cancellation of the contract.

As to those two questions, there is no legal difficulty. It is simply a question of agreeing between the shipbuilders and the Shipping Board on the amount to be paid.

The controversial question is the third, and that is the payment to them of a sum of money which would make them whole by the Government's absorbing the cost of their yards. As to that, it has seemed to me that we had no right to deal with it; that was a matter which Congress alone had the power to arrange; that the Shipping Board was limited as a matter of law to the legal damages which grew out of the cancellation of the contracts.

Again, on pages 64 and 65 of the House hearings Judge Payne says:

The principle, I thought, was quite simple, that after paying the man for work under the contract for all work and materials furnished then we got to the question of the damages growing out of the cancellation of the contract. Now, those damages, it seems to me, were to be determined by the rules of law applicable to contracts, and that that did not embrace these general claims which are illustrated by the word "amortization"; in other words, to give to them the cost of their yards. In that is where I think the line must be drawn.

In discussing this question before the Committee on Commerce, as recorded on page 12 of the hearings, Judge Payne again said:

Senator KIRBY. When Judge Payne continues his testimony I would like it to appear whether only such men as those who had contracts or thought they had contracts with some such provision as that in them are making claims against the Government for compensation which this bill is expected to give them a remedy for?

Mr. PAYNE. No, Senator; that is not the question, as I see it, at all. The point made by Mr. Fahey is—well, the point mentioned by him as to the district managers, as I understand it, involves the carrying out of the made contract.

Senator KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. That did not involve original commitments by the Shipping Board to the shipbuilder. The point you are concerned in is that men are to get something to make them whole, which is not covered by any form of contract, written or otherwise, but was due to their enthusiasm in going forward and incurring a larger investment than the contract warranted.

On page 35 of the House hearings Mr. Fahey, who took a more active interest before the committees than any other representative of the contractors, concedes that the Shipping Board was willing to settle with them according to the legal rights of the contractors and of the Government, and, as has already been stated by the chairman of the committee, there have been some 70 contractors, I believe, who have already been settled with.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield right there?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. For a question.

Mr. BEE. Is it not true that up to the time that Mr. Payne came upon the board the claims were being settled; that the reason for this resolution now is because Mr. Payne thinks Congress ought to give the authority before they go ahead, and not because of any objection on his part?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It is a fact that there was some controversy between Judge Payne and other members of the board as to whether or not the board should settle according to contract and legal rights or whether they should just go along and settle without regard to contractual and legal rights. I think that all the lawyers on the committee which reported out the pending bill agree that Judge Payne was correct in his construction and contention. Judge Payne is a very able lawyer. Some of the members on the Shipping Board were not lawyers.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right at that point?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. As I understand it, as Judge Payne presented it, it was that under the law as it existed he doubted if the board had authority to deal justly under this third provision. He said the third question was, as read by the gentleman a moment ago, to make them whole by the Government absorbing the cost of their yards: "As to that it has seemed to me that we had no right to deal with it." The chairman of the Shipping Board thought that involved a function and a power that the board was not clothed with, and that that was a matter necessarily for Congress.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; and he declined to advise the committee as to what action they should take in that regard, as I remember.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Unquestionably the chairman of the Shipping Board said, "Gentlemen, that is a question of equity that addresses itself to Congress, and as an official of the Shipping Board I do not wish to advise."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The question with Judge Payne, then, was a lack of authority?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The lack of authority, under the law, to pass upon the question.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. A good deal has been said, and no doubt will be said, about the patriotism of these contractors, that they threw themselves into the breach through patriotic motives, and all that sort of business.

Judge Payne said in his testimony—I can not turn to it right now—that the Shipping Board was besieged with these contractors wanting these contracts, and a controversy arose, as many of you remember, as to whether we should enter upon the wooden-ship building program. As you will remember, there was a very considerable difference of opinion between Gen. Goethals and Mr. Denman. Mr. Payne states, and it is otherwise shown, that during that time these wooden-ship contractors and prospective contractors did a great deal of lobbying in an effort to get this Government to engage in this program which had been proposed, and I have been told by numerous Members of Congress that they were from time to time besieged by these would-be contractors from their districts, who were asking them to get some of these contracts for them. Be that as it may, I believe that we, as representatives of the people, ought to deal with the public money just as we deal with our own money or as if we were an attorney representing a client. I believe that we should be just to the taxpayers before we are generous to these contractors, or any class of citizens, especially when our Government is deeply in debt, is facing a large deficit, and the people are groaning under the burdens of taxation. Are you never going to halt this mad, wild orgy of squandering the people's money? Can not we pause for a moment and think of the folks back home, who pay all these enormous appropriations, and whom we are supposed to represent?

These contractors undoubtedly entered into these contracts with a view to making money, which was all right. I am not criticizing them one particle for that. It is undoubtedly true that many of them came out "in the hole," to use a slang expression, and that was largely due to the fact that the war ended before anybody expected that it would end. That is true. We all concede that.

Now, what is the basis of this bill? What is the gist of the proposition? It is simply this: The Government entered into contracts with these various contractors for a specific number of ships to be constructed, 2 or 4 or 6 or 8 or 10, as the case might be. They never entered into a contract for more than 10 at a time.

Some of the contractors with whom these contracts were made already had their shipyards. Others did not have them, and, of course, had to construct them. These contracts were all written. There were two classes. One class was what was known as the lump-sum contract. That was the first kind, and it soon developed that both the Government and the contractors had underestimated the probable cost, and the Government generously and magnanimously relieved all of them from those contracts who asked to be relieved.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield for a question.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman just said that some of the contractors had shipyards and others did not have shipyards.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman will recall that in some cases the Government advanced the money for the establishment and building of the shipyards to the contractors, and in other cases the contractors themselves advanced the money?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman think it is fair that the men who themselves advanced the money for the shipyards should be put in a less advantageous position than those who were forehanded enough to get the money in advance from the Government?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not think any difficulty has resulted from that situation. It is immaterial as to where they got the money, whether they had it or borrowed it from a bank or from the Government.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The Government is not recovering any of the money advanced for the building of those ways.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not know about that. I think it should, where it is possible to do so.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It was done under the contract which the Government has made, that the Government would advance the money.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Certainly; and in that manner the Government not only made a contract under which the contractors expected to make a profit but advanced to them money with which to operate, and I think that was a favor rather than doing them an injury.

There was another class of contracts known as the cost-plus contract, in which it was provided that they were to make $15,000 profit on each ship, and they were settled with on that basis wherever they had completed the ships and where they had partly completed them and were willing to settle on that basis when there had been a cancellation of the contract. In that class of contracts it was expressly provided that a portion of that would be net profit and a portion of it should go into the amortization of the shipways and plants. It was taken into consideration in that way.

Whenever they went along and completed the ships the Government settled with them without question, and they were generally given other contracts where they were able to take care of them. It went on in that way until the war terminated, and then the Government began canceling these contracts.

I heartily approve of the Government settling with all of them according to their legal rights, giving them all the damages to which they would be entitled in any court in case of cancellation of contracts, and, as I have before shown, there is not any difficulty in cases of that kind. They have already been settling them in that way and are still willing to settle them in that way. These contracts, most of them at least, made no provision whatever for the Government paying for these plants in which the ships were to be constructed and were constructed.

These men say they were given assurances by Tom, Dick, and Harry, connected with the Shipping Board, that they would be given more contracts and more contracts and sufficient contracts so that they would come out all right; but the fact remains that the Government cautiously and properly only made contracts for a certain number of ships at a time, and though some of these men constructed enough ships to come out all right, others practically had not constructed any. But the point I am making is that when they had entered into that proposition, when they entered into those contracts, they took their chances. Their case is just like that of any other contractor who contracts to construct a building, or a ship, or anything else. He takes his chances on unforeseen circumstances. These contractors knew just as well as the Government knew as to when this war would terminate. They knew that these wooden ships were being constructed solely because of the emergency and were useful for war purposes only. They did not have any right to depend upon any belief or general vague assurance from anybody that the war would continue, or that the Government would continue to give them contracts.

Mr. BEE. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman from Tennessee unduly, but will the gentleman yield and let me ask him a question to see if I understand this thing?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BEE. I understand that 70 contracts had been settled before Judge Payne raised the objection by the Shipping Board. Is that correct?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No; all of those were not settled before then.

Mr. BEE. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] to say that prior to the time Judge Payne raised the question of the legal authority to act about 70 contracts had been settled.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I understand that some of them have been settled on up until comparatively recently, and I think Judge Payne mentioned the fact that——

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will have to decline to yield, because my time is fast flying. On that point, Mr. Stevens, vice chairman of the board, said that there is no record of any authority having been given by the Shipping Board, or of anybody having been authorized to tell these different contractors that they would be given more contracts than were actually given them in writing.

There is one other matter to which I wish to call your attention before I take my seat, and that is the question as to what it will cost the Government if we pass this bill. Our chairman referred to that matter. I think the hearings will show that the members of the board expressly declined to give any opinion, because they said they did not know, and nobody else knows; but here is some testimony on the subject. Mr. Fahey was before the committee, and Mr. EDMONDS, a member of the committee, asked him this question:

> You think that $25,000,000 as an outside would pay for all these plants and pay all we need to pay? Would we be fair to say on the floor that we know it will not exceed between $15,000,000 and $25,000,000—it will not exceed that?

Mr. Fahey—he was one of the contractors—replied:

> If you ask me, I would say "yes." Now, that information is based on what I know of the settlements that have been made, and what the people in Philadelphia say out of their experience.

Then, Mr. E. W. Wright, who was another contractor there before the committee urging the passage of this bill, spoke up and said:

> I do not think $15,000,000 will come anywhere near it. I do not think $15,000,000 will pay the northwest claims.

No man knows what this is going to cost the Government.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it not a fact that Mr. Fahey appeared for all of these claims, while Mr. Wright was there only for himself?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not know as to that, but Mr. Wright was from the Northwest, and I presume he would not have made such a statement contrary to his own interest, if there had not been some basis for it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Wright, representing a certain section, thought that $15,000,000 would not cover the claims of that section?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And that was only a small part of the total claims?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And the other gentlemen were trying to get a bill passed?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; and showed very great interest in getting it passed, all the way through.

Now, gentlemen, as I say, I think we are making a mistake, and I hope to have time to discuss some of the features of the bill under the five-minute rule. Even granting that the principle is correct, and that we ought to embark upon this proposition, I do not think that the bill sufficiently protects the interests of the Government, and I shall refer to that possibly and offer some amendments later on. But one thing is certain, that there is not even any provision for the Government to be represented by counsel in these claims, and we may rest assured that the contractors will be well represented in that regard. They are given the right to go into court and sue if they are dissatisfied with the findings of the Shipping Board, and yet this bill refuses to grant any appeal to the Government in the event that it should be dissatisfied with an award made by the board. And there are numerous other features of the bill which I think do not afford sufficient protection to the interests of the Government.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Senate bill, which passed the Senate, seems to have some provisions in it endeavoring to guard the interests of the Government. I notice that the House committee proposes to strike out all of the Senate bill and to insert a House amendment which it seems to me does not have any provisions guarding the interests of the Government. Will the gentleman give his viewpoint as to the difference between the Senate bill and the House bill, very briefly?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I think the conclusion stated by the gentleman from Illinois is largely correct. In some particulars, I think, the House bill is an improvement on the Senate bill. In other respects I think it is just the reverse, and as stated by the gentleman, I think some provisions that were embodied in the Senate bill have been eliminated from the bill as now reported.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 28 minutes and has 32 minutes remaining.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman from Massachusetts like to have me use some more of my time, or would he like to yield some time?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. If the gentleman would like to use some more time now, he can do so.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS].

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, in the first place I desire to call the attention of the committee to the amount of money involved in the settlement of these claims.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. CULLEN. Will not the gentleman kindly explain to the House the purpose of the bill? I think if the Members understand thoroughly what the purpose of the bill is they will agree with the proposition in the final analysis.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will do that.

Mr. CULLEN. This bill is simply an honest bill to allow the Shipping Board in their discretion to adjust these claims. I would like to have the gentleman explain that to the House.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I want first to call the attention of the committee to the amount of money involved and how it is divided up. As Judge DAVIS has explained, there are two or three different kinds of claims against the Shipping Board. I think he mentioned three of them. Two of them can be settled to-day by the Shipping Board under the present law. The amount involved was stated before the Committee on Appropriations, in the sundry civil appropriation bill for 1920, to be $69,000,000. This undoubtedly included the amount to be paid in reimbursement for building shipyards. The probabilities are that they can settle to-day under this $40,000,000 of these claims, and will have to settle them legally. The only thing in controversy is, are you going to pay the original investment made by these men in shipyards, on account of not giving them the amount of business you originally promised to give them? The amount of money involved in the cancellation of the wooden ships was $193,000,000. It was considered good policy by the Shipping Board to cancel these contracts.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Not now. It was considered good policy to cancel these contracts for $193,000,000, even if it did cost $69,000,000 to do so, and I agree with them, because you know and I know that the wooden ships have not been successful. Every ship that we sell to-day we sell at a great loss. Their performance has not been good. You who were here when the war started will remember that we wanted ships, that there was a great controversy between Mr. Denman and Mr. Goethals and a few others in the Shipping Board as to whether they would build wooden ships or steel ships. It was afterwards decided that we needed both kinds, and the Shipping Board went ahead and made contracts for both kinds of ships. They made contracts with such existent wooden yards as there were. They also made contracts with different groups of citizens at advantageous points, where there was lumber or material with which to build the ships.

Mr. CLEARY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. CLEARY. And is it not also a fact that in places where there never was a shipyard, where there was no lumber, people did start the building of ships, such as on Long Island and away up the Hudson River?

Mr. EDMONDS. There is no question about that.

Mr. CLEARY. And they went to great expense and accumulated plants that they never could use.

Mr. EDMONDS. There is no question about that. The Shipping Board then sent out representatives to different sections of the country. These men gathered together in the different cities groups of citizens, in a great many cases men who did not know anything about shipbuilding. There may have been a promoter in between, I do not know; there may have been some man who did know how to build ships, who was a ship engineer, or who had some idea of how to build wooden ships, who came down here and said to the Shipping Board, "I will go and get a group of citizens in Richmond, Va.," as was done, or in Seattle, and so forth. Mr. Brent, I think, of the Shipping Board, personally went before the Richmond people and asked them to go ahead and build the ships, stating that it was their patriotic duty to build these ships; that the Government must have them. The result of that operation was that there were 77 wooden shipyards with 336 ways built, or already constructed, and 18 wooden tug yards with 84 ways and 9 wooden barge yards with 22 ways. These men went ahead and built under the promise—under the statement; it was not a promise, because it is not binding—from the Shipping Board that sufficient contracts would be made with them to cover the original investment. It is an implied promise by an official of the Government. It seemed to me that while it might not look advisable at the present time, yet at the same time it is reasonable to suppose that men would act in that manner when they needed ships so badly. These men invested their money. They built the shipyards. They were given a contract, in most cases, for four ships, with a promise that if they were sufficiently expeditious in building those four ships they would get four more, and so on until they got enough ships to make the operation pay. The salaries were all paid by the Government, of course, in most of these yards and all expenses were paid by the Government. It was simply another case of know how, the same as in Hog Island. These men who made the investment did not know how.

Mr. OLIVER. Were these contracts in writing or oral?

Mr. EDMONDS. Most of them were oral contracts.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Is not this the situation, that the Shipping Board settled about 70 of these cases until Mr. Payne came upon the board? When Mr. Payne came upon the board he doubted the legal authority of the Shipping Board to proceed, but not the justice of the claims, and he suggested that Congress give them the authority to do with the rest of the contracts as had been done with the other 70.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Hurley originated the plan for settling these shipbuilding contracts, and Mr. Payne continued it until October. In October Mr. Payne doubted his authority to settle these contracts—not the portion of the contract that was legal, which Judge DAVIS called attention to, but the question of the claim that was made by these men for an entire return of the capital invested.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. On page 2 of the report it is stated how this matter started with the shipbuilders. Would the gentleman tell the committee whether or not the shipbuilders entered into a written contract with these various boards before they proceeded to build these wooden ships?

Mr. EDMONDS. In some cases the yards were started and were proceeding for some time before the contracts were closed, but eventually they all closed the contracts.

Mr. RAKER. In practically every case?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think in every case. I do not know any that that is not true of. I think there was no yard that did not have a contract.

Mr. SNELL. How many more claims are there against the Government?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think probably there will be 70 or 80 more claims.

Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield further.

Mr. RAKER. Just one more question of the gentleman. Let me finish this line of inquiry.

Mr. EDMONDS. Go ahead.

Mr. RAKER. These requests or demands suggested in the bill, line 8, page 5, are such that where these various authorities went out to these men and told them they wanted them to go to this work and they did, those are cases in addition to where there was a special contract made which the gentleman intends to cover in this bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; that is right. Now, in answer to the appeal from the Government there were 12 yards started in the New England district; 14 yards in the northern Atlantic district; 13 yards in the middle Atlantic district, that is, around Chesapeake Bay; 9 yards in the southern district, around Florida; 10 yards in the Gulf district; 7 yards in the western Gulf district; 8 yards in the southern Pacific district; 13 yards in the northern Pacific district; 11 in the Oregon district; and 7 in the Great Lakes district. You see they are distributed over the country and took in probably every point that would be possible to see any advantage to aid building wooden ships.

Now, these men built very few ships in each of these yards, some of them four and some eight. They were supposed to be reimbursed for this building. They were to get $15,000—$8,000 profit and $7,000 toward the ways. It was presumed and stated that shipbuilding would be good for years, and they would be able to continue building these wooden ships, which has not proven true. So therefore they are left in this position, that unless the Government comes to their rescue there is nothing but bankruptcy left for them. Of course, some men may pull through if they have sufficient money, but it will mean a severe loss.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Referring to section 2, page 5, I note it is assumed there that these persons can sue and recover. If they can sue and recover, why give them the right to settle; why do you fix their rights as you do under section 2?

Mr. EDMONDS. The bill is drawn around this fact, that it is desired to return the original investment to these men; in other words, pay for their plant.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. But why give them a profit, why provide for a profit if it is only to return the amount that they have got in these plants?

Mr. EDMONDS. The question of profit is one that can be settled here. It is part of the bill, and the gentleman can move to cut it out if the gentleman does not like it.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Why does the gentleman provide in this bill, page 6, that the claimant may appeal, and you only allow the Government to appeal if there is fraud, and then they must pay the money and sue to recover?

Mr. EDMONDS. If the gentleman will look at line 17, page 6, he will see that "the settlement of any claim arising under the provisions of this section shall not bar the United States Government, through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter to be appointed, from the right of review of such settlement."

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Then, at the bottom of the page, line 25, and line 1, on page 7, you say that it must be based on fraud or mistake of fact that they have the right to sue and recover the money back.

Mr. EDMONDS. No; it is not based on fraud. It is based on cause that might arise. It is not based simply on fraud.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Fraud or mistake of fact.

Mr. EDMONDS. No; there is a comma after the word "settlement" there.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Let me suggest to the gentleman that we went over this proposition, and as the settlement was to be placed in the first instance in the hands of a Government functionary, a Government official, and having given the whole right to decide these matters to this officer we thought that it was a strange provison to appeal from the Government's own decision to the Government itself.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. It has been a very expensive matter when the Government has so settled.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. We have provided that if any mistake or fraud was made by the commission settling these matters that it might be appealed from.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, that is all that is contained in this bill, merely validating the settlement in the cost of these yards, and it is a question whether the House wants to decide on so doing. Now, I do not think there is very much difference from the settlement of some of the war claims; I do not think there is very much difference from paying the contractors of public building; I do not think it is very much different from what we have done here. The question is, Are these men to have the privilege to collect for the original investment? We thought the bill would properly safeguard the Government in every way, and that the Shipping Board, far from being compelled to make this settlement, could refuse to make the settlement if they had a just cause in the way of fraud or anything like that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the right to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the limited time I have at my disposal I desire to call attention to certain features of the bill such as the committee is advised entails the possibility of an expenditure of $50,000,000. The House amendment, I think, should be limited in its language to claims arising out of contract, and therefore the first suggestion I would make in the bill—and I desire to make pertinent suggestions only—is that the language on page 4, line 21, after the word "claims," there be inserted the words "arising out of contracts, expressed or implied." I think there should be a limitation of that kind. I also call attention to the language on page 5, line 13——

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GARD. I have not the time. I can not yield, as I have only four minutes.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is a printer's mistake and will be corrected.

Mr. GARD. As to page 5, line 13, the gentleman states that is a printer's mistake, and so I presume it must be corrected; but there is an error in lines 13 and 14, because as it is now expressed it is meaningless. The other questions that arise in my mind are on page 6, at line 15, in which the House inserted this language:

> Where under the facts it could not have been reasonably expected that ships would be built, shall be recognized in any manner by the board.

Now that is extending a tremendous discretion, if the word may be properly used, to the Shipping Board to take care of all sorts of contracts where men are disappointed in the fact that the war ended when it did and that they did not get the opportunity to continue their existing war contracts. And that is exactly what we may expect to have under this bill when we go so far as to authorize anybody to say that they can adjust claims where the claimant reasonably might expect that his ships would be built and were not built because of the fact of the cessation of the war as announced, at least, by the armistice.

Also, I would call attention to the fact that everything in this bill proper for the administration of justice is contained in section 2, which provides that the courts of the land may be appealed to by the claimant. I call attention also to the fact that in the consideration of the bill there is no language expressed by the House or anyone representing in any legal sense the Shipping Board; no one appearing for the interests of the United States in the matter of these claims arising from contract or without contract, either express or implied; that there is no right of appeal to the courts on the part of the Government; that the interests of the Government are not safeguarded as, in my judgment, they should be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, some reference has been made to the position on this bill of the chairman of the Shipping Board. Judge Payne was the chairman of the Shipping Board who discontinued making settlements after his predecessors had permitted settlements to be made. I call attention to page 60 of the hearings of January 14 and 15 of this year, where, in response to a question by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], Mr. Payne used these words:

> I have felt and expressed it as my opinion, while I do not think we have the right as a matter of law to amortize the cost of those yards, that there was a moral obligation on the part of the country to make the shipbuilders whole and to pay what was just and equitable to that end.

That is directly upon the question, Mr. Chairman, of amortizing the cost of the plants, and that is the only question here involved. You say that it will cost $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 to settle these claims. Only a small part of that sum is for the cost of amortizing the plants. Most of it will be legal claims or claims cognizant at law for which recovery could be made. When the Shipping Board at the beginning of the war went out on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts, on the Gulf and on the Great Lakes, and urged men to organize corporations for the purpose of building wooden ships in order that we might build ships faster than the Germans could sink them, these men responded to this call. I am not here for the purpose of framing for them a crown of glory on account of their patriotic endeavor, but, on the other hand, now since the war is over and we have come to the sober second thought, let us not forget that during the war everybody was anxious to do his part, and I want to say that many of these shipbuilders did their part from a patriotic impulse, and they did it because they were requested by the representatives of the Government so to do. They established their plants. The armistice came, and they found themselves with a lot of ways for the building of wooden ships for which there was absolutely no use. Wooden ships are a thing of the past. Even the Shipping Board itself, perhaps, made a mistake in advocating the building of the ships during the war, but it was done.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. For a short question.

Mr. SABATH. Has the gentleman the names of these patriotic contractors that will be benefited under this bill? If he has, I will appreciate it, and I know the country will appreciate it, if he will insert the names of all of these patriotic contractors that have taken on these contracts in the interest of the United States.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is no question. If the gentleman wants to make a speech, let him make it in his own right. I decline to yield to him further. There is no use now in indulging in aspersions upon men who during the war actually sought to do something for the Government. I say they did seek to do something for the Government.

I want to call your attention to some of the safeguards of this bill. We have considered it for a very long time. We have had very extended hearings. We had Judge Payne before us, and he made a complete statement as to his views on the matter, just as I stated awhile ago. Mr. Payne said, on page 61 of the hearings, to which I have just referred, that he thought Congress should advise the Shipping Board; that we should indicate the lines along which settlements should be made. On page 65 of the hearings you will find this in the statement of Judge Payne:

> You know I went so far as to say to these gentlemen that if the committees of the Senate and the House would go on record as directing us to proceed, I would be willing to take the responsibility. Of course, it is very much better that the Congress should pass this legislation and should define the rules, as far as it reasonably may, which we may follow in awarding compensation.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. For a short question.

Mr. WALSH. What does the present personnel of the Shipping Board say? Judge Payne is no longer a member.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We have not had any hearings since Admiral Benson became chairman of the board.

I want to call attention now to some safeguards of this bill. In the first place, no claim shall be liquidated or paid unless it is based upon a request or demand of the Shipping Board or somebody representing the Shipping Board or the Government. In the second place, the claims must be filed within three months from and after the passage of this act. Then, too, every claim must be shown to be made in good faith and upon assurance by some one representing the Shipping Board or some one representing the Government that reimbursement would be provided for in money or contracts for additional work. Next it must be shown that the money was invested or obligations incurred in a proper attempt to produce ships for the use of the United States in prosecution of the war. Next it provides that the settlement of any claim under these provisions shall not bar the Government through its authorized agents to proceed to recover any money paid by virtue of this bill under mistake of fact or through fraud.

Gentlemen have said that there should be provided a review of any settlement by the Government. I do not think it matters whether you insert such a provision or not, since the fact is that the Government is itself making these settlements.

The Government, through the Shipping Board and through the legal department of the Shipping Board, will have full authority to make these settlements; but to provide that the party which makes a settlement shall immediately proceed to have a review of its own action is certainly something unusual. However, if it is desired, such a provision can be inserted in the bill. I am sure the committee are perfectly willing that such a provision shall go into this bill.

With reference to section 2, which has been the subject of some criticism, I call your attention to the fact that it is only in the event that the claimant is dissatisfied with the action of the Shipping Board that he may then within 90 days reject the award and sue the United States. But if he does sue the United States he loses many of the advantages under this bill. He would find the presentation of proof much more difficult and technical in the courts than before the Shipping Board. He can go to the Shipping Board now and get a settlement of that which is legally due him. In fact, Mr. Chairman, the Shipping Board has made settlements which provide that, in addition to the amounts which have been allowed upon a legal claim, the claimant can come in hereafter and demand further settlement if this bill should pass.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. If that is already a right, why put it in this bill?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Because under this provision the claimants would have no further right to submit their claims to the courts.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They can go into the courts now.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; they can go into the courts now; but having once submitted their claims to the Shipping Board they are placed in the position of having submitted to one tribunal.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman can find no authority for the claim that giving them an existing right would constitute any waiver of an existing right.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This fixes a time within which they must act. They must act within 90 days; otherwise they will not have the right.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not in agreement with the gentleman in the belief that the conferring of jurisdiction on the courts in the case of claims of this kind does not give additional rights to the claimants that they would otherwise not possess.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But, having submitted his claim to the Shipping Board, if a claimant is dissatisfied with the decision of the Shipping Board and resorts to the court he must take such action within 90 days.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman's claim, supplemented by the remark of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE], is that it confers no additional rights on the claimant and confers no status on him that he would not otherwise have. If that is true, we should not put that in.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman is not asking a question now. The provision contains a limitation of the time within which the claimants may take action in the courts. We want them immediately to determine within 90 days whether they are going to stand upon the decision and action of the Shipping Board or take further action elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And in so doing I ask leave to insert a letter addressed to the honorable chairman of the committee at the present time from one of the claimants.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The letter in question is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11, 1920.

Hon. C. N. MCARTHUR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to that bill which I spoke to you about this morning, there were two classes of yards interested. On the river there were half a dozen yards like our own which had a complete plant and going business at the time the United States entered the war. The other class were new yards which spent considerable money providing plant and equipment, expecting to have a long run which would enable them to amortize their plant and possibly pay them a small profit.

In the case of established yards like ours we were building motor ships and selling them faster than we could build them at a profit of about $50,000 per ship. We were ordered by the Government to discontinue this work and undertake construction of wood ships of a type furnished by them. They left us with material on hand for four of those motor ships, and by putting in effect the Macey scale, an absurd system of classification, so greatly increased the cost of labor that we lost $141,000 on two schooners which we had started to build before the Government virtually took possession of our yard.

Acting under direct instructions from the Emergency Fleet Corporation officials we enlarged the plant and added additional equipment to a total cost of $350,000, an expenditure which was absolutely unnecessary for the highly profitable business we were engaged in when we were switched on to this Government work. At the time we made these improvements we were promised a long run in the yard—Mr. Schwab and Mr. Piez both coming out there and stating we would be kept busy at least into 1920.

We built 10 ships under our first contract and had just started on a second contract for 10 more; 9 of this second 10 were canceled without a moment's notice after we had expended $300,000 in actual construction and had purchased approximately $400,000 worth of material with which to complete the contract.

In attempting to settle our claim we have not asked for anything to cover the enormous losses sustained by having our motor-ship business shot to pieces nor for the general demoralization caused by the infamous Macey scale and classification which practically took the management of our yard out of our hands, neglecting, however, to relieve us of the work of digging up money for the pay roll.

The bill now before Congress provides only for recompensing owners for the actual loss suffered through attempting to build a ship of the Government's own design and under the Government's own rules and classifications and labor regulations. The original design of the ships was changed repeatedly, every builder being obliged to make hundreds of changes. These changes ranged in price from a few dollars up to hundreds and, in some cases, thousands of dollars, making the cost of a completed ship vastly greater than could possibly have been contemplated by the bidders who undertook the work at a figure based on a certain style of construction and a certain classification of labor. We are also asking a small profit on the ships actually built, but this profit added to the cost of the ship does not even approximate the figure which the same type of vessel cost the Government in yards where they provided the plant and equipment and paid all the bills.

The essential point of the whole matter is that the yards were asked, and in some cases forced, to undertake this work at a price fixed by the Government, which at the time was not in a position to know what the work actually was worth. The fact that they bungled the job, both as to type of ship and demoralization of labor, was no fault of the builders, who went ahead with good faith and did the best they could under the circumstances. We are not asking the Government to pay any such elaborate profits as were allowed the cost-plus men who operated the yards where the Government paid all the bills and built the plant. I think you are familiar enough with the other features of the case to do a little explaining on your own account.

Truly, yours,

E. W. WRIGHT.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] has 20 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] has 18 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, while I am opposed to this bill generally, there is one provision in it to which I wish to call attention. The first section of the bill provides that various persons, and so forth, may bring claims before the board, and then provides that—

> The board shall adjust and liquidate each claim on such terms as it shall determine from the facts in the case to be just and equitable, and may take into consideration, among other things, the conditions under which the contracts were entered into and the conditions under which the work was performed.

I take it from the reading that the purpose of that language is to permit the Shipping Board, which entered into a contract and which knew the conditions at the time, knew the conditions under which the work was entered and knew the general situation, to apply its personal knowledge in the settlement of each claim upon the respective merits of the particular claim, and it is not required to lay down a general rule and require evidence to be submitted in all cases covering the general rule; but that each case may be decided equitably upon the facts in that case, most of which facts will be under the personal knowledge of the Shipping Board or the officials or employees of the Shipping Board.

If the bill is to be passed at all, that looks like a reasonable proposition. Then I turn over to section 2 of the bill and find that if the claimant is not satisfied with the award made by the board in his case, then the claimant may sue in the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims shall decide the case under the terms and conditions of this act. How can the Court of Claims have any personal knowledge of the case? How can the Court of Claims have any knowledge of the conditions in a particular case except as it may be offered in evidence?

What does the Court of Claims know about a particular situation of the claimant and of the case? Here is a bill that proposes to provide that the Shipping Board shall have authority to make a settlement, and that the board will make no settlement which is not fair to the Government, because the Shipping Board knows all the circumstances, and then, on the next page, it takes it away from the Shipping Board and turns it over to people who know nothing about it.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman suffer an interruption for a minute?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Since the purpose of the section to which the gentleman is referring has been stated to be simply to avoid a waiver of one's existing rights under the law, why could not that simply be provided that the party must accept the award within three months after it is made, and the refusal to accept would not be a waiver of any legal rights that the party might have?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Perhaps that might be done. I am referring to the provision in the bill which either does not mean anything or does not mean what it ought to mean. It ought not to be left to the Court of Claims to imagine what the Shipping Board may know in reference to the situation as to each claim. There may be cases where the Shipping Board, if the bill is to be passed at all, could properly allow a claim, but where the Court of Claims ought not to have authority to determine what the conditions are.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] has 20 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] has 13 minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope it will be understood by all the Members of the House that Mr. Payne based his action in refusing to adjust and settle these claims solely upon the legal proposition that as an administrative officer and as a good lawyer he did not believe that the Shipping Board had the right to make any settlements covering anything else except the legal obligations of the Government of the United States; that they had no right to consider the moral and implied obligations, or particularly the moral obligation.

I want to call attention to the fact that Judge Payne is one of the ablest, most cautious, and prudent lawyers who has ever held a public position, and his name and fame for not exceeding the powers justly belonging to him are dear to him; and while prior to his coming in and taking charge and making a full study of the question the Shipping Board had believed, and while some good lawyers still believe, that they did have the right to adjust on the basis of the implied and moral obligations of the Government, when he put his analytical eye upon the statute he said he did not think they had the right and stopped it.

Judge Payne was asked by our committee to state what he thought was the moral obligation of the Government. He endeavored to avoid that, but I felt that his failure to state something on the subject might leave an inference that he believed there was no moral obligation, and so, as read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], I continued to ask him that question until he finally answered and said that in good morals the Government did owe them an obligation and ought to settle with them.

I have not time to go into this matter in 10 minutes, except to say to you that I was amply satisfied that under the phraseology used in the paragraph on page 5 they were authorized by this law to settle upon such terms as it—that is, the board—shall determine from the facts in the case to be just and equitable. That language, "just and equitable," was submitted to Judge Payne. He said it was not sufficient to authorize them to settle the moral or implied obligations of the Government, because in legal parlance equity follows the law, and with that paragraph alone, with nothing further added, they might be held to the letter of the law and the legal obligations under the contracts and agreements; that is to say, they might be right where they were before or under the existing law.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it not a fact that the differences in opinion of the members of the committee arise not upon the question of reimbursing these gentlemen for the work already done but upon reimbursing them or paying them for the construction of the shipyards?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is the only place where the legal and the moral obligations diverge, and that is the question involved. Therefore, in order to enable the Shipping Board to take into consideration the moral obligation arising out of the fact that certain companies and men all over the country were urgently requested by the Shipping Board to do certain things not covered by specific contracts for compensation, in order to authorize settlement for what these men expended at the earnest solicitation of the Shipping Board and representatives of the Government, in order to serve the Government, they ask that this language be put in:

> And may take into consideration, among other things, the conditions under which the contracts were entered into and conditions under which the work was performed.

Now I do not want the House to go off on any wild tangent. If I thought this was a precedent for such an example as stated by my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], that some man had a ship that he could have sold for $1,000,000 and could not now sell it for more than $500,000 or less would come in and ask to be reimbursed by the Government paying him $500,000, and that this would be thought a precedent for that, I would say do not pass this bill. But the simple question is this: The evidence showed before us that the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and Mr. Schwab particularly, went to Richmond, Va., for one place, and said to some patriotic citizens there in a meeting of the chamber of commerce of that city, "Gentlemen, we need ships; we must have ships."

These gentlemen said, "We can get the money. We have no shipping knowledge. We will try to get somebody who has. We will raise the money to build a shipyard and go to work producing wooden ships if you want us to do it," and he assured them that they would be held whole, and on the faith of this assurance they went to work. This assurance is what I want to see made good.

Now, this provision does not apply to anybody except those meeting its requirements:

> That no claims shall be allowed and paid by said board unless it shall appear to its satisfaction that the expenditures made or obligations incurred by the claimant were made in good faith and upon assurances by the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or some officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board or corporation, or either of them, that reimbursement would be provided for in money or contracts for additional work.

In other words, they said, in effect, to this company of men: "Build your plant. We will give you work from which you can amortize the cost of your plant in the price we will pay for each ship or we will pay you what you expend."

Under that agreement they built the plant, they started to building ships, they got three or four built, and before they had half completed their contract the Government canceled it. There was no provision for the cancellation of the contract, but the Government, exercising its great power, just canceled it. Those men are left to hold the bag. Having spent their money on the urgent solicitation of the Government, they are now left to go broke, some of them to become penniless. Why, gentlemen, if I as a private individual had induced Mr. MONAHAN here to go out and begin the construction of a ship for my urgent needs, and had told him orally, "I will make you whole," and when he had got the ship half constructed my need for the ship had ceased and I canceled the contract, do you suppose that I would try to shirk my moral obligation to recompense him for what he had lost, or that I would hide behind some technical defense that might prevent my verbal agreement being valid and binding in law?

Mr. CULLEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CULLEN. The gentleman seems to be familiar with this whole proposition, and also seems to be familiar with the drafting of the bill. There seems to be some question in regard to section 2 as to whether the interests of the United States are safeguarded, and also as to the claim. Will the gentleman explain to the House in his own way how section 2 would operate?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is going to take a right smart lot of time, but I will try to do it briefly.

Mr. CULLEN. I will ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The committee had under advisement the question whether there should be any appeal from the findings of the board in this matter. It was considered that the board was an arm of the Government, and we did not think there was any necessity for the board to appeal from its own decision, or for somebody for the board to appeal from the action of the board; but it is our understanding that as to nearly every award made by the executive branch of the Government for compensation to citizens for property taken there is a provision in the law that the party receiving the award may reject it and go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. CULLEN. Exactly.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Let me say further that it was stated by the claimants and by everybody connected with it that owing to the long, slow, tedious delays connected with going to the Court of Claims, it would not be resorted to, that they knew that if they abandoned the award made by the Shipping Board they would have to take years of time waiting, and in the meantime get nothing. While this provision is in the bill, it is not believed it will be resorted to by claimants.

It was a formal recognition of the ordinary and usual right accorded to a claimant against the Government when the Government tribunal for passing on the claims did not decide according to his judgment for him to go into the Court of Claims and present the claim.

As to the Government not appealing, it would seem to be an appeal by the Government from its own decision. But we do provide that if any mistake is made a review may be had on the board's own initiative, or for any fraud that is perpetrated it can go back and uncover it.

The Good Book, in the story of Job, exalts the justice of God. In all his afflictions Job was patient. He knew that God could not be unjust.

I say in paraphrase of that, let private individuals shirk their moral obligations, but let the Government of the United States always do justice. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I wish I had an hour to go into the circumstances that induced these patriotic people to give their services to the Government in the time of its adversity.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee. I want to say that, so far as I know, there is not a soul living in my district who has any interest in this bill. There is certainly nobody that I have any interest or relation with that has any interest in it. But, gentlemen, here was our Government in dire distress. I thought in those days that maybe our greatest chance to get our boys and provisions for them across to the other side was to send them in little vessels, too small to be successfully attacked by the German submarines, and that we wanted to fill the seas with numbers of these little ships. We had many men of many minds as to how we were going to proceed to get the supplies across the seas. The truth was that after the President's war message we were intent on using force to the utmost, we were intent on applying all our physical and all of our financial and moral resources toward winning the war. Every instrumentality was appealed to and called into operation. We went to the shipbuilder who owned a little plant where they built the small wooden ships, and we went to people who had never built a ship, and we said the country calls. Many of them answered before they had a written contract; they took the contracts as they were offered. The truth was that it was a great appeal, greatly responded to by the people who to-day are standing and waiting just treatment, for justice, by our Government. [Applause.] That is all there is to it. If it was my individual obligation I would feel morally bound to pay the man whom I had induced to do the work, and every one of these payments must be made only to those who were induced to do the work by the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or some one authorized by them to make the request.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Is there any way by which the House can secure the names of the corporations and individuals who have filed claims?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If the gentleman will look through the hearings he will find every one given by the Shipping Board officials and by witnesses who appeared before us, but it is in piecemeal and I can not give them to him.

Mr. SABATH. There is no reason why the information should be withheld from the House.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Absolutely none.

Mr. EDMONDS. They are here; the names of the shipyards are all in Mr. Pease's report.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman will find them in the hearings.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent to insert in my remarks the list on pages 119, 120, and 121 of the hearings that give the list of the claimants.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The list is as follows:

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does it give the list of individuals?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Not an individual list. It does not give the names of the shareholders, but gives the names of the companies. I do not think we ever went into the question as to who the shareholders were.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I have the highest regard for the gentleman from Tennessee, Judge DAVIS. He has examined this law with all the scares about him that some one might be seeking to gouge the Government. I think that so far as the Committee on Merchant Marine is concerned, with the exception of Judge DAVIS, the justice of this matter appeals to us all. I do not recall anybody else who did not think that justice required the passage of such a bill as this. It is very difficult to word it, but we have done the best we could to give these people such justice as I before my Maker would hope at last to receive in the final award. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has 8 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Massachusetts 10 minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have only one speech more.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS].

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am opposed to this bill for the reason that there are so many other matters of legislation of so much more importance to millions who rendered greater service to the Government than did these men. There is hardly a claimant who would come in under the provisions of this law but has already made millions of dollars out of their investments.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. No; I can not yield. There are scores of men over this country where the Government took everything they had in the beginning of this war, and they have been knocking at the door of Congress ever since trying to be reimbursed by the Government for the things that were deliberately filched from them, but because they are small men without great funds at their command to institute a powerful propaganda they are unable to get recompense for the property the Government took from them without compensation of any character.

I will cite the instance of the nitrate plant at Anchor, Ohio, near Cincinnati, a part of which lies in my district. There were 1,800 acres of land deliberately taken by the Government at that point, and much of the land was being farmed by tenants. The land was taken in June and July of 1917. Those tenants were made to move off their farms overnight. The land was taken from the owners—valuable land, planted in crops by the tenants, in corn, potatoes, vegetables of every character. These claims range all the way from $1,000 to $20,000. Those tenants were made to move off the farms at a day's notice, and not one of them has ever received a 5-cent piece from this Government, and the only reason they have not been authorized to bring suit, as you propose to authorize these men, is because they are poor men and have not the funds on hand to start a great propaganda. I say that they have knocked at the door of Congress, but they could not knock loud enough. For that reason I am against legislation of this character until the ear of Congress is open to the men who are in need. Many of them have become bankrupt. Some of them have been reduced to a state of pauperism because Congress would not perform its duties.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is the gentleman opposed to this bill, which grants relief to some people, because other people who ought to have relief can not get it?

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill for the reasons I have assigned and many others that I have not the time to mention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the people of the United States are able to and are willing to pay every obligation growing out of the war, legal, equitable, and moral.

When a state of war was declared with Germany a wave of patriotic fervor, accompanied by a disposition on the part of all our people to make every sacrifice, spread over the country. The man power, the financial strength, and the industrial resources of the Republic were mobilized for war. The country changed from a peace to a war basis. All were willing to adapt themselves to the changed conditions and to make the same sacrifices that the young men who went to the front to fight the battles were called upon to make. Four millions of the boys were mustered in. Two millions of them reached the battle front. War contractors, such as are provided against loss under the provisions of the bill now under consideration, produced but little material that reached the front before the armistice was signed. Let us say they did their best as the boys did their best. The boys offered their lives; the contractors the product of their industries.

But immediately following the armistice and ever since every specie, every variety, and every character of contractor came to Congress with as many varieties of contracts and asked for money to secure them against loss. Some had contracts that were partly completed, some upon which little had been done, some upon which nothing had been done, and many had no contracts at all. These contractors and would-be contractors appealed to Congress to indemnify them not only against loss, but some of them asked for the profits they had expected to make out of the war contracts they had or thought they had.

Let no one lose sight of the fact that the industries of the country, as well as the man power of the country, were all commandeered for war purposes. War contractors and those who controlled the industries of the country were under the same obligation to render patriotic service to the Nation as the young men who offered their lives upon the battle fields. But the men whose property instead of their lives was commandeered have received from the country since the armistice was signed $2,179,272,966 to indemnify them against loss.

When the men who were to furnish their property or the products of their industry for war purposes appealed to Congress, those who to-day protest against legislation to in a small way indemnify the boys who offered their lives in battle against financial loss were the earnest advocates of the war contractors. As to the contractors, they do not complain that it would bankrupt the Treasury; that it would increase the cost of living; that the country could stand no additional taxation. But when it is proposed to indemnify the young men, every one of whom offered his life for his country, in an amount that about equals the amount the Government deducted from their pay during the war, a propaganda is spread over the country protesting against legislation readjusting the pay of these heroic boys.

During the war half of their pay was kept from them and sent to dependent relatives. A quarter of it was retained by the Government for insurance. They had in the neighborhood of seven dollars and a half a month for their personal use during the war. Out of this pittance they could save nothing. When they were discharged they received $60, which was not enough to buy citizens' clothing, that during their absence had more than doubled in price. They had a year and a half of war—of hell—whether in cantonments, on the sea, or on the battle fields. Their lives were made over. Their nerves were strained to the breaking point. And yet some Members here protest against legislation that will help these boys get on their feet and make their way with those who have made rapid progress in every profession, trade, and industry during their absence in the war.

Mr. Chairman, I serve notice now that until Congress is ready to do something for the men who fought the battles of the war I shall oppose appropriations, or authorizations for appropriations, or authorizations for contractors or would-be contractors to establish their claims against the Government of the United States. You have been told that the boys who fought the battles of the war should not commercialize their patriotism. I say that the contractors of the war should not commercialize their patriotism. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. To what legislation does the gentleman refer which should be enacted before we take up legislation of the character now under consideration?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I refer to the bill that has been under consideration, readjusting the pay of the soldiers—indemnifying them to small degree for loss sustained during the war.

Mr. BLANTON. Commonly known as the bonus proposition.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; against which 49 Republicans and a solid Democratic vote is pledged.

That bill does not take a dollar out of the Treasury that it does not put into it. Here are the provisions made for raising the money:

1. An additional surtax on individual incomes of 1 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $5,000 and does not exceed $10,000; 2 per cent from $10,000 to $26,000; and 3 per cent of incomes in excess of $26,000. This provision is estimated to yield $108,000,000 per annum.

2. A tax equivalent to one-fifth of 1 per cent on the sale of stocks and bonds. This provision is estimated to yield $190,000,000 per annum.

3. A tax equivalent to one-half of 1 per cent on real estate sales. This provision is estimated to yield $50,000,000 per annum.

4. An increase of approximately 15 per cent in the existing tax on cigars and tobacco and of approximately 25 per cent of the tax on cigarettes. This provision is estimated to yield $55,000,000 per annum.

5. An excise tax on corporations issuing stock dividends subsequent to March 15, 1920, equivalent to 10 per cent of the value of stock so issued. This provision is estimated to yield $45,000,000 on stock dividends already declared and $7,500,000 per annum on future stock dividends.

These taxes will not work a serious hardship on anyone and will not increase the cost of anything. The purpose of the tax is a worthy one. Let it not be said that the country has for the soldiers only cheers for the living, tears for the dead, but indemnity for contractors.

Let me remind you that the boys for whom a readjustment of pay is asked are the same boys that you followed to the station when they were embarking for the cantonments. They are the boys for whom the sweaters were knit and the bandages were made. They are the boys who lay sick in hospitals beside the frozen bodies of dead comrades; the same boys who braved the perils of the sea to reach the enemy on the battle fields of France and Flanders, they are the same boys who lay in the trenches, who went over the top amid the shot and shell and deadly gases of the enemy. They are boys who added glory to the Republic by their patience in the cantonments, by their courage on the sea, by their endurance in the trenches, by their bravery and heroism in going over the top into "no man's land." They are the boys who stirred the heart of the Republic, who cheered England, and France, and Italy, and Belgium; who put new life and courage and new soul into the war. They are the same boys who drove terror into the heart of the Hun, who forced the Kaiser from his throne and drove the German Army back across the Rhine. They are the boys whose comrades sleep beneath the poppies in France and Flanders and in every State of the Union.

Their silent tents are spread
Where glory guards with sacred round
The bivouac of the dead.

A bill for their relief should pass ungrudgingly. It is said that it is intended to buy the votes of these brave boys. Their votes can not be bought. It is said that this legislation is commercializing the patriotism of the boys. It is not said that legislation for contractors is commercializing the patriotism of the contractors.

I appeal to the opposition to the soldiers' pay legislation everywhere to support it with the same patriotic support they gave to the legislation mobilizing the boys for war.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I simply want to say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] that no man, and no set of men, has the right to pledge my vote——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I understand that I have the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. Whether it is proper for one Member on the floor of the House——

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Then I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry is not in order unless the gentleman from Alabama yields.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not in order to make a parliamentary inquiry unless the gentleman from Alabama yields.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And I have not yielded.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] does not have the right to read 49 Republican Members out of the Republican Party.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a point of order, and the Chair overrules it. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say by way of preface in connection with the impassioned objections made by the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to the consideration and passage of the pending legislation, that the members of the party to which I belong are not responsible for the legislative position of which the gentleman from Kansas complains. His party is in power upon the floor of this House. The gentleman from Kansas himself occupies a place of conspicuous authority and power with his legislative colleagues upon the Republican side of this House. If he is unable with his logic and persuasion to induce a majority of the steering committee of his own associates to bring in the legislation in which he is so much interested, surely that even should not militate against the merits of the bill that we have now under consideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. For a brief question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman and his party vote for the previous question and for a rule that I have in my pocket for the bill I have in mind?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know what bill the gentleman has in his pocket; I do not know what rule the gentleman has in his pocket. [Applause.] I will say to the gentleman, if it measures up to some of the partisan rules that he has brought in on the floor of this House since he has been chairman of the Committee on Rules I would not undertake to pledge the Democrats to its consideration. [Applause.] Now I think I have answered the gentleman's question, and I desire to discuss this bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I say it is a bill to make in order the bill providing for a readjustment of the pay of our soldiers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further. I trust that the judicial attitude of the minds of the members of the committee will not be diverted from the consideration of the pending measure by this side issue that has been injected into the debate by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. EMERSON. No side issue, I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We have before us a bill of great merit. It is a bill that should appeal to the careful and equitable consideration of the judgment of every Member of the House. The situation briefly is this, and I will not have time to discuss fully all of the facts and circumstances leading up to the reporting of this bill by our committee, but I do think it is proper, Mr. Chairman, to review quite briefly the circumstances under which those contracts or quasi contracts or equitable claims, if you choose to call them that, were entered into by the representatives of the Shipping Board or the board itself.

As has been admirably stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] the time when this shipbuilding program was authorized and entered upon by the Shipping Board was a time of desperate extremity and peril for the people of the United States. You will recall the ravages of the German submarines upon the shipping of the world upon the high seas at the time had reached an appalling state. We did not know to what extent that destruction might ultimately eventuate. We were fearful that it might go to the extent probably of driving all commerce from the seas, which, of course, would have precluded the carrying of our soldiers and of their supplies to the fields of battle in France. And although viewed now in retrospect it has developed that the building of wooden ships was an unfortunate venture upon the part of the Shipping Board, and although it had subsequently developed, as now shown, that they are of small value in the shipping market of the world, yet the circumstances under which they were contracted, viewed in the light of the great national peril that we were involved in at the time upon the high seas, that program was fairly justified by the Shipping Board; and, recognizing that situation, this governmental authority to which was intrusted the duty of getting ships built for the purpose of transporting our troops and supplies, as has been stated, appealed to the business men of the country to engage in the wooden-ship building enterprise, and we made solemn assurances to those gentlemen, backed, of course, as those assurances were, by the faith, credit, and good will of the Government of the United States, to embark upon an extensive program of wooden-ship building enterprise.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. For a brief question, because I desire to say——

Mr. BLACK. I did not know how much time the gentleman had.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have very little time, but I will be glad to answer a question.

Mr. BLACK. It is all right; I will not take the time of the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, this appeal was made to those men. The bill, as has been explained, that is now before the committee arises upon only one phase of that situation. Where contracts were definitely entered into and performed or partly performed in reference to the building and delivery of certain numbers of ships which were built and delivered there is no field for the operation of this bill, but it largely hinges upon the question of amortization of the plants that those gentlemen constructed in order to make them whole upon their investment upon the assurances that were actually given them by the Shipping Board or its representatives as to the quantity of work that they would be intrusted to perform. For instance, if the Shipping Board said to a firm in Richmond, Va., or Bath, Me., or Portland, Oreg., "We will accept your offer if you are able to build for us 12 wooden ships of certain specifications, and we authorize you to go ahead and build a plant with four ways upon which we will guarantee that you will have three turns upon each of those ways, three vessels for each way, and you are expected to complete 12 wooden vessels."

They made their preparations, expended their money, and developed that plant to carry out the assurances and requests of the Shipping Board for the construction of that much wooden tonnage, and then it developed that the armistice came along. These contracts were canceled and wooden-ship building concerns, for instance, which only built three of these ships, actually constructed and delivered, had made their investment of large sums of money upon those plants, and, as I say, the building contract was canceled. In many instances it was only an equitable contract when it comes to its real construction, and, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] has said, in its last analysis possibly only a moral obligation of the Government of the United States, and that is the thing that we are calling upon this House to enact this measure for, to carry out a moral obligation of the Government of the United States.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman let me read from that obligation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. My friend will pardon me, but I have only two or three minutes. This bill, in fact, confers upon the Shipping Board an equitable jurisdiction to settle and determine these claims under the safeguards and provisos which you will find in the bill. It seems to me, gentlemen, that upon a careful perusal of the bill you will see that the rights of the Government are amply and thoroughly safeguarded, and that it affords no avenue or opportunity for grafters or those who would seek to mulct the Government out of illegitimate profits to operate under the terms of this bill. It bestows upon this board the right to consider each of these claims upon the merits of the proposition, and to take into consideration the facts and circumstances that confronted the contract, or the moral obligation entered into by the Government with these individual citizens, and to adjust and liquidate those claims so that these parties may not suffer loss and may be made whole under the assurances given when the work was entered upon. The bill specifically provides that no profit shall be collected or exacted under the terms of settlement proposed under this bill, and, as has been ably argued by those who preceded me, the whole proposition, gentlemen, simply involves the same thing you have acted upon heretofore in order to provide for a settlement of bills for war claims or contracts with the War Department, the same character of legislation you have——

Mr. MANN of Illinois rose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can not yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman says no profit shall be allowed; that is not in the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think it is provided in the bill, and if I have time under the five-minute rule I think I can show it is in it. It is the same character of legislation you provided to give those furnishing rare metals and minerals the right to settle their claims in the Interior Department. It is the same character of obligation you authorized to settle many other war activities of the Government of the United States. I see no reason why this particular class of our people who are engaged in the wooden-ship building industry should be discriminated against in favor of the others who have already had authority from Congress to settle their equitable claims against the Government of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. I think this bill goes a little further than that. It gives them the right to go into court. The other bills did not do that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Gives whom the right?

Mr. MADDEN. The claimants.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If they are not satisfied with the award they can reject it and remit their claim to the Court of Claims under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. But there is no such right in any other bill we passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not recollect specifically the terms of the Dent bill. Now, I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Shipping Board be, and it is hereby, authorized to adjust, liquidate, and pay the claims of individuals, firms, or corporations who built or contracted to build wooden ships for the United States, the United States Shipping Board, or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation after April 6, 1917, which can not be paid under the law as it now is, and said board shall adjust and liquidate each claim upon such terms as it shall determine from the facts in the case to be just and equitable, and its decision shall be deemed conclusive and final, except as herein otherwise provided: Provided, That no claim shall be liquidated or paid unless it is alleged and found to be based upon a request or demand of the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or any officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board and corporation, or either of them: Provided further, That said board shall consider, approve, and dispose of only such claims as shall be made hereunder and filed with the board within three months from and after the date when this act shall become a law: Provided further, That no claims shall be allowed and paid by said board unless it shall appear to its satisfaction that the expenditures made or obligations incurred by the claimant were made in good faith and upon assurances by the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or any officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board and corporation, or either of them, that reimbursement would be provided for in money or contracts for additional work: And provided further, That no claim shall be paid unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said board that moneys were invested or obligations incurred subsequent to April 6, 1917, and prior to November 12, 1918, in a proper and legitimate attempt to produce ships for the needs of the Nation in connection with the prosecution of the war; and that no profits of any kind shall be included in the allowance of any of said claims, and that no investment for merely speculative purposes shall be recognized in any manner by said board: And provided also, That the settlement of any claim arising under the provisions of this section shall not bar the United States Government, through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement, nor the right of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to recover any money paid by the Government to any party under and by virtue of the provisions of this section, if the Government has been defrauded; and the right of recovery in all such cases shall extend to the executors, administrators, heirs, and assigns of any party.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the part printed in italics.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out all after the enacting clause in section 1 and insert in lieu thereof all that portion in italics, commencing on page 4, line 19, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a division of that question.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the Chair stating the amendment before it is reported by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Chair stated that the Clerk would report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts moves to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the matter in italics, beginning on page 4, line 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. The point of order is that it comes up automatically. When the Senate bill is read the report of the committee on the amendment comes before the House for one vote on the amendment, and it is out of order for a member of the committee or a Member of the House to offer an amendment when the committee's amendment is already pending.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is not in order to entertain any motion for any amendment to the bill until all of the Senate amendment is read. It is one amendment.

Mr. RAKER. My further point is this——

Mr. MADDEN. This is not considered by paragraphs or sections, but it is all one amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the committee has stricken out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and offered one amendment as a substitute. Now, when the Senate bill is read the committee amendment is in order and has the precedence.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The amendment in the nature of a substitute will not be voted on until after the amendment is disposed of. The amendment in the nature of a substitute may be proposed before amendment to the original text has been acted upon. It may not be voted on until after such amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. After the amendment is disposed of? I do not understand what the Chair means. The Chair stated the amendment could be offered, but could not be acted on until the amendment is disposed of. Surely that is not the meaning of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair meant the preferential amendment to perfect the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Chair ruled it is not necessary to read the Senate bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ruled it is necessary to read the Senate bill, and then amend it section by section.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The amendment by way of a substitute will not be voted upon until the Senate amendment has been read?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir. The motion put by the gentleman from Massachusetts should be to strike out section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the words which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, if the question is presented to the Chair he will have to decide it, but the motion has not been made yet.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. The point of order is that the motion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] has not been submitted by the Chair to the committee for its action.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, should not the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts be to strike out section 1 and insert section 1 of the House bill, giving notice at the same time, if that amendment prevails, he will make the similar motion in regard to section 2 and other sections?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the proper procedure for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] to follow.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman should give notice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman should give notice that if it is adopted he will offer a similar motion to strike out and substitute other sections of the Senate bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a further point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. The report on this bill shows that the committee has not offered these amendments as separate amendments, but they strike out all the enacting clause and insert the following in lieu thereof as a substitute.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. That is exactly——

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman's motion put in all the sections without an opportunity to offer an amendment to those sections. Clearly he does not intend that.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I move to strike out section 1 of the Senate bill and substitute section 1 of this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I make the point of order that that is not in order unless accompanied by notice that he intends to make the same motion as to the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I intend to offer a similar amendment to each paragraph of the bill, to substitute the new bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment?

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRIGGS. If the motion should be carried, would that whole section 1 of the amendment be open for amendment in other respects, or would we adopt it as just one amendment without amending it at all?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be open for amendment. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] moves to strike out——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why not let the Clerk report the amendment, so that we may know what it is?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and insert section 1 with a committee amendment, the language beginning on page 4, line 19, and ending on page 7, line 8.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] offers a preferential amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is not in order. We might as well have it done properly. This is a committee amendment. It has to be voted upon at some time without being offered from the floor. The committee amendment has to be voted on some time. Now, the proper motion, the proper proceeding, is either to read the Senate bill through and then vote upon the committee substitute as a whole or upon the reading of the first section. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] should offer the entire committee amendment, with the announcement that he will move, as the other sections of the bill are read, to strike them out; but the committee amendment has to be disposed of either now or after the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The committee amendment must first be read before the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is in order. We have not had the committee amendment reported yet.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; the committee amendment has not yet been reported.

Mr. WALSH. I was not aware of that, Mr. Chairman, and I ask that my amendment may be withheld until the committee amendment has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws his amendment for the time being. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] offer his modified amendment?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will permit, my recollection is that the substitute was read at the beginning.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; on the first reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, embracing all after line 2, page 1, down to and including line 18 of page 4, and insert the rest of the bill, beginning with line 19 on page 4 and ending with line 8 of page 7.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the United States Shipping Board be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, adjust, liquidate, and pay the claims of individuals, firms, or corporations who built or contracted to build wooden ships for the United States, the United States Shipping Board, or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation after April 6, 1917, and said board shall adjust and liquidate each claim upon such terms as it shall determine from the facts in the case to be just and equitable, and may take into consideration, among other things, the conditions under which the contracts were entered into and the conditions under which the work was performed; and its decision shall be deemed conclusive and final, except as herein otherwise provided: Provided, That no claim shall be liquidated or paid unless it is alleged and found to be based upon a request or demand of the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or some officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board or corporation, or either of them: Provided further, That no claim shall be liquidated or paid unless it is alleged such claims as shall be made hereunder and filed with the board within three months from and after the date when this act shall become a law: And provided further, That no claims shall be allowed and paid by said board unless it shall appear to its satisfaction that the expenditures made or obligations incurred by the claimant were made in good faith and upon assurances by the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or some officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board or corporation, or either of them, that reimbursement would be provided for in money or contracts for additional work: And provided further, That no such claim shall be paid unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said board that moneys were invested or obligations incurred subsequent to April 6, 1917, in a proper and legitimate attempt to produce ships for the needs of the Nation in connection with the prosecution of the war; and that no profits of any kind shall be included in the allowance of any of such claims, except upon completed ships or on ships partly constructed: Provided, That on ships partly constructed only such profits may be allowed on that part of the work of construction actually done at the time of the cancellation of contracts, or on work done thereafter on ships not canceled, as in the judgment of the Shipping Board are warranted by all the facts in the case; and that no investment for merely speculative purposes, or where under the facts it could not have been reasonably expected that ships would be built, shall be recognized in any manner by said board: And provided further, That the settlement of any claim arising under the provisions of this section shall not bar the United States Government, through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement, nor the right of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to recover any money paid by the Government to any party under and by virtue of the provisions of this section, if such settlement is affected by fraud or mistake of fact; and the right of recovery in all such cases shall extend against the executors, administrators, trustees in bankruptcy, heirs, assigns, and successors, whether by operation of law, consolidation, sale, or otherwise of any claimant or claimants.

A report of all proceedings under this section, including receipts and disbursements, shall be made to the Congress on the first Monday in December of each year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] offers a preferential motion, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The amendment has not all been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will finish the reading of the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. The point of order is that the gentleman can offer but one section at a time, and it should be divisible. You can not offer an entire bill to the first section of the bill that he moves to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That whenever the amount found to be due any claimant under the provisions of this act shall be unsatisfactory to the claimant, the claimant, within 90 days after the making of any such allowance or award, shall be entitled to reject such award and sue the United States to recover such sum as may be justly due under the terms and provisions of this act in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code, and the amount so determined by said court shall be paid by the United States Shipping Board in the same manner as awards made by the said board under section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. That in determining the amount due any claimant the Shipping Board shall, among other things, take into consideration and charge to the claimant the then market value of any shipbuilding plant, lumber, or materials on hand belonging to the claimant used in the construction or acquired to be used in the construction of any wooden ship or shipbuilding plant, and also the salvage or usable value of any machinery or other appliances which were purchased to equip any wooden ship or shipbuilding plant.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHINDBLOM: Page 5, line 13, strike out the words "no claim shall be liquidated or paid unless it is alleged" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Said board shall consider, approve, and dispose of only," so that the proviso involved shall read as follows:

"Provided further, That said board shall consider, approve, and dispose of only such claims as shall be made hereunder and filed with the board within three months from and after the date when this act shall become a law."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, this proviso is stated correctly in the report, but for some reason was not stated correctly in the printed bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the Clerk will report the preferential amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 7, line 5, after the word "claimants" insert "And provided further, That no adjustment or settlement shall be made under the provisions of this act with any contractors or claimants who shall have submitted to the United States Shipping Board or to the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation any false or fraudulent claims prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentlemen of the committee have no objection to that amendment. I think that might well be written into the law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts upon what facts that have been disclosed, if any, does the gentleman predicate the offering of this amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Well, I do not care to go into the facts or name any specific instances, except to say that there is information upon file in the Shipping Board of instances where claims have been filed and found to have been false or fraudulent, and that when the claims were returned for adjustment the amount of the claim, in one instance, was not reduced a dollar, but certain items were eliminated and the amount of those items was distributed over other items in the claim, so that the total amount was as at first submitted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield further for another suggestion?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It occurs to me that there might be this danger in the gentleman's amendment: The executive officers of a shipbuilding company, for instance, that was composed of a number of stockholders might, as a matter of fact, have presented a false or fraudulent claim for adjustment without the knowledge of the great majority of the innocent stockholders of the company, who as a matter of fact might have really a just claim for the balance against the Shipping Board for adjustment, and if the gentleman's amendment as now offered should be adopted it would absolutely preclude any consideration of the bona fides of any legitimate balance that the stockholders might have.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is making a statement that is not justified, and I think he will concede it is not justified. It would not prevent an adjustment of that claim. It would simply take it out of the adjustment under the provisions of this bill. That claim could be adjusted by the Shipping Board under other provisions upon strictly legal grounds.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was not assuming a hostile attitude to the amendment per se, but it had just occurred to me that that might be an objectionable feature.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman will reflect that the language of my amendment simply precludes adjustment under the provisions of this act.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Massachusetts is chairman of a committee which has investigated this matter?

Mr. WALSH. Investigated the expenditures of the Shipping Board.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And his investigation has brought out facts which in his judgment warrant him in offering this amendment?

Mr. WALSH. I will state that the investigations we have made lead me to believe that we ought not to pass legislation that later can be made the basis of claims that Congress intends to overlook any false or fraudulent claims or attempts to collect money based upon fraud in subsequent legislation. This will not hamper or hinder any claim which has been put forward by any claimant or contractor in good faith and which is based on equity and justice, but simply leaves the contractor who has attempted to collect money by fraud or by false claims to his remedy upon strictly legal grounds and does not permit him to come in on the same basis, upon the same footing, with these others for whose benefit this legislation is intended.

Mr. BENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BENSON. Does not the gentleman think it would cover his entire proposition if he used the word "fraudulent" and left out "false," because a man might inadvertently put in a false claim, and thereby be precluded from all the benefits of this bill, without any intention of being fraudulent. If you limit your amendment to the word "fraudulent," I shall be inclined to vote for it, but when you say "false claims," then you make it incumbent upon the department to determine that there has been no false claim made anywhere at all, and you practically nullify this entire act by the use of the word "false," because the department might hold that any claim was a false claim.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman is exaggerating the danger of this amendment.

Mr. EAGLE. I think the gentleman will agree that the expression "false and fraudulent" has a very definite and well-understood meaning, which has been settled and passed upon in judicial decisions.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Under the proviso these claimants would have three months after the passage of this act within which to file their claims, would they not?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Then the gentleman's provision would make it so that those who by mistake had filed a claim that contained any misrepresentations, even not intentional, before the passage of this act, could not have their claims considered, but all those who filed claims since the passage of the act could commit all the frauds and perjuries imaginable, and it would not exclude them under the gentleman's provision.

Mr. WALSH. This very act is passed for the purpose of protecting the Government, as I understand it, against false and fraudulent claims that may be submitted after the act passes.

Mr. RAKER. Why does not the gentleman strike out the words "prior to the passage of this act," so that anybody who presents a false or fraudulent claim will be barred from the benefits of the act?

Mr. WALSH. Because that is in the language of the bill, as I read it. Nobody who after this act passes comes in with a fraudulent claim can get the Shipping Board to settle it.

Mr. RAKER. So the gentleman is desirous of placing those who filed claims prior to the passage of the act in a different position from those who file claims subsequent to the passage of the act?

Mr. WALSH. No; my amendment provides that any contractor who presents a fraudulent and false claim prior to the passage of this act shall not be settled with under the terms of this act but shall be left to his strictly legal grounds.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit me to ask a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did not catch his amendment fully, but did the gentleman consider this aspect of it: Should it not be "knowingly false"? Does the gentleman's amendment contain any qualification of the word "false"? Some men innocently make false claims. The question is, Do they knowingly do it?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think the word "knowingly" is necessary, but I am willing to modify my amendment upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] and I ask to modify it by inserting the word "knowingly" before the word "false."

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by inserting the word "knowingly" before the word "false." Is there objection?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska objects. An amendment to the amendment can be offered only by unanimous consent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the Chairman's authority for that sort of a ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. This is an amendment in the third degree. This is an amendment to an amendment which is sought to be amended by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, which is now pending. That can be amended only by unanimous consent. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDY of Texas and Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], a member of the committee.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is also a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Texas because of his seniority on the committee.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If it is in order to move to amend the bill in its entirety by inserting before the word "false" the word "knowingly", I offer that amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. As I understand it the amendment just adopted is already a part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to amend an amendment that has already been agreed to.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I offer to amend the bill as it now stands.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee submits an amendment which the clerk will report.

The clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 4, line 20, after the word "authorized" strike out the words "and directed."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the committee amendment as reported proceeds upon the very violent assumption that every claim filed by these contractors will be a just claim and should be paid. In other words, it provides "that the United States Shipping Board be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, adjust, liquidate, and pay the claims of individuals, firms, or corporations who built or contracted to build wooden ships," and so forth. Now, by striking out the words "and directed" it simply authorizes them to do so, the presumption, of course, being that they will do so when those claims are just and ought to be paid under the provisions of this act, and I do not think that we should go to the extent, and I do not believe that the Congress wants to go to the extent, of specifically directing the payment of every one of these claims that may be filed, no matter how unjust or fraudulent it may be.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to inquire whether the gentleman has the same recollection that I have, that Judge Payne, chairman of the Shipping Board, preferred to have the word "directed" in the bill, because he said he did not want it to rest entirely on the discretion of the board as to whether they should take up these matters.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not remember that. I remember that the chairman of the Shipping Board stated in general terms that it was a matter for Congress to determine and he trusted that Congress would take some action in order that they might settle claims in some way. But I do not remember that he took any such position as the gentleman states, and I do not think he did take any position to the effect that we should instruct the Shipping Board to pay all the claims.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I did not say that. What I said was that the Shipping Board would investigate the claims, and they will not pay unless they find something due. The question is whether we shall give them the duty of investigating the claims.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I have no objection whatever to an instruction to them to investigate, but this amendment goes further, it authorizes and directs them "to investigate, adjust, liquidate, and pay."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They will not pay unless they find something due.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. What does the gentleman say is the meaning of this language at the bottom of page 4 and the top of page 5: "And said board shall adjust and liquidate these claims upon such terms as it shall determine from the facts in the case to be just and equitable"?

If they find nothing justly due the claimant, nothing will be due and nothing will be paid.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Well, I have an amendment to offer to that. That proceeds on the theory that every claim is just and that something is to be paid under it, and they are simply to determine the amount due.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. Suppose you had inserted in front of the word "claim" the word "valid," so that it would read "adjust and liquidate each valid claim." Would not that be satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; but they could not determine whether it was valid until they had made an investigation.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman's contention is correct, it seems to me that the words "investigate, adjust, and liquidate" ought to be stricken out because under the gentleman's interpretation all they could do is to pay.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Statutes are to be literally construed.

Mr. ROWE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. ROWE. On page 5 the gentleman will find language like this:

That no claim shall be liquidated or paid unless it is alleged and found to be based upon a request or demand of the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or some officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board or corporation, or either of them.

Then, down in line 16, it reads:

And provided further, That no claims shall be allowed and paid by said board unless it shall appear to its satisfaction that the expenditures made or obligations incurred by the claimant were made in good faith and upon assurances by the United States Shipping Board * * * that reimbursement would be provided for in money or contracts for additional work.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. All of that might be true, and still there might not be anything justly due on the claim.

Mr. ROWE. Does the gentleman think that if they found there was nothing due they would allow something?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. They are instructed to do so under the provisions of the proposed committee amendment.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. It occurs to me that the gentleman from Tennessee is too good a lawyer to seriously contend that the word "directed" ought to be stricken out of this amendment.

But, Mr. Chairman, I rose principally to say a word or two as to the general merits of the bill. It has been well said on the floor of the House that when the war came on this Government called for the building of ships through its authorized agents, guaranteeing, as far as men could be guaranteed, that they would be found whole at the end of the transaction. Men all over the country immediately went to work building these ships. The war came to an end and the men found themselves with the investment of a lifetime involved in this question. They found themselves not only with no profits, but found themselves faced with brankruptcy because, relying upon the good faith of the Government, they had gone into the investment for this purpose.

This bill, it occurs to me, carefully safeguards, carefully protects, the interests of the Government if we are going to have any confidence whatever in the integrity of the Government or the members of the Shipping Board. It sets out specifically what claims shall not be allowed and the circumstances under which claims shall be allowed.

Now, I have been very much interested in the discussion and statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts that prior to the time—and I direct the attention of the committee specifically to this statement in behalf of the justness of this measure—that prior to the time Judge Payne came on the Shipping Board, with a legal technical mind, looking to the interests of the Government, and said he believed there was a lack of authority upon the part of the Shipping Board to proceed with the settlement of this case, over 70 claims had been settled for; over 70 claimants had been paid their money. Those claims had been paid up to the time that Judge Payne made that decision, of which I do not complain but indorse, and stopped the payment of further claims.

Now, unless Congress directs the Shipping Board to proceed and investigate the obligations of the Government in this matter, under the power vested in the Shipping Board by Congress, this condition is going to prevail: That men with claims equally as equitable, equally as just, equally as entitled to settlement as those that have been paid, are going to find themselves defeated in the payment of their just claims because of this objection to further payment.

I have considered this bill carefully and I do not believe a man in this House wants the committee to put in any claim not authorized, in good conscience, but I do submit to this House that when these men under the powerful impulse and the persuasive power of the agents of the Government invested their money and built ships to meet the menace of the German submarine and sustain the valor and courage of the American soldier on the firing field that brought this war to an end, that in good conscience these men ought not to be cast into the darkness of bankruptcy because they trusted in the faith of their Government. [Applause.] That is all there is to it. If you have no confidence in the Shipping Board, then that is different.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it is a little out of order, but I ask unanimous consent to proceed in opposition to the amendment for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the committee felt that it was not only right to authorize an investigation but that it was proper to direct an investigation. Without the word "direct" the Shipping Board would be authorized to make no investigation at all. No man, except through hypercritical nicety of construction, can avoid reaching the conclusion—taking the whole bill together, with the proviso on page 5—that they were directed to make an investigation and were authorized to make an adjustment and payment, and it is provided that they shall pay no claim unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the board that the expenditures made or obligations incurred by the claimant were made in good faith and upon assurance by the United States Shipping Board, United States Emergency Fleet Corporation, or some other agency or officer, acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of that board or either of them, that reimbursement would be provided for in money or contracts. There could be no reimbursement if there was no just claim. That is the plain meaning.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman is a member of the committee?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I am.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman kindly inform me if Judge Payne appeared at any time before the committee and recommended this legislation?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Oh, more than once. He was before us from the beginning to the end, saying that he would have gone ahead and exercised the authority to adjust and settle these claims, if he had had authority, but that he believed under the law he could not do it; he had no authority to do it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas permit me to interrupt there so as to read Judge Payne's statement upon that?

Mr. JUUL. Permit me first to state to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] that if Judge Payne was one of the men who recommended the bill, that is satisfactory to me. I wanted to draw that fact out.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is true, and the gentleman from Illinois will read his statement.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Judge Payne said:

I have believed, and express it as my opinion, while I do not think we have a right as a matter of law to amortize the cost of those yards, that there was a moral obligation on the part of the Government to make the shipbuilders whole, and to pay what was just and equitable to that end.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Let me supplement that by saying that this whole bill came up by reason of the fact that Judge Payne was anxious to have legal authority from Congress to make the settlement. Perhaps I would better express it by saying that Judge Payne was anxious to have Congress by law express its policy as to the payment or settlement of these claims, which he believed constituted a moral obligation, as he stated in that part of his testimony just read by Mr. CHINDBLOM.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he would not clarify the whole situation by changing the language so as to make it read—directed to investigate and authorized to liquidate.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would not have any objection to that change, but I think it is only a hypercritical parsing that would fail to reach the conclusion that nothing was to be paid unless it was authorized.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer that as a substitute for the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I think it would be cumbersome and I think it would be unnecessary, because page 5 clarifies that.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Texas is not in order at this time.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is it not in order to offer a substitute for an amendment that has already been offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is not in order to offer an amendment, but it is in order to offer an amendment by way of substitute, even though in the third degree. I am not offering this as a direct amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read from the House Manual and Digest:

An amendment in the third degree is not specified by the rule and is not permissible, even when the third degree is in the nature of a substitute for an amendment to a substitute.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But, Mr. Chairman, I am not offering this as an amendment at all.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a substitute.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am offering it purely as a substitute for the amendment, and it is always in order, even though an amendment to an amendment is pending, to offer a complete substitute. This amendment is not offered as a dodge but as a complete substitute for the amendment, because it would change the meaning of the amendment. I offer to strike out on page 4, line 20, the words "authorized and" and insert before the word "adjust," in line 20, the words "and authorized."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Texas is not in order and so holds.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand in the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the committee had determined that the decision of the Chair should stand as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words before the vote is taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote has been taken and the judgment of the Chair has been sustained.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. I would like to know what is before the House? As I understand it, the committee has reported an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending to that offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS]. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. WINGO. And the Chair rules that you can not offer a substitute for an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so ruled.

Mr. WINGO. And the committee has sustained the ruling of the Chair on that proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. WINGO. I think we ought to have it framed, for that is a unique ruling.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When would an amendment be in order to add another section?

The CHAIRMAN. After that part of the bill has been reached. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee) there were—ayes 15, noes 47.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARRISH, Mr. JONES of Texas, and Mr. RAKER rose.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 5, after the word "war," strike out the semicolon and the balance of line 5 and also all of lines 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and all of line 13 down to and including the word "case."

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the provision of the bill that I seek to strike out by my amendment is as follows:

And that no profits of any kind shall be included in the allowance of any of such claims, except upon completed ships or on ships partly constructed: Provided, That on ships partly constructed only such profits may be allowed on that part of the work of construction actually done at the time of the cancellation of contracts, or on work done thereafter on ships not canceled, as in the judgment of the Shipping Board are warranted by all the facts in the case.

In other words, gentlemen of the committee, by this amendment I move to strike from the bill any provision that would allow a man who had engaged in the building of ships any profits whatever upon his contract as a whole.

I do not believe that a man who comes before the United States Government at this time demanding relief and asking for the payment of money if he has made a profit on part of his contract or profit on some ships that he has constructed and lost on other ships, I do not believe he should be permitted to come before the Government and collect one cent out of the United States Treasury. He should be made to take into consideration his dealings with the Government in this particular, and if he is gainer on the whole, no relief should be granted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARRISH. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. This language in the bill seems to be a limitation upon profits. If the gentleman's amendment is carried, will it not leave it open to anybody to get a profit in any amount the board might allow?

Mr. PARRISH. No; I do not understand it to mean that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am afraid that is what it is.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARRISH. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I want to say to my colleague from Texas that the Senate bill has a provision down to the word "claims," on line 7, and Judge Payne, chairman of the Shipping Board, expressly stated in his opinion that there should be a provision against any profits. Now, I will state I had an amendment prepared to strike out, beginning with the word "except," in line 7, down to the word "case," in line 13, so as to provide specifically that no profit should be allowed, but if the gentleman's amendment goes on it will leave that discretionary with the Shipping Board as to whether they allow a profit.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the suggestion made by the gentleman I wish to ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment. Beginning on line 7, after the word "claims," strike out the balance of that line and lines 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, down to the word "case."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. PARRISH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I shall go ahead. Gentlemen of the committee, I am absolutely opposed to giving to any man any profit whatever. There has come before the Committee on Mines and Mining on similar relief bills that have been passed by other Congresses men with this unjust proposition. They say that after war was declared on April 6 and up until September of that year they made a profit, but at that time the Government requested them to enlarge their plants, and they did so and lost from September to the end of the war. They do not want the Government to take into consideration the fact that they made a profit from the beginning of war. My purpose in offering this amendment is to knock out of this bill all semblance of profit. If my amendment does not do that, I want to correct the amendment so it will do that. My view of it is that—the Shipping Board having the welfare of the American people at heart—if we knock out this provision there will be no profits allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more. I have not taken any time on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PARRISH. If we knock out all suggestion of profits the United States Shipping Board or those who settle this controversy will not allow any, and I do not believe we should allow any. It is not right. I want to say in all seriousness to the committee that prior to the signing of the armistice in 1918 all throughout our country representatives of the Government came before the cattlemen and farmers of our country and they said that it was necessary to have fats in order to win the war, and they urged the cattlemen of the West to go and buy cattle for feeding and fatten them so that the Government might have the fats in order to win the war. That was in September and October before the signing of the armistice in November. They not only said that but they urged the cattlemen and farmers to buy feeders and they did so and they paid high prices for them. The War Finance Corporation loaned the money and aided them in making those purchases. The armistice came on in November just after they had purchased these cattle. They had bought them at high prices. Then all the power of the Government, every possible force of the Government, was used to drive down the price of beef, which was in the interest of a majority of the people. They did drive down the price of beef, and the men who had acted as patriotically as ever a ship building contract man has acted were forced into bankruptcy and lost from $50 to $75 per head upon their cattle. Do you mean to tell them it is fair to settle with a man who made a shipbuilding contract, when the cattlemen and farmers of the western part of the country have done the things the Government asked them to do and because of that fact they have gone into bankruptcy—are you willing to say to them that they shall take out of the meager funds they have left and pay taxes to give these shipbuilding men a profit upon their contracts? I want to say that such a suggestion will not meet with the approval of the American people. [Applause.] It is repugnant to their sense of justice and right, and I hope every semblance of a profit will be stricken out of this bill. I ask for the adoption of my amendment, Mr. Chairman, because I believe that if it is adopted there will not be any profits included in any settlement that is made by the Shipping Board. Let us be fair and just to all the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. Let the substitute of the gentleman from Texas be reported first.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 7, after the word "claims" strike out the remaining part of line 7, and lines 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and all of line 13 down to and including the word "case."

The CHAIRMAN. Under a previous ruling of the Chair it is not in order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. On that I would like to call the Chair's attention to Rule XIX, which specifically, in words, says that it is in order. Under Rule XIX, page 359 of the Manual, it says:

When a motion or proposition is under consideration a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment in the way of a substitute, to which one amendment may be offered—

And so forth.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there? There is nobody objecting to your amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The Chair ruled it out of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman slightly confuses that rule. What is under consideration here is the Senate bill, to which there is now pending a committee amendment. A substitute to that amendment would be in order, but this is an amendment to that amendment, and a substitute to the amendment to the amendment is not in order. According to that way you can get to the fourth degree.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This is not the committee amendment that is being considered, but is an amendment by a member of the committee to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What is under consideration is a Senate bill, to which a committee amendment has been offered, and to which amendment an amendment is in order. You can not put in a substitute for an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to read to the gentleman further from this same rule. It says:

And it shall be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered.

If the amendment is in order originally, then the substitute is in order, and one amendment to the substitute.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think the gentleman will see in a moment. Here the Senate bill is under consideration. An amendment to that Senate bill is offered and is in order. A substitute to that amendment is in order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is what I am offering.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman is not. The gentleman is offering a substitute to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I can see no reason why the substitute should apply necessarily to the original amendment rather than to the amendment to the amendment. Does the gentleman contend that a substitute is not in order to an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly not, because that would be an amendment in the fourth degree. An amendment to the substitute is then in order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. A substitute simply takes the place of the amendment. If the amendment is in order, the substitute is in order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, if a point of order was not made. The amendment to the committee substitute is in order, but not a substitute to that amendment. A substitute to the original amendment is in order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This language says an amendment is in order, and an amendment to the substitute is in order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman has not offered a substitute to the committee amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] first offered, perhaps, his amendment as a substitute, but the point of order was not made as to it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is not required to offer his amendment as a substitute. His amendment is an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on this question. The committee amendment is sought to be amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH]. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] does not seek to amend, but sends to the desk something he offers as a substitute. It is not in any sense a substitute. It merely perfects language and makes a certain change in the language of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH]. It is not a substitute, and the Chair so holds.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a preferential amendment. I move to amend by striking out, on page 6, lines 7 and 8, the language:

Except upon completed ships or on ships partly constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 6, lines 7 and 8, after the word "claims" in line 7, strike out the words: "except upon completed ships or on ships partly constructed."

Mr. BLACK. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. We have an amendment pending.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the gentleman from Texas has moved to strike out the language on page 6, commencing on line 5:

And that no profits of any kind shall be included in the allowance of any such claims, except upon completed ships or on ships partly constructed.

Now, I have offered a preferential amendment to correct the text before we vote upon the proposition to strike it out.

Mr. BLACK. I think that is all right. I withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 26.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH].

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and the Chair will count.

The Chair proceeded to count.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland withdraws the point of no quorum.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH].

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I understand the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BLACK. That is not the amendment. The gentleman from Illinois did not offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, because that would be an amendment in the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, he proposes to strike out the limitation in the bill providing the allowance of profit?

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BENSON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland objects. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee and Mr. JONES of Texas rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. BARKLEY. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] having been adopted, eliminating profit on completed ships and ships partly constructed, does the situation now still leave in the proviso, beginning on page 8, providing for profits on partially constructed ships? The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois only struck out certain language, beginning with the word "except," on line 7, and ending with the word "constructed," on line 8. The proviso provides how the Shipping Board may allow for the partly constructed ships.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 4, line 21, after the word "claims," insert the words "based upon contracts, express or implied."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, it has been argued by those favoring this bill that no more was being sought than that to which the contractors were entitled, at least under an implied contract, and a comparison has been made between the bill under consideration and the Dent bill.

The Dent bill expressly provides that awards shall be based upon agreements, express or implied. I do not think that we should go any further at least than an implied contract. A number of speeches have been made appealing to the membership on the ground that these men who entered into these shipping contracts would be very greatly injured unless this bill were passed and they be given the relief it affords. It would be impossible for us to undertake to place in statu quo every citizen of this Republic who may have been injured, financially or otherwise, because of the war, or because of the unexpected termination thereof. We are not making any provision to pay manufacturers who constructed factories and obtained machinery and entered upon the manufacture of articles which would have been needed if the war had been continued, even though they were intending to sell them to the Government. They can not recover for any of that machinery or any of those buildings, nor even for any of those goods that were left on hand, unless they had an agreement, express or implied, to furnish such goods to the Government, and in that event they do not get any pay for the factories or machinery. It would be just as proper to pass a bill to make whole that large number of citizens who, by reason of the encouragement and importunities of Government officials, entered upon the growing of castor beans with the expectation of making a sale of them in case the war had continued and which they could have done, but which were left on their hands because the war terminated earlier than was expected. There are innumerable other instances where farmers patriotically responded to appeals, redoubled their efforts, and incurred heavy expense in an effort to help win the war, but who sustained heavy losses because of the unexpected termination of the war or because of other occurrences over which they had no control and for which they were in no sense responsible. Why neglect them and yet take care of these large contractors?

Comparison has been made with the Dent bill. You will recall that the statement has been made that there is nothing in this bill that is not in the Dent bill. I want to point out a single instance that occurred in my district, and I am sure that others know of similar instances. In the cases coming under the mineral provisions of the Dent bill men all over the country entered into contracts with the Government to mine needed ores of different kinds. One man in my district made a contract of that kind and spent several hundred dollars in excavating and mining in an effort to obtain a certain character of ore which was known to exist in that community. He was continuing this mining at the time the war terminated, and he was stopped in that work because of the armistice, and he filed his claim for the amount that he had expended under that contract, and the board denied him any award at all upon the ground that he had not been able to market any of the ores "in sufficient quantities to be of commercial importance," as was required under the provisions of the Dent bill itself. In other words, under the Dent bill, unless a man accomplished something, unless the Government was benefited in some material way, he can not recover under the express provisions of that bill. The Dent bill also expressly provides that there shall be no profit of any kind.

This bill goes far beyond the Dent bill in this and in other respects to which I have called attention, and I think it certainly ought to be amended; and if the gentlemen are correct in their statements that no effort is being made to pay out anything except what is based upon contract, either expressed or implied, I do not see how there can be any objection to the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, should the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] pass, it would simply defeat the purposes of the bill.

The purposes of the bill, as we all understand, are to reimburse these shipbuilders for their capital expenditure. Certainly if they were working under contracts, either expressed or implied, there would be no question raised as to the return of capital expenditure. If this amendment passes you are going to make the bill virtually useless because you let the Shipping Board go on and make the settlements that they can already legally make, so that there will be no reimbursement for the yards whatever, because we all know that when these men went into the business there was no contract, expressed or implied, to build yards.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, as just stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] is simply destructive of the whole bill. Already and without any legislation any shipbuilder has a perfect right to recover for contract prices, whether the contract be expressed or implied.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Just wait until I get through with this.

This bill is intended to cover cases which you can hardly call a contract, but which are described in the last part of page 5, where this language is employed:

That no claims shall be allowed and paid by said board unless it shall appear to its satisfaction that the expenditures made or obligations incurred by the claimant were made in good faith and upon assurances by the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or some officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board or corporation, or either of them, that reimbursement would be provided for in money or contracts for additional work.

That is an arrangement that could hardly be called a contract, and yet it was an assurance held out to these men upon which they went to work, upon which they were urged to go to work. It is because of the vagueness of that assurance, and yet the positive inducement of that assurance, that this bill is rendered just and necessary. If it were a valid and binding contract, there would be no bill needed.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a moment?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I understand, of course, that the Director of the Shipping Board would have the right to adjust legal contracts. I do not understand that we have got any law that would give him the right to pay and adjust an implied contract.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Why, the gentleman knows that in law an implied contract is as binding as an expressed contract.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, no; we have no such thing as implied contracts with the Government. You must enter into a written contract with the Government if it is to be legal.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The object of this bill is to meet conditions similar to those that prevail which have been covered by many other bills where a question might be raised as to the authority of the agent to make a contract binding on the Government. You may be right in saying that the Government is not legally bound by any implied contract. I know it is morally bound. Under the conditions then existing every patriotic impulse was called into effect, and this bill authorizes the payment of nothing unless it was for building ships under assurances by the Shipping Board that the people who incurred the expense would be compensated, yet you could not call it a contract; but common honesty demands that they be paid.

Mr. BENSON. Is it not a fact that the majority of these shipyards are new yards, where people went into these enterprises from patriotic motives, many of them putting all their money into these enterprises, and did it for Government purposes primarily and alone?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that that is the case with a vast majority of these people. Some of them had never had any shipbuilding experience, and went into it simply upon the urgent insistency of the Government and without contracts, but upon the assurance that they would be cared for—would be treated fairly.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. With this amendment on the bill this legislation is ineffective?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. With this amendment on the bill it is of absolutely no effect.

Mr. BENSON. It is killed.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes; it is worse than killed; it is made absurd.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order that debate on this amendment is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I move to amend page 6, beginning in line 8, by striking out after the word "provided" the language:

That on ships partly constructed, only such profits may be allowed on that part of the work of construction actually done at the time of the cancellation of contracts, or on work done thereafter on ships not canceled, as in the judgment of the Shipping Board are warranted by all the facts in the case.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 6, line 8, after the word "provided" strike out all down to and including the word "and" in line 13.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the committee has already agreed to an amendment to strike out the language which would allow profits upon completed ships or on ships partly constructed and leaving in a provision forbidding the payment of any profit, but there was a proviso in the original amendment intended to be a limitation upon profits allowed upon completed ships or partly completed ships, which would allow certain profits. I have offered an amendment to strike that language out of the bill, so that the bill will provide that no profits of any kind shall be included in the allowance of any of the claims filed under this bill. That follows the action that the committee has already taken.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a point of order against that amendment. It is the same amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH].

Mr. BARKLEY. The point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late. There has been debate upon the amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is not subject to a point of order anyhow.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think the members of the committee who reported this bill really slept on their rights while the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was presented. We certainly did not present the views that were presented to the committee in favor of the inclusion of that paragraph in our committee bill. It was stated to us, and it is true, that some of these contractors completed contracts. They built ships and delivered them under contracts with the Government, under which they received, I believe, $15,000 profit. It was not intended that this bill should upset or undo such contracts. They were not only moral obligations but legal obligations, and I do not believe the Congress has the right now to say that the Shipping Board, in settling claims, shall not allow a just and legal claim under a contract.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I have only five minutes. Now, I understand that the object of this amendment is this, that if a man had a contract under which he was to have built 12 ships for the Government, and upon each ship he was to be allowed a profit of $15,000 or $25,000 or $50,000, and in making that arrangement it was understood that $10,000 of that profit was to go to the amortization and settlement of the cost of the plant which he was induced to construct in order to build these ships, and if he built five ships, and has been paid for them according to contract, when the Government cancels the balance of the contract, which was that they would give him enough ships to build so that he could amortize and pay for the building of his plant, then the Government would make him apply all his profits on completed ships instead of part of such profits, as agreed, to the amortization of his plant cost. The Government, because it has the power, says to these men with whom it had contracts, we will cancel your contract and we will not allow you any profit whatever on what you have actually done.

Not only that, but we will take what profits you have received on work done and apply it to your losses on work which you performed under our promise to reimburse you. That may be a favor to the Government, but it is not square with the contractor, and I believe the Government ought to be square with these people and pay them the profits on executed contracts which they are entitled to under the contract and in law, and then reimburse them for expenditures made on other work which was done at the request of the Government and under the Government's assurance of reimbursement.

This bill as drawn is just and fair and would meet every moral obligation that the Government had with these gentlemen, and we ought not to have adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. I do not know that any argument would have prevented its adoption, and I do not know what our position is now, except to leave it to be settled in conference.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 9, page 6, the word "only"; in line 11, after the word "thereafter," insert "at the request of the Shipping Board"; and in line 12, after the word "canceled," insert the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 9, after the word "constructed," strike out the word "only"; in line 11, after the word "thereafter," insert "at the request of the Shipping Board"; and, in line 12, after the word "canceled," insert the word "and."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment, if adopted, would make the paragraph read as follows:

Provided, That on ships partly constructed such profits may be allowed on that part of the work of construction actually done at the time of the cancellation of contracts, or on work done thereafter at the request of the Shipping Board on ships not canceled and as in the judgment of the Shipping Board are warranted by all the facts in the case.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when the armistice was signed a number of these contracts were immediately canceled. On our entry into the war the Shipping Board and others representing the Government called a meeting of various gentlemen throughout the country, men who were not engaged in the business of building ships, and in answer to a cry that went up from England that the three great needs of the Allies were, first, ships; second, ships; and third, ships. In answer to this we undertook to build ships in order to enable us to win the war. These gentlemen assembled and were urged to embark in that enterprise. They undertook to build them, with the assurance given that they would be given contracts enough, at least, to make them whole. They did not wait to get contracts, either contracts in fact or implied contracts. They went to work to build the ships to supply the need that was foremost. They built the ways on which to construct the ships, and were going forward rapidly in building ships. The armistice came, and the contracts were canceled.

Now, certainly they ought to be permitted to have a reasonable profit on the ships they had actually built. The Shipping Board said we will stop building some ships and let them continue others, according to which is the cheapest for the Government. If it is more than half completed or three-quarters completed, the Government can make more out of it for them to be permitted to complete the building of the ships. But where it would cost more to complete the ships than it was worth they canceled it. They went to the shipbuilders and said, "Here is a ship that is not quite complete, and we want you to go on and finish it," and they did go on and finish it. Why ought not they to be permitted to have a reasonable profit? And their profits were not beyond reasonable. I submit that anything else than that is unfair. The Government does not want to repudiate any of its contracts or any of its indebtedness. These gentlemen were induced by the Government at the earnest solicitation of representatives of the Government to go into the building of ships, men not engaged in that business, but they did it as a patriotic duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment. The amendment as proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi would go further than the committee amendment does. I think there is no question but that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois should be adopted; that will leave the bill in this regard in the same condition as it passed the Senate. In that connection I wish further to call attention to the fact, as shown by the hearings, that Chairman Payne of the Shipping Board more than once stated that he did not think any provision should be made to allow these contractors any profit. He said that if the Government was willing to step in and take their ways and yards off their hands and make them whole, they ought to be satisfied. I think that is undoubtedly true. If this bill passes in its present form, men who had not finished a single ship will be paid $200,000 or $300,000 or $400,000 for their shipways. These shipways involved in these amortization propositions, for which they are not entitled to pay under the contracts, as shown by the hearings, cost $100,000, $500,000, $600,000, or $700,000. Some of them that had not earned a profit upon a single ship, who had not completed a ship, and others who had completed one or two or three, will be paid these sums by the Government if this bill becomes a law. Is this Congress going to take that position—that we should go beyond all law and all contracts and pay them for these shipyards, for which they are not entitled to be paid under any existing law or under any contract, written or oral, express or implied, and at the same time pay all the profits to which they would have been entitled under their contracts?

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. I would ask the gentlemen on the committee if this amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi is adopted would we not thereby overcome the effect of the amendment just adopted, offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and allow profits to be considered?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes. It would go further even than the committee amendment. I have already made that statement.

Mr. PARRISH. Unless we vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, profits will be included in the bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Absolutely.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman asked that question of members of the committee, I will simply say that the amendment which the gentleman from Mississippi offers is that work done after the armistice, at the instance of the Shipping Board, shall be paid for according to the contract of the Shipping Board, and I think it is eminently right that it should be.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in response to the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], under the existing law these contractors can recover every penny that they are entitled to for the construction of the ships, either in whole or in part, just the same as if they had constructed them for an individual, or just the same as if the contract had been canceled by an individual corporation. There is no controversy about that, and every one of them who was willing to settle according to his contract and according to law has already been paid, to the extent of some 70 in number. It is not a question of cutting out the profits for those who are entitled to them under their contracts, but it is a question of going further than Congress has ever gone and paying out, in my opinion, some $50,000,000 of the people's money when there is no authority either in the contracts or under existing law.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Chairman, the people who are absolutely opposed to this bill——

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate has been exhausted upon this amendment.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Chairman, I hope everybody in favor of this bill will vote for the amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Everybody in favor of profits will vote for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUMPHREYS) there were—ayes 31, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROWE) there were—ayes 63, noes 24.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 7, line 8, after the word "year" insert: "The Attorney General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to assign counsel to represent the Government and protect its interests with regard to claims filed under the provisions of this act."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This seems to be an amendment to the second paragraph of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The whole committee amendment is open to amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the reason for offering this amendment——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is not germane to the section or any provision of the bill. This bill has nothing to do with the exercise of any function or authority by the office of the Attorney General of the United States. It is a bill that relates exclusively to the Shipping Board and to the settlement of contracts with the Shipping Board by the contractors. It is an absolutely new thing to propose an exercise of authority by a different executive branch of the Government, requiring the Attorney General, who has no connection as a matter of law with the Shipping Board, to assert jurisdiction over the activities or, at least, a branch of the Shipping Board. It is not germane to this section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the investigation of these claims and their liquidation and payment. The bill has numerous provisions with regard to the manner in which those investigations may be made.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Was it not in testimony before the committee that the Shipping Board itself has its own attorneys for the purpose of advising it with reference to its obligations and duties and assisting it in making investigations and things of that sort; that they had attorneys employed and paid a regular salary for that purpose?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not understand it that way. I understand that they have solicitors and counselors in the department, but I do not know of any evidence to the effect that they conducted these investigations or assembled evidence in behalf of the Government or represented the Government's interests at these hearings. As I understand, they are counselors in an advisory capacity.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the provisions of the original Shipping Board act authorizing them to employ not only clerical assistance but legal assistance, Judge Payne himself was chief counsel for the United States Shipping Board.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman contend that that gives him the right——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, let us have this discussion confined to the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as I started to say, this bill contains various different provisions as to the manner in which these claims are to be considered and the basis upon which they are to be allowed. It also provides that if these claimants are dissatisfied they may go into court.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks the present Democratic Shipping Board needs watching?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not think it needs watching any more than the interests of the people need watching in every court in the land. The Government, which is representing the people, has counsel in every district court and the various other courts to protect the public interests.

And you may rest assured that these claimants for these millions of dollars will have able counsel to work up their cases and present them before the board, and I think it is a small concession to say that the Government shall likewise have somebody there to represent its interests and to see that no more is allowed than is entitled to be allowed even under this far-reaching and extraordinary bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] seeks to direct the Attorney General to perform certain duties and to do certain things. This act is to liquidate and settle claims of wooden-ship builders against the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee seeks to direct another department of the Government to do certain things. It is clearly not within the purview of the legislation, and the point of order of the gentleman from Alabama is sustained.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 8, after the word "upon" insert "an agreement, expressed or implied."

Mr. BLACK. Now, Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman comes too late; the gentleman has begun discussion.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But he has not finished a single sentence.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, it would not be subject to the point of order anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is entitled to proceed with the discussion.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] offered a very similar amendment; in fact, I think it his amendment had been adopted that mine would have been unnecessary. The effect of the amendment, if adopted, will be to restrict adjustments under this bill to such claims as are based upon an express or implied agreement. Now, the gentleman from Texas, my honored colleague [Mr. HARDY], stated in the debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee that if we adopt a provision of this kind it would kill the bill. Well, I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that if this bill contemplates the settlement of any other class of claims except those that were authorized either by express or implied agreement, the bill ought to be killed. During the time of the agitation for the building of wooden ships I recall that the secretary of the chamber of commerce of one of the cities in my State came into my office and asked that I accompany a delegation of Texans to the Shipping Board to see if they could not secure some contracts to build wooden ships, and I dare say that if this bill is passed that shipyard will come before the Shipping Board and claim that it was solicited and induced to build ships.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, when we passed the bill that authorized the Secretary of War to adjust our war contracts we did not say, "Mr. Secretary of War, go out and pay millions of dollars of our money wherever you can find a claim based on a request or a demand of some agency representing the Government." We confined him to the settlement of transactions supported by an express or implied agreement. The word "request" as used in this bill is a mighty broad word. The word has been legally defined to be "asking for anything, the expression of a desire." It has been defined in the case of Kreider's Estate, 61, Atlantic Reporter, to be the expression of a desire. Well, of course, the Government of the United States expressed a desire that we have wooden ships built and steel ships built and every other kind of a ship, but I undertake to say that we ought not to write a bill that will give the Shipping Board the authority to adjust any other kind of transactions except those that are bottomed upon either an expressed or implied agreement.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. RAKER. On page 5, line 8, of this bill it is stated that this shall be done upon request or demand. Now, is it the gentleman's understanding that the legal interpretation as now placed upon those words "request and demand" by the various courts are applicable to this bill?

Mr. BLACK. Why, certainly. There is no peculiar technical use of the word "request" in the language of the bill, and it would be interpreted in the ordinary meaning of the word, and the safe thing for us to do is to write into this bill the same words that we wrote into the bill when we authorized the Secretary of War to adjust the war contracts, and here is what we said in that bill:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, expressed or implied.

Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], in the speech that he made in opposition to a similar amendment, said that under the present law the Shipping Board would have the authority to adjust and pay an implied contract. Well, I would like to know where the gentleman gets authority for that, because the United States statutes provide that the Secretary of War or any other official of the United State Government, in order to bind the Government, must enter into a written contract, and it describes the formality that must be used in entering into these contracts, and it is for the very reason that under the law we now have no right to bind the United States Government except by a written contract that legislation of this kind is necessary. I am willing to vote for a bill which will authorize the Shipping Board to adjust and settle all claims which are based upon an agreement, expressed or implied, entered into with the Shipping Board or its authorized representatives, but I am not willing to go beyond that and for the reason that this bill goes entirely too far, I shall not support it.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the amendment——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is this debate limited to the gentlemen from Texas?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I hope this is not coming out of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. They are handling it very ably.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know they are; but I only wanted to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is a member of the committee and is entitled to preference. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment, as I understand it, offered by the gentleman from Texas, is just a confusion of words and an expression of opposition to the bill generally. If a request or demand of the United States Shipping Board is not an agreement, either expressed or implied, to pay a reasonable compensation for the doing of the thing requested, it would certainly imply such; and surely such a request, accompanied by an assurance of compensation, would be an implied agreement to pay. If I asked the gentleman from Texas to do something for me, assuring him that I would reimburse him or that I would compensate him for the doing, that would be an implied agreement. The language in the bill is that the claim must be based upon a request or demand of the United States Shipping Board, and so forth, accompanied by the assurance that they will be reimbursed for the expenses incurred. Now, that may not constitute an implied agreement; it may not constitute an express agreement, in the gentleman's opinion who has just offered this amendment, but in my opinion it does, and the gentleman's amendment simply balls up the well-worded text of the bill and incorporates into it a lot of additional phrases and paragraphs which do not clarify the purpose of the bill, the purpose of the bill being plainly shown by first providing:

That no claim shall be paid unless it is based upon a request or demand of the United States Shipping Board.

And so forth, and—

And provided further, That no claims shall be allowed and paid by said board unless it shall appear to its satisfaction that the expenditures made or obligations incurred by the claimant were made in good faith and upon assurances by the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or some officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instruction of said board or corporation, or either of them, that reimbursement would be provided for in money or contracts for additional work.

If that would not be an implied contract, if it would not be an implied agreement, to compensate these men, there is no such thing as an implied agreement. But it does not meet the requirements, perhaps, of a contract with an officer clothed by law with power to make such a contract in the way it was made, and so constitutes perhaps only a moral obligation. And the gentleman wants to wipe out every obligation the Government has assumed by its agents, the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, is going to the citizens and urging and demanding, and sometimes almost under duress forcing them, to utilize their facilities for shipbuilding unless such obligation is in form and substance a valid, binding contract enforceable at law.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK. What I wanted to ask the gentleman is this: If the words "agreement, express or implied" mean the same as "request," why does not the gentleman use them?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. They did not call it an agreement. They did not make it in the form of an agreement; they made a request and demand, and gave an assurance, which was an implied agreement, and you might quibble as to whether or not an agreement was made. But the meaning is plain. The Shipping Board went to these men, made their request, and assured them that they would be reimbursed, and I call it an agreement. Our committee endeavored simply to word the bill so as to apply to the actual conditions and be easily understood by everybody.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. PARRISH. Let us have it reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again read.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLACK. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 22, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 7, line 8, after the word "year," insert: "The Shipping Board is hereby authorized and directed to assign counsel to represent the Government and to protect its interest in the investigation and presentation of claims under the provisions of this act."

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Do I understand that the committee accepts the amendment?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. We all think that amendment is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 7, line 9, after the word "year," strike out all of section 2.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, has that section been read?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been read.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a little statement.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I would like to make this suggestion to the gentleman: You say after the word "year." You put an amendment in just now——

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It is to strike out section 2.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Do not say after the word "year."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I just used one of these forms.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TINCHER. What portion of this bill has been read?

The CHAIRMAN. All of it has been read.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, my amendment as it has been read perhaps is incorrect in that an amendment has been adopted after the word "year." I want to modify my amendment so as to simply provide that it strike out section 2.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The committee does not object to that.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this bill. The amendment that struck out the section was unfortunate for those who expended the money and should have reasonable compensation.

I call the committee's attention to the fact that when the act of March 2, 1919, was passed it was intended to cover the war contracts and the mineral claimants who expended their money when it was necessary for the Government. The shipbuilding concerns along the eastern, southern, and western coasts are seeking relief by this legislation. I simply want to call your attention to this bill of yours. I believe you ought to have it. I believe these men ought to be compensated, but I want to call your attention to the bill H. R. 13091, reported by Mr. GARLAND from the Committee on Mines and Mining, that provides relief for the mining interests of the United States that expended their money and their time in the same way that these shipping contractors expended theirs; and when you vote for this legislation, which I believe you will, I do not want you to forget that there are other interests in the same position in this country and that require relief and consideration, merely from the fact that they happen to be in the interior and not upon the waterways where the ship industry is located.

And I ask unanimous consent, in this connection, that I may insert in the RECORD a copy of the bill H. R. 13091, which involves the same principle—the general provisions. It simply authorizes these people to go into the Court of Claims, as you are authorizing in this bill, to the end that they may have the right to adjudicate it by the court, and no man can object to a man appearing in our courts to have his case adjudicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to insert certain printed matter in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. The following is the bill to which I have referred:

A bill (H. R. 13091) to provide further for the relief of war minerals producers, and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919.

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919, is hereby amended by striking out the words "that the decision of said Secretary shall be conclusive and final, subject to the limitations hereinafter provided" and the semicolon following such words.

The fourth paragraph of such section is hereby amended by inserting after the words "That nothing in this section shall be construed to confer jurisdiction upon any court to entertain a suit against the United States" a comma, and the following words: "except as provided in section 6."

SEC. 2. That such act of March 2, 1919, is hereby further amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. (a) That any claimant who has filed a claim under section 5 within three months after March 2, 1919, whose claim has been rejected, or who is not satisfied with the decision, adjustment, liquidation, or payment of net losses by the Secretary of the Interior under such section, may file a petition in the Court of Claims for the final determination of such losses. If before this section takes effect the Secretary has made a final decision of such claim, the petition must be filed within 90 days after this section takes effect; and in all other cases within 90 days after such final decision is made.

"(b) The Court of Claims is hereby given jurisdiction to hear such claims de novo and to render judgment in accordance with section 5 for such amount as it finds to be justly and equitably due to the claimant in adjustment, liquidation, or payment of such losses.

"(c) Any payments made to the claimant under section 5 shall be certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Court of Claims, and after judgment has been rendered by the court no further payments shall be made under section 5 unless in conformity with such judgment.

"(d) The receipt of any amount, or the giving of any acquittance or release, by the claimant under section 5 shall not be a bar to the remedy provided for by this section; but if any amount has been awarded and paid under section 5, the petition may not be considered until the petitioner executes a bond in an amount and with sureties satisfactory to the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, conditioned that if the court finds that a less amount is due than has been awarded by the Secretary of the Interior, the claimant will forthwith pay to the United States so much of the amount received under section 5 as is in excess of the amount found due by the court. Any amount thus paid to the United States shall be credited to the funds available for the paying of awards under section 5 and of judgments under this section.

"(e) Upon the filing of a petition in the Court of Claims under this section, the Secretary of the Interior shall forthwith certify to the court all the testimony taken in the case and all documentary evidence introduced or considered by the Secretary or any commission appointed by his authority, and such testimony and evidence shall be used and considered by the court upon the hearing and trial of the claim, and shall be given such weight as the court may determine.

"(f) Each judgment rendered by the Court of Claims under this section shall be certified by the chief clerk of the court to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the claimant the amount of such judgment, out of the revolving fund created by section 6 of the act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported, or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply,' approved October 5, 1918, which fund shall remain available for such purpose until all such judgments have been paid: Provided, That when the amount of such judgments so paid, plus the payments made to claimants and the expenses of administration under section 5 of this act (after allowance for amounts repaid to the United States under subdivision (d) of this section), reach the sum of $8,500,000 no further payments from such revolving fund shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury under this section, or by the Secretary of the Interior under section 5."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 5.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 4, line 25, after the word "claim," insert "as to which the claimant may be entitled to an award under the provisions of this act."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct the attention of the members of the committee to this: When I offered the first amendment to strike out the words "and directed" other members of this committee referred to this language, which went on later to state "and said board shall adjust and liquidate each claim upon such terms as it shall determine from the facts in the case to be just and equitable." But I wish to call attention to the further fact that this language, beginning in line 25, page 4, states that "said board shall adjust and liquidate each claim."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let us be fair. The bill provides, "Said board shall then liquidate such claim upon such terms as they shall determine." It does not mean that they must liquidate the claims. It must be done on such terms as the board shall determine. Is not that a fair construction?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not think so. That is a difference of opinion between the gentleman from Illinois and myself. I think the language in a statute must be literally construed. It reads "shall * * * liquidate each claim." It means liquidate, if it means what it says.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman think it fair to take half a dozen words out of a sentence and conclude from those half a dozen words what the whole thing means, or is it not fair to take the whole language?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Well, that is a meaningless question. I want to ask the gentleman if he has any objection to its being specifically shown that the intention is as you say it is, which I say is not true? What is the objection? Why can anybody object to this amendment? It will certainly clarify the situation and show that it is not the intention of the Congress to pay a claim unless it is one which should be allowed under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does the gentleman understand that in legal parlance a claim means a contention, or does a claim mean some right? In legal construction the very word "claim" does not mean anything that a man claims, but it means a right, an account, a just claim. When you say they shall settle a claim you do not mean that they are to settle each party's contention. The very language there conveys the idea that a man must have a claim before it is settled, not that a man may make a claim, but that he must have one.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It does not say, "investigate," but it says "adjust, settle, and liquidate." That assumes that he is entitled to something under his claim, and all that is to be determined by the board is the amount that is due on the claim.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The amount that the claimant says is due—that would be the claim under your contention.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Oh, no.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Does the gentleman from Tennessee contend that the language used in lines 19, 20, and 21 of page 4, "that the United States Shipping Board be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, adjust, liquidate, and pay the claims of individuals," and so forth, means that every claim must be paid?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I think so, as I have previously stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment that I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk. Am I recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not been recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 8, line 3, after the word "plant," strike out the period and insert ", whenever the board shall be of opinion that the claimant is entitled to be compensated in whole or in part for such shipbuilding plant, machinery, appliances, or material."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the reason for offering this amendment is this: Section 3 as it now reads assumes that every shipbuilding yard and the machinery and buildings and material will be paid for under this act in every instance when claim is made therefor. Now, while it is authorized, I think it will undoubtedly result, as members of the committee will probably concede, that there will probably be some claims in which they are not entitled to recover for those specified items, even under the extraordinary provisions of this bill, and this amendment simply limits the provisions as they now exist so as to apply them whenever the board shall be of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to be compensated, in whole or in part, for such shipbuilding plant, appliances, or material.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. Does not this section just say that the board shall take into consideration those appliances, not that they shall allow for them positively but that they shall take them into consideration?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It says that "they shall, among other things, take them into consideration."

Mr. EDMONDS. It is a matter for them to determine what is the right thing to take into consideration and what is not the right thing to take into consideration. They can determine that for themselves.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Under other circumstances I think the contention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] would be entirely correct, but when it says they shall take it into consideration I think it should be modified by the language that I have offered in my amendment, and it certainly can do no harm.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Is not this a direction that they shall take into consideration and charge a set-off in favor of the Government?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Why should there not be a set-off of the material as against the claim?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. This authorizes the Government to pay, say, $300,000 for an old shipbuilding plant, and they shall give the claimant credit for the actual value of the salvage, which may be $25,000 or $30,000, and I do not think they ought to be specifically instructed to pay for those things under all circumstances, but only in the case indicated in my amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Only when there is an award in favor of the claimant is it directed that any of the material that the claimant has must be set off against the claim and the Government receive credit for it and deduct it from the amount paid to the claimant. Certainly it should be mandatory in order that the Government may be protected and given the full benefit of the set-off that the Government may have.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I simply propose in my amendment to limit it to cases where they are entitled to be paid for these properties. Of course, the Government should be given credit for the small salvage value of a plant for which it is to pay full value, but what I am objecting to is the assumption that the Government shall be directed to pay for such plants, except in the instances described in my proposed amendment.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say that the gentleman [Mr. LEHLBACH] who propounded the question a moment ago to the gentleman from Tennessee has presented the real issue, and I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] must be laboring under some erroneous impression, because this section 3 is only a proviso to the effect that where the board is awarding a sum to somebody upon a claim under this bill they shall deduct from any allowances they may make the value of the shipyard that he holds back or has left on hand and also the value of machinery and material on hand as an offset. I can not see how anybody could fail to see that clearly, and I can not see how it could be made more clear than it is made in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TINCHER: Page 8, line 3, after the word "plant," insert a new section, to be known as section 5:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, determine, and pay the amount of the actual loss sustained by any person, firm, association, or corporation that owned actual wheat of the 1917 crop"——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The amendment has been read far enough to show that it is patently subject to a point of order.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be read.

Mr. GARNER. What is the use of having the amendment read if some gentleman is going to make the point of order against it, and it has already been read sufficiently to show that it is subject to a point of order?

Mr. TINCHER. My idea——

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. TINCHER. I do; and I desire to have the amendment read, for fear that if the Chair should make an erroneous ruling on the point of order Members will not know what they are voting on if I should appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his amendment he read. Is there objection?

Several Members objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BLACK. I make the point of order that the gentleman has a right to have his amendment read.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course he has.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Texas is overruled. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] will proceed to discuss the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. This is in behalf of the farmers.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I propose to discuss this point of order. The chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and numerous other members of that committee have explained in this House this afternoon at least half a dozen times that the object of this legislation is to permit the United States Government to settle a moral obligation that it owes to certain contractors and people who built ships, contemplating selling them to the Government, but who did not have any legal right to collect.

Mr. BLANTON. Who had been seduced by the Shipping Board.

Mr. TINCHER. Who, as has been suggested to me, were in a way influenced to build these plants.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I will say that the committee has never——

Mr. TINCHER. I decline to yield. I have offered an amendment that is germane to a bill of this kind and character, and for the purpose of fully informing the Chair of the contents of the amendment I will read it. It is offered as section 5 of this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. TINCHER. I do not yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman does not have to yield. I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes a point of order, which he will state.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman can not do indirectly what he can not do directly.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. TINCHER. As I understand my position in this matter, I have offered an amendment. A point of order has been made to the amendment. The Chair has sustained it, and I can not read my amendment so as to show the Chair wherein he is in error in his ruling. I want to say to the chairman that this bill has for its purpose——

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield

Mr. TINCHER. This bill has for its purpose the settlement of legitimate moral obligations of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TINCHER. No; I decline to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. TINCHER. I would not want to discriminate between two gentlemen from Texas. I can not yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I have a question that I wish to ask the gentleman.

Mr. TINCHER. I have not yielded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to say that the amendment is germane to the bill, in that it proposes to pay to a certain portion of the patriotic population of America 60 cents a bushel on every bushel of wheat which was confiscated by the Government by law, and we are not asking in this amendment to have the Government pay for anything that it did not receive full value for. We are not asking the Government to settle some imaginary claim, but asking it to pay a legitimate charge against the Treasury of this Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman ought to discuss the point of order, and I think it is the duty of the Chair to see that he does.

Mr. BLANTON. He is discussing it very fluently. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. TINCHER. This is my first term in Congress, and I may not be up on the rules as much as the gentleman is.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Let me suggest to my friend from Kansas that in order to facilitate——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GARNER. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that in order to facilitate the matter he get unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and insert his bill and let us go on with business.

Mr. TINCHER. No; I never have extended my remarks in the RECORD. I have always spoken what was printed in the RECORD as coming from me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This is a bill authorizing and directing the United States Shipping Board to adjust and pay the claims of wooden-ship builders arising out of the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes.

Mr. TINCHER. I understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has offered an amendment providing for the liquidation of the claims of wheat growers. This amendment is not germane to the bill before the committee, and the Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 4, after section 3, add the following, to be designated as section 4:

"Title 1, general provisions, definitions, section 1. This section may be cited as the World War adjusted compensation act."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there has not been a sufficient portion of the amendment read for the Chair to intelligently pass upon whether it is germane to the legislation or not.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not. The amendment I offer is what is known as the Fordney soldiers' bonus bill for adjusted compensation. The bill we are considering here to-day is a bill for adjusted compensation for shipbuilding contractors. The only difference is that by the amendment I offer we are adjusting the compensation of a class of people in this country that the Government of the United States really owes something to, and it will improve the bill. [Applause.] The amendment is germane to the bill; this seems to be elementary. [Laughter.] It seems to me that Congress is ready to go out of its way to hunt up people and inquire if the Government does not owe them something. We are legislating for the payment of all kinds of claims, many of which in my judgment are questionable. We are now told in the closing hours of this session that the solid Democratic minority on that side and 35 or 40 Republicans on this side have joined to defeat all bonus legislation. [Cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It is quite obvious that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is not in order and the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 8, after the word "upon" strike out the words "a request or demand," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "an express or implied contract."

Mr. BENSON. I make the point of order on that that we have passed that provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled because this is being considered as one amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that we have voted on the same proposition. This is the third time that it is sought to insert "contracts express or implied."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the provision of the amendment offered by my colleague did not strike out the words request or demand, and therefore left an entirely different meaning to the language. The amendment that my colleague offered said "express or implied," but left in the bill the words request or demand, so that under its terms you could have adjusted compensation not only on an express or implied contract but on a request or demand. Now, I move to strike out the words request or demand and limit it entirely to contracts express or implied.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. In reference to the point of order, in order to come within the objection contemplated by the rule that the amendment has been offered heretofore, the amendments must be identical. This is not identical with the former amendment, and therefore the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] is overruled.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this: Under the terms of this bill as written, if the Government simply made a request for a wooden ship and a man went ahead and built the ship, he is entitled to compensation, regardless of whether there was anything in the nature of a contract. I live in a wheat section. There were thousands of bushels of wheat last year that rotted on the ground because there was no way to move the wheat to market. The Government requested the people to plant and grow wheat. They doubled their acreage, and the yield was far beyond the granary facilities. If it is right on a request to build a wooden ship, to compensate the builder in the absence of any contract expressed or implied, it is right for people in my district, where the wheat rotted on the ground, to come in and claim compensation because the Government requested them to plant wheat, which wheat rotted because of lack of a market due to a car shortage.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has the gentleman observed that it is not the request or demand of the Government generally?

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is what I am complaining about. You are favoring the ship-building people and are not favoring the man who produced.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the gentleman will observe that this demand must be made by the Shipping Board, or some one authorized to speak for the Shipping Board.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Well, high officials fully authorized requested us to plant wheat in this country, and the Congress of the United States passed a law guaranteeing them returns on the wheat, and yet those people could not get the return for their wheat, because there were not transportation facilities to get it to market. They sold wheat in my section for $1.25 per bushel, because there was no market for it. How are you going to justify paying the man because the Shipping Board requested him to build a wooden ship and not compensate the wheat grower when the United States through its officials made the same request on him? I say that the bill should be killed, because if you are going to pay people all over the country because the Government requested them to do a certain thing you should pay them all, and if you did that you would have enough claims to bankrupt this, the richest and finest Government that was ever fashioned by human intelligence. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 1 of the committee amendment.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am against this bill. [Applause.] I am against it because it is wrong in principle and because it is wrong in form. I wish to call your attention to the fact that you can not by reading this bill tell upon what state of facts any claimant's claim will be based. There is absolutely nothing in the bill that indicates upon what ground any claimant shall recover from the Government.

The only thing which indicates in the bill from beginning to end upon what there is a right to recover is in the last section, which limits somewhat the claim. The next thing that is the matter with it is that the board that shall conduct the operations out of which the alleged claims are to come is the very agency which suggests the preparation and presentation of this bill. The Government has no right of appeal, but they do camouflage the matter, as will be seen if you will turn to page 6 of the bill, line 17, where they pretend to say that they have given the Government a right to appeal from a recovery. Lines 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, page 6, down to the word "settlement," and including it, permit an investigation, but it is by bodies or agencies which could not possibly secure a return to the Government of anything unlawfully taken. From line 21, including the word "nor" to the word "fact," in line 1, on page 7, you find the opportunity granted to the board, which wishes this act passed, to institute a suit to recover in case of fraud or mistakes, and for no other reason. You have already amended your bill to permit the same board to select the attorney to represent the Government.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Chairman, in opposition to the amendment I desire to say that if adopted it would destroy the bill. Certainly this House wants to be fair to the men who built the wooden ships. The committee voted 20 to 1 to report this bill in its present form. The gentleman from Nebraska is absolutely against paying these claims. Very many of them were constructed under contract—most of them were. The builders acted in the interest of the Nation. They believed, and the Shipping Board believed, that we must build wooden ships, steel ships, and every kind of ship to carry our goods and soldiers to the other side. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. EVANS of Nebraska) there were—ayes 35, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 8, line 3, after the word "plant," insert the following proviso, to wit: "Provided further, That should the Shipping Board find in the United States anybody else other than farmers and soldiers who want some of the public money, to hand out to them all they want."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out sections 2 and 3 of the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the adoption of the committee amendment as amended in Committee of the Whole.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to strike out sections 2 and 3 of the Senate amendment.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk renumber the sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has that right anyway.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to strike out sections 2 and 3 of the Senate bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I thought I heard the Chair just now state that the question was to be taken upon adopting the amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question was on adopting the committee amendment as amended in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WINGO. The amendments of the Committee of the Whole House? What does the Chair mean by that? Of course, the Chair did not intend that.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment had to be agreed to by formal motion inasmuch as the entire bill was stricken out.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, is the committee amendment one amendment as reported by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am not a parliamentarian, but as I understand the status of the matter, in the beginning the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] made the motion to strike out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and substitute the House bill as one amendment. That motion has been pending while we have been perfecting that amendment. The gentleman from Massachusetts now calls up his original motion and it has been put and adopted, as I understand. I think that the motion of the gentleman to rise and report the bill as amended is in order.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that the appropriate motion is to report the Senate bill as amended?

Mr. WALSH. But we have not got to the point of reporting it as yet.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, to clear this matter up, there is but one amendment pending. That amendment has been amended in a number of places. As it stands now there is but one amendment pending, although it has been patched considerably. That ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Then there is nothing left but to strike out the sections which the gentleman from Massachusetts gave notice that he would move to strike out.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I move to strike out sections 2 and 3 of the Senate bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, section 2 of the Senate bill ought to be read, and then the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to strike out ought to be put and voted on.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to strike out sections 2 and 3 of the bill as reported from the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that——

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I think a recurrence to the Clerk's notes will show that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] had moved to amend section 1 of the Senate bill, and later on made the motion in this form, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and insert in lieu thereof the House bill.

Mr. WALSH. If that motion was made it was not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That a report of all operations under this section, including receipts and disbursements, shall be made to Congress on or before the first Monday in December of each year: Provided, That in the event any claimant shall be dissatisfied with any allowance or award made by said board pursuant hereto, such claimant may appeal therefrom with respect thereto to the Court of Claims, which is hereby given jurisdiction to make such allowances and awards, in the case of such appeals, as it may deem just and equitable.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, just one word concerning this amendment, or policy, rather, that the House and Senate have gotten into in reference to passing bills of this character. Now, we strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute what is known as the House bill and ask for a conference. Then the gentlemen will come into the House and ask unanimous consent to send this bill to conference, and under the rules governing the House and under the rules governing the Senate we delegate to the conferees the right to make law. They can put anything on earth that is germane to this bill on the conference report and no one can get up on the floor of the House and exercise the right to make a point of order against it, whereas if we had amended the Senate bill as we ought to have done instead of striking out all after the enacting clause, and if we had put in the proper amendments, it could have gone to conference and the conferees would have been limited to the substantial differences between the two Houses. But in going to conference on this bill now under present conditions they will have absolutely plenary power to write the law which we will have to vote up or down, and anything germane to the House bill or Senate bill will be in order. It is a bad way to legislate. The Senate also has gotten into the habit of striking out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and inserting the Senate bill, thereby delegating to the conferees of the two Houses power to make law, which ought not to be done.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, as the chairman of a committee representing the House, I try not to do anything unfair, whether we get any legislation or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out the section.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I ask that section 3 be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That nothing in this section shall be construed to confer jurisdiction upon any court to entertain a suit against the United States: Provided, That in determining the net losses of any claimant the Shipping Board shall, among other things, take into consideration and charge to the claimant the then market value of any such plants or the lumber or materials on hand belonging to the claimant and acquired to be used in the construction of any wooden-ship building plant, and also the salvage or usable value of any machinery or other appliances which may be claimed was purchased to equip any wooden-ship building plant, for the purpose of complying with the request or demand of the agencies of the Government above mentioned in the manner aforesaid: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be held or construed to delay or excuse prompt settlement of any claims that can be settled under existing law.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 3.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, several times this afternoon during debate it has been stated that up to the time the Hon. John Barton Payne was made the head of the United States Shipping Board a large number of these claims had been settled, but upon his request the proposed legislation has been sought because he has refused to sanction the further settlement of the claims submitted on the part of the wooden-ship builders. I have the honor and pleasure of knowing John Barton Payne for upward of 25 years. I know him to be a fair, honest, and liberal man, and I am satisfied that if he has refused to settle these claims he had a good and valid reason for doing so. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. And it is for that reason I am opposed to this legislation, for I am satisfied that if there had been any merit or justification in making allowance he would have gladly followed the footsteps of his predecessors.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I have not the time; if the gentleman will give me five minutes more time I will yield to all. You gentlemen on this side—the Republican side—have for months been preaching and advocating economy, economy, objecting to needed appropriations that meant the expenditure of only a few thousand dollars, and here, without any justification, you are bringing in a bill which means the expenditure of over $25,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Maybe $50,000,000.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; it may be even $50,000,000; the committee has admitted it may reach the sum of $25,000,000, and still I find only one or two Members on the Republican side who are opposed to this measure authorizing an outlay of millions of dollars. True, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has made a speech against the bill, but the moment he delivered himself of his usual charge he left the floor and is not here now to aid in the defeat of the bill or to make good his statement charging that 49 Republicans and all of the Democrats were responsible for the delay in bringing forth the bonus bill. I do not know whether there are only 49 or 109 Republicans opposed to the bonus bill, but I do know that his statement that all the Democrats are against the bill is untrue, and I venture to say there are as many Republicans opposed to the bill as Democrats. If opportunity is given the membership of this House to vote on the question, I am satisfied it will be clearly shown that the accusation of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] against the Democratic side is unjustifiable, unfair, unwarrantable, and untrue. He is chairman of the Rules Committee, the majority of which are Republicans, and, if not mistaken, he also controls the steering committee of his party. If they are on the square and desirous of enacting bonus legislation, they can do so. They are absolutely in control, constituting a majority of the Rules Committee and having a majority of over 40 in the House membership. Consequently it comes with poor grace to try to befog the real conditions surrounding their so-called sincere consideration of the bonus proposition and their attempt to blame the Democratic side for their own inaction these many months and their failure to report the bill. But let me go back to this contractors' or shipbuilders' $25,000,000 bill.

It is remarkable what strenuous efforts are being made to relieve these 40 or 50 "poor," "unfortunate," and "patriotic" shipbuilding corporations. It is my opinion that if only half as hard an effort had been made for the consideration of the bonus legislation on the part of the Republican leaders, this long-promised and deserved legislation in behalf of the 4,000,000 men who served the country in its hour of need could now be in force. For some reason special industries can at all times secure your ear and your aid, but it is always impossible for you to act on any legislation in the interest of the people.

The baseless insinuation of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] that the Democrats are responsible for the delay in the consideration of the bonus legislation will not fool the 4,000,000 deserving World War veterans. They will know whom to hold accountable if action is not taken. I know a majority of the Democrats are ready and have been waiting many weeks for an opportunity to vote for a war bonus for the soldiers, for a bill that is not a sham, for one that will actually show the Nation's appreciation of their services. During the consideration of this bill I have anxiously waited to note what explanation or what position the Republican leaders, who day in and day out have preached economy, pointing out how many hundreds and thousands of dollars they have saved the Nation, would take on this measure, which means a reward of from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 to these great "patriotic" wooden-ship building corporations; and, though we are about to take a vote, not a single one of these leaders, with the exception of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], had a word to say in opposition to this uncalled-for and, to my mind, outrageous piece of legislation. Now, I want to know if you are ready to legislate and vote for this bill, when will you be ready to bring in the bonus bill——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that the gentleman is not discussing the amendment.

Mr. SABATH. I am discussing something in which 4,000,000 of our best and bravest are interested.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill S. 3451 had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 87, noes 19.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Would the gentleman rather have it on the vote?

Mr. RAKER. I would rather have it on the amendment; and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. If the Chair should declare that no quorum is present, will there be an automatic roll call or will it be necessary for a call of the House to be ordered?

The SPEAKER. It will be necessary to move a call of the House.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, we have had a division.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We must first dispose of the constitutional provision.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, division has been had, and we have had a vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not declare the result.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, another point of order is not in order while the Chair is ascertaining the count.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from California will withdraw his point of no quorum temporarily, he can make the point of order later.

Mr. RAKER. I withdraw it temporarily. There is a division, and if there is a point that no quorum is present, do we not have automatically a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment?

The SPEAKER. As long as a division is pending. This was made after a division had been announced.

Mr. RAKER. I was on my feet and made the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman says he intended to do it——

Mr. RAKER. I was on my feet and was waiting for the purpose of getting a roll call on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman states that, he has the right——

Mr. RAKER. I made the point of no quorum so as to get a roll call on the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that, the gentleman having withdrawn his point of order of no quorum, even though temporarily, on the suggestion of the Chair, the House is not now dividing and there will not be an automatic roll call. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. That is rather embarrassing to the Chair. The Chair did not mean to lead the gentleman into that. However, the Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and holds that there comes an automatic roll call upon the amendment. There is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those who are in favor of the amendment will, as their names are called, answer "yea" and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called; and there were—yeas 140, nays 178, answered "present" 1, not voting 108, as follows:

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Florida, Mr. CLARK. If I were not paired, I would vote "no." I vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I now move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. It would be in order if the previous question had not been ordered. The previous question has been ordered. So now the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. The usual rule is that when the House refuses to concur in the action of the committee in striking out all after the enacting clause of a bill the bill is referred back to the committee. The ruling in a former Congress was that on Calendar Wednesday when that action was taken the House immediately resolved itself back into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill. In this case the committee struck out all after the enacting clause of the bill and substituted another bill or substituted an amendment. But still the House refuses to concur in the action of the committee in striking out all after the enacting clause. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has never really considered the Senate bill. It has never had an opportunity to take it up paragraph by paragraph and amend it, and it seems to me that following the principle of the rule to which I have called attention the House should now resolve itself again into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Senate bill the same as though no substitute had been offered for it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair permit me to suggest that the question is not upon the engrossment and third reading but upon the third reading?

The SPEAKER. It is upon the third reading.

Mr. WALSH. As to the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], I think the gentleman has in mind——

Mr. GARRETT. Did I understand the Chair to say this is not the engrossment and third reading?

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill. It does not have to be engrossed.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman from Michigan may have in mind what occurs when the committee strikes out the enacting clause of a bill when it is not concurred in by the House. But when a bill is amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting another bill, and that amendment is disagreed to, it seems to me there is no necessity for the House again to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the language that is still left in the bill. It can be done on a motion to recommit.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. I do not understand that there is any difference in practical effect between the motion to strike out all after the enacting clause and a motion to strike out the enacting clause. In either event in ordinary practice it means the death of the bill. Under the present situation I submit the Members of the House or the members of the committee should have the right to take up the Senate bill section by section.

Mr. TILSON. Will the Speaker hear me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. TILSON. I wish to call to the attention of the Chair that there were three amendments passed, or at least three separate motions. The first motion was to strike out section 1 and insert the matter of the House bill. That motion was agreed to. The first section was stricken out and the House matter inserted.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. In just a moment, if the gentleman please. Later section 2 of the bill was read and stricken out. Finally section 3 was read and stricken out; so that there were three separate amendments acted upon by the Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment, striking out section 1 and inserting the House bill, has been reversed by the House. It would seem that unless a separate vote is had on the other two amendments we are brought back to this situation, that the first section of the Senate bill remains while the other two have been stricken out.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the parliamentary situation.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; or at any rate these were the parliamentary steps leading up to the present situation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, supplementary to what is stated by the gentleman from Connecticut, the first action was that the chairman of the committee moved to strike out the first section of the Senate bill and insert in lieu of the first section the House committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. Was a separate vote taken on each section of the House amendment?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; I insisted on a separate vote, and there were really three different amendments in the committee.

The SPEAKER. If that is the situation, then there are two amendments still to be acted upon, and what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] says sounds reasonable and logical; but, after all, it is based upon section 7 of Rule XXIII, and that does not apply strictly, the Chair thinks, to the present situation. It does apply in one sense practically, as the gentleman suggests——

Mr. MAPES. I am told by my colleagues here that I misapprehended the situation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I may be mistaken, but I desire to suggest, subject to correction, that there is only one amendment—that they were not separate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is told that there were three amendments. The bill was reported to the House as amended with only one amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The Chair stated that there was only one amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. There were clearly two amendments passed by the Committee of the Whole House after the action adopting the committee amendment which made the House bill in order. The other two amendments were adopted by that action so taken by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. The point of order I make is that those two amendments are now before the House for action.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, relative to the point of order of the gentleman from Texas, the committee followed the practice that is quite often followed, namely, when the first section of the Senate bill was read the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, moved to strike out section 1 and to insert the House bill, or rather to insert the amendment which the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries had reported and which is contained in the italicized portion of the amended bill. That amendment of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries was perfected. Finally it was voted in as a substitute for section 1. At the time the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] made his motion, if I am correctly advised, he gave notice that if his motion prevailed he would then move to strike out——

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is in error.

Mr. WALSH. I wish the gentleman would make his statement in his own time, and not inject contradictions here when I am in the midst of an attempt to state the case.

He gave notice, if I am correctly advised, that if his motion prevailed, he would move to strike out sections 2 and 3 as they were read. They were read and he made a motion to strike them out. Now, Mr. Speaker, these motions, while in a sense they were separate amendments, are in the nature of pro forma amendments, action upon which is practically foreclosed when they adopt a substitute for section 1. The chairman of the committee I think was correct in reporting to the House that they had reported back the Senate bill with an amendment; that while it requires two separate votes in committee to eliminate the other sections, they were mere pro forma motions made necessary by the action of the committee, following the statement of the chairman to the effect that if the amendments were agreed to he would move to eliminate the other two sections. So they are not now properly before the House as separate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is not this discussion academic? The Chair understands that the vote inserting the Senate amendment is practically a vote on the merits of the bill, and undoubtedly those who voted against the amendment voted against the bill. Therefore the Chair would suggest that it is rather a waste of time to discuss this feature of it.

Mr. WALSH. If the Chair will pardon me, I understood the Chair was inclined to hold that now the vote would come on the other two amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was inclined that way, but the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reported that there was one amendment. The bill shows substantially one amendment. The Chair is inclined to think that the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts is a fair statement of the situation, and at any rate the House having expressed emphatically its opinion of the bill, the next vote had best be on the third reading of the bill, which would undoubtedly end the whole matter. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. That will not be in order until after the third reading of the bill, and there has been no third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCARTHUR) there were 97 ayes and 69 noes.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that motion is in order.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from Massachusetts did not move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. But the previous question is pending.

Mr. GARRETT. Not on the motion to recommit.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman from Massachusetts made a motion to recommit. That motion has not been put. Is not the gentleman from Massachusetts entitled to be recognized to move the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not move the previous question.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The motion to recommit had not been stated.

The SPEAKER. The two motions are generally made together. The Chair is disposed to think that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is not in order.

Mr. GARRETT. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. If the motion should be held to be in order and the motion to recommit were laid on the table, would that carry the entire bill with it?

The SPEAKER. It is a novel question to the Chair, but on first blush the Chair would say offhand that it would.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to put this proposition to the Chair. The previous question not having been moved on the motion to recommit, it might be in order to amend the motion to recommit, and I submit that is the only motion that can be made.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair stated was his impression. The motion to recommit is for the purpose of preventing an amendment. The Chair would at first blush think that that would rule out the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have not surrendered the floor after I made the motion to recommit, and I now move the previous question.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair hear me?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HICKS. As I understand, the question is whether it is proper to have a motion to lay on the table a motion to recommit. It would seem to me, if the motion is in order, it would be depriving the minority of their rights, that the majority could at any time lay a report of the minority on the table, and that does not seem to be in accordance with our rule.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, to obviate any further discussion on this matter, I withdraw my motion to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. A citation has just been shown to the Chair saying that a motion to lay on the table is not in order. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and on that he moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on recommitting the bill to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee and Mr. BLANTON) there were 164 ayes and 56 noes.

So the bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

BUDGET SYSTEM—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill H. R. 9783, to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of accounts, and so forth, for printing under the rule.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS FOR CROW TRIBE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report for printing under the rule upon the bill (S. 2890) to provide for the allotment of lands for the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes.

TO PUNISH THE CRIME OF LYNCHING.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to file a minority report upon the bill (H. R. 14097) to assure the persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws and to punish the crime of lynching.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to file a minority report upon the bill H. R. 14097. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, as gentlemen of the House are well aware, yesterday I called up two bills for consideration and succeeded in getting at only one of them, and that one I did not succeed in finishing. Both of these bills are considered of great importance by the Treasury Department. It is believed that if they do not pass at this session a large amount of money will be lost to the Government. I understand that the majority leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], will ask unanimous consent to meet hereafter at 11 o'clock. I hope no one will object to that, in order that we may get through with this important business that we have before the House, the bills which I have mentioned, as well as other matters.

NAVAL RADIO STATIONS.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I call up S. J. Res. 170, to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Navy to open certain naval radio stations for the use of the general public.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up S. J. Res. 170. This resolution is on the Union Calendar. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. J. Res. 170, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the Senate resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, so far as is consistent with the transaction of Government business, to permit the use of the radio stations under the control of the Navy Department for the transmission and reception of commercial messages between ship and shore for the benefit of the general public, under regulations prescribed by him, and he shall fix the rates for such service, subject to control of such rates by the Congress, at a rate not less than the cost of service to the Navy Department; and the receipts for such service shall be turned into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to permit the use of naval high-power radio stations, under the regulations prescribed in section 1, for the transmission and reception of commercial and press messages between these stations and other stations in the United States or its Territories, and between these stations and stations in foreign countries: Provided, That such use of naval high-power radio stations for commercial business, other than press messages, shall cease as and when the Secretary of the Navy is notified by the Secretary of Commerce that an American radio company is prepared to take over this work and establish adequate communication between the points in question: Provided further, That a special low charge shall be made for such press service at such rate as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That all land, ship, and airship radio stations, and all apparatus therein owned by the United States may be used by it for receiving and transmitting messages relating to Government business, compass reports, and the safety of ships.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, under terms and conditions and at rates prescribed by him, which rates shall be just and reasonable, and which, upon complaint, shall be subject to review and revision by the Interstate Commerce Commission, to use all radio stations and apparatus, wherever located, owned by the United States and under the control of the Navy Department—(a) for the reception and transmission of press messages offered by any newspaper published in the United States, its Territories or possessions, or published by citizens of the United States in foreign countries, or by any press association of the United States, and (b) for the reception and transmission of private commercial messages: Provided, That the rates fixed for the reception and transmission of commercial messages, other than press messages, shall not be less than the rates charged by privately owned and operated stations for like messages and service: Provided further, That the right to use such stations for any of the purposes named in this section shall terminate and cease as between any countries or localities or between any locality and privately operated ships, whenever privately owned and operated stations are capable of meeting the normal communication requirements between such countries or localities or between any locality and privately operated ships, and the Secretary of Commerce shall have notified the Secretary of the Navy thereof, and all rights conferred by this section shall terminate and cease in any event two years from the date this resolution takes effect.

"SEC. 3. That all stations owned and operated by the Government, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be used and operated in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to regulate radio communication,' approved August 13, 1912."

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, this resolution comes with the recommendation for passage by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I know of no special objection to the bill. Its principal purpose is to make it possible for the Navy Department for two years to come to continue the radio service which it has been giving during the war. No doubt Members of the House will remember that during the war all radio apparatus and all radio stations were taken over by the Government. Quite recently, by Executive order, on February 13 last, the Secretary of the Navy directed that these stations which had been taken over by the Government should be returned to their private owners as of midnight on February 29, 1920. There are sections of the country where it is very necessary that the Federal Government should continue the operation of radio service stations.

The committee recommends an amendment to take the place of the Senate bill. The first section of this committee amendment provides that all land, ship, and airship radio stations, and all apparatus therein owned by the United States, may be used by the United States for receiving and transmitting messages relating to Government business, compass reports, and the safety of ships. For these three purposes the Government may continue using this radio apparatus and radio service without interruption, and until Congress shall otherwise determine.

The second section of the amendment relates to two kinds of radio messages—first, press messages; and, second, commercial messages. A very unusual situation has arisen, particularly on the Pacific coast. There is no radio service on the Pacific coast which is adequate and available for the use of American newspapers and American press associations. As a matter of fact, all press messages sent to the Orient from the United States are subject to review and interruption and coloring by foreign Governments or foreign interests which sometimes show a disposition to interfere with American news and American business.

The Pacific coast situation was the phase which was first called to the attention of the committee and which really was the inception of this legislation. Section 2 further provides for commercial messages which may be sent for a period of two years, at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy, but subject to review and revision by the Interstate Commerce Commission. These rates for ordinary commercial messages shall not be less than those charged by private companies. With reference to the press messages, however, the bill makes no such provision. It is contemplated and intended by this amendment, as it was by the Senate bill, that these press messages may be sent by the Navy Department at less rates than are charged for ordinary commercial messages. All of this Government operation relating to commercial messages and press messages shall terminate, at all events, under the terms of the bill, within two years, and prior to that time, in case there shall be sufficient private apparatus and private service for handling the business. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that any further discussion or explanation of this bill is necessary. If there are any questions any gentlemen desire to ask, the members of the committee will be glad to answer them.

Mr. KRAUS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. KRAUS. Did the committee hold hearings on this bill?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They held hearings on this bill.

Mr. KRAUS. Can the gentleman state to the Committee of the Whole House whether this enterprise would be profitable to the General Government?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The Navy Department has stations, apparatus, and men in its employ for this service, and this apparatus and stations are the property of the Government and the men are being paid by the Government. No additional employees need to be secured; no additional apparatus need be obtained; in fact, it is not contemplated that any shall be obtained under this bill, but we are utilizing apparatus and service which the Navy Department already has and the employees which the Navy Department already has, and whatever money is paid into the Treasury will be a revenue which the Government will obtain without any additional cost.

Mr. KRAUS. Then, if I understand the gentleman—and I only understand by inference because the question has not been answered directly—the carrying on of this activity is not a source of profit to the Government but an expense, and he proposes by this bill to continue this war activity for two years in spite of that fact?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not know that I understand the question of the gentleman quite correctly.

Mr. KRAUS. Well, the gentleman has not answered the question directly, but it is fairly to be inferred from his statement that the maintenance of these radio stations, which were taken on and directed as a war necessity, is an expense to the Government. That is fairly inferable because the gentleman has not answered directly the question which I have propounded as to whether it was a source of expense. In other words, the income at this time does not equal the outlay, and by this law the gentleman would require the Secretary of the Navy to maintain this war organization for a period of two years notwithstanding the fact that the Navy itself might not have occasion to use it?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This apparatus and these stations are all owned by the Navy now, and if we do not pass this bill the Navy will have the same apparatus, will have the same stations, and will have the same employees, but no revenue will go to the Government from their use.

Mr. KRAUS. Why not let the Navy Department abandon these stations which are unnecessary for war purposes? If we pass this measure, we still keep them in activity for two years?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; the bill provides this activity shall continue only until privately owned stations and privately owned apparatus are sufficient to take care of the service.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In that connection and in reply to the question of the gentleman, this bill does not require the Government to maintain any stations or apparatus for the purpose of rendering this service?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It simply authorizes the Government to render this service with the stations and apparatus which they may have, and those in authority have stated that it would not involve any additional expense; that they have their apparatus; had to maintain it; had the operators; and that to render this other service for the general public when needed would not impose any additional expense at all upon the Government.

Mr. KRAUS. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee that I will not assume that he is so simple that he would think that if this bill is passed these stations will be maintained less than twice 365 days. The Navy Department will assume that this is directory and compulsory.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the principal use that will be made of this radio business will be for the protection of merchant ships at sea as well as of naval vessels all around the world, and that was one of the inducements which led the committee to act in this matter and to make the provision contained in the resolution that until private enterprise has provided otherwise this work could be done by the Navy Department, as it has been done, not for the purpose of making any additional expense but only for the general good of every vessel owner and every person in the United States.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. VARE. This, however, does continue a war service in time of peace?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Oh, no. There is no such intention. We have not any service at all except as provided through the Navy, and the Navy can not lawfully collect one single dollar for the service rendered until this resolution is enacted into law.

Mr. VARE. They did not have any service prior to the war?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. No, sir. They can not collect the money for any service they render until this bill is passed and they are authorized to collect.

Mr. MILLER. As I understand, the Navy maintains these radio stations?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Now, this bill authorizes the Navy to utilize them for commercial purposes and get some revenue?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. To receive pay for their services, and not only that, whatever they do for the newspapers they will receive corresponding pay for, and it puts the United States in some reasonable position abroad which it does not possess to-day, but it grants them the temporary authority they ought to have.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it not a fact that unless this privilege of utilizing the radio for commercial messages is continued under authorization many commercial interests will be denied any radio service whatever?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; they are proceeding now without authority of law to accommodate the public.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let me say, in addition to what the gentleman from Massachusetts says, that on the Great Lakes there is absolutely no radio service whatever at the present time except that which is under the control of the Navy Department.

Mr. BRIGGS. The same is true in my city of Galveston. The Navy took over the wireless apparatus there and are operating it. They have no opportunity at all to use it for private messages.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May I add that a gentleman who recently made a trip to the Virgin Islands suggests that we have no communication with the islands of the Caribbean Sea or the Virgin Islands except through the Navy radio stations?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Before the war was there any service privately owned?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. There were some private companies that furnished radio communication for compensation.

Mr. CANNON. And did the Government take it over, and is the Government obligated to return it to the private owners?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes; the private stations taken over during the war by the President have been returned by his order. The Navy bought, during the war, certain stations from the Marconi and other wireless organizations, and the Navy have them now in their possession.

Mr. CANNON. Does that cover all the radio service with foreign countries and on sea and land?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes; the shore stations especially, and they had the other stations for their own convenience in keeping in touch with the vessels of the Navy that were at sea, and also for accommodating the merchant marine.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand the gentleman, unless the bill passes there will be no service——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. No service at all.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). For the general public?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. That is it exactly. We make this provision for the temporary term of two years, and if private enterprise is ready to provide the service to meet the needs of business then the Navy Department will withdraw from the commercial radio service.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And before two years.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. And before that time if they are ready, if certified to that effect by the Department of Commerce.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman wish to speak in opposition to the bill? If not, the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, so far as is consistent with the transaction of Government business, to permit the use of the radio stations under the control of the Navy Department for the transmission and reception of commercial messages between ship and shore for the benefit of the general public, under regulations prescribed by him, and he shall fix the rates for such service, subject to control of such rates by the Congress, at a rate not less than the cost of service to the Navy Department; and the receipts for such service shall be turned into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to permit the use of naval high power radio stations, under the regulations prescribed in section 1, for the transmission and reception of commercial and press messages between these stations and other stations in the United States or its Territories, and between these stations and stations in foreign countries: Provided, That such use of naval high power radio stations for commercial business, other than press messages, shall cease as and when the Secretary of the Navy is notified by the Secretary of Commerce that an American radio company is prepared to take over this work and establish adequate communication between the points in question: Provided further, That a special low charge shall be made for such press service at such rate as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, strike out all of lines 3 to 11, inclusive, and on page 2 strike out all of lines 1 to 18, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That all land, ship, and airship radio stations, and all apparatus therein owned by the United States may be used by it for receiving and transmitting messages relating to Government business, compass reports, and the safety of ships.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, under terms and conditions and at rates prescribed by him, which rates shall be just and reasonable, and which, upon complaint, shall be subject to review and revision by the Interstate Commerce Commission, to use all radio stations and apparatus, wherever located, owned by the United States and under the control of the Navy Department—(a) for the reception and transmission of press messages offered by any newspaper published in the United States, its Territories or possessions, or published by citizens of the United States in foreign countries, or by any press association of the United States, and (b) for the reception and transmission of private commercial messages: Provided, That the rates fixed for the reception and transmission of commercial messages, other than press messages, shall not be less than the rates charged by privately owned and operated stations for like messages and service: Provided further, That the right to use such stations for any of the purposes named in this section shall terminate and cease as between any countries or localities or between any locality and privately operated ships, whenever privately owned and operated stations are capable of meeting the normal communication requirements between such countries or localities or between any locality and privately operated ships, and the Secretary of Commerce shall have notified the Secretary of the Navy thereof, and all rights conferred by this section shall terminate and cease in any event two years from the date this resolution takes effect.

"SEC. 3. That all stations owned and operated by the Government, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be used and operated in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to regulate radio communication,' approved August 13, 1912."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration Senate joint resolution 170, to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Navy to open certain naval radio stations for the use of the general public, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the resolution as amended do pass.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and the amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the title be amended in accordance with the text.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the title of the resolution be amended in accordance with the text. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman what is in his contemplation to take up to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. A bill from the Committee on Ways and Means is unfinished business. It is possible that the Committee on Rules may present a rule, but the unfinished business is a bill from the Committee on Ways and Means. There are several conference reports pending before the House.

Mr. GARRETT. May I inquire as to the nature of the rule that is likely to be presented?

Mr. MONDELL. I presume that the gentleman, who is a member of the Committee on Rules, knows of the rules that have been so far approved by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; I am familiar with those; I am familiar with them, but I have no information as to which one of the several rules is likely to come up.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know that I could say.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not wish to interfere, I will say to the gentleman from Wyoming, with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] proceeding with the revenue bill that he has in hand, but I do not feel that I could consent if there is a rule from the Committee on Rules to come up. The Committee on Rules is to meet at 10 o'clock, but I am not advised as to what business will come before it. I do not propose to get in the way of the gentleman from Iowa, but with a statement so general as that made by the gentleman from Wyoming I feel that I shall have to object.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not possible for you gentlemen on that side to agree on something? [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, realizing the position of the gentleman from Tennessee, and having no desire to embarrass him, I will withdraw my request. [Laughter.]

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 3897. An act to amend section 16 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act.

S. J. Res. 179. Joint resolution authorizing use of Army transports by teams, individuals, and their equipment representing the United States in Olympic games and international competitions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, these requests all have reference to the pending bill?

The SPEAKER. It is so understood.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a quorum. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 27, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation required for the Detroit, Mich., Marine Hospital (H. Doc. No. 794); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting communication from the president of the United States Civil Service Commission submitting an estimate of appropriation required for section 13 of the act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service (H. Doc. No. 795); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation required for administration of the civil-service retirement act, Bureau of Pensions, Department of the Interior (H. Doc. No. 796); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation for inclusion in the general deficiency bill for the construction of a penthouse on bridge, New York, N Y. (H. Doc. No. 797); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. PORTER, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick as to certain restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces relative to the exportation of pulp wood therefrom to the United States, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1039); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SINNOTT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14101) providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1040), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GANDY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11118) authorizing the consolidation of lands in national forests in the State of South Dakota, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1042), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10521) for the relief of Ida F. Baum, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1041), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14108) granting an increase of pension to William W. Burke, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 14239) fixing the rate of compensation of internal-revenue gaugers, storekeepers, and storekeeper-gaugers, the hours of labor per day, and providing the rate of compensation per hour for extra work, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: Resolution (H. Res. 569) for the immediate consideration of House joint resolution 339; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. MASON: Resolution (H. Res. 570) asking for information as to mandate for Armenia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BLACKMON: Resolution (H. Res. 571) asking for information regarding the use of the House Office Building and the legislative drafting committee; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. KNUTSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 363) making an appropriation to discover a suitable substitute for gasoline; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BLACKMON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 364) for the appointment of a joint commission of three Members of the House and two Members of the Senate to investigate contributions to all candidates for Members of the Sixty-seventh Congress; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. MASON: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 57) favoring a government of its own choice for Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 27, 1920.

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1920.)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock m., on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13416) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KAHN, Mr. ANTHONY, and Mr. DENT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 170) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Navy to open certain naval radio stations for the use of the general public with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3897. An act to amend section 16 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act; and

S. J. Res. 179. Joint resolution authorizing use of Army transports by teams, individuals, and their equipment representing the United States in Olympic games and international competition.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial of Local Lodge No. 65, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, of Osawatomie, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the Army reorganization bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Women's Auxiliary, Benjamin Fuller Post, American Legion, of Pittsburg, Kans., praying for the granting of a bonus to ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Lyon County Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Emporia, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Nolan tax bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of Local Union No. 22, Journeymen Tailors' Union of America, of New Haven, Conn., praying for the parole of Federal prisoners, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the Chamber of Commerce of New Britain; of Local Branch No. 175, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Middletown; of the Central Labor Union of Stamford; of Local Council No. 8, Order of United American Mechanics, of New Britain; of the Chamber of Commerce of West Haven; of Court Washington, No. 67, Foresters of America, of Torrington; and of sundry citizens of Bridgeport, all of the State of Connecticut, praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Albanian Society of Goodyear, Conn., remonstrating against the annexation of the southern Provinces of Albania to Greece, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorials of the directors of the National Bank of New England, of East Haddam; the Connecticut National Bank, of Bridgeport; the Middletown National Farmers & Mechanics' Savings Bank, of Middletown; the Savings Bank of Middletown; and the Chelsea Savings Bank, of Norwich; the Danbury National Bank, of Danbury; and the Rockville National Bank, of Rockville; and of the East Hampton Bank & Trust Co., of East Hampton, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation imposing a Federal tax on the sale of securities, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Congress of Mothers for Child Welfare of the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ann Arbor, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented memorials of Local Lodge No. 8, Pan-Albanian Mohammedan Religion Society of America, of Detroit; of the Albanian Educational Club of Detroit; of the Albanian Society of Pontiac; and of the Pan-Albanian Federation of America, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation awarding to Greece by the peace conference of Northern Epirus, including Corytza, the 12 islands of the Ægean and the western coast of Asia Minor, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a memorial of the Civic and Commercial Association of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation recognizing the soviet government of Russia by the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7158) to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 636) thereon.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,500 for the expenses of two officers of the Public Health Service to be designated by the President to represent the United States at the Sixth International Sanitary Conference at Montevideo, Uruguay, from December 12 to 20, 1920, etc., intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4450) for the relief of Lewis W. Flaunlacher; and

A bill (S. 4451) for the relief of the estate of David Clark; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4452) providing for the establishment of a probation system in the United States courts, except in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 206) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to Jeanne d'Arc; to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and the House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of May, 1920, for extra services during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-sixth Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation allowed them by law, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] if he will not agree to lay aside the unfinished business, the conference report upon House bill 3184, the water-power bill, that I may call up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask the Senator how much time he thinks it will take?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I am not able to say, as the Senator knows, just how much debate it will require. As far as I know, there will be very little debate. As soon as the report is agreed to there will be a motion made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that the Senate recede from its amendment. There is only one amendment in disagreement. I will wish to make a few remarks to explain the situation and we will have a roll call on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi. If that motion is carried, then, of course, it is ended and the Agricultural appropriation bill will not have to go back to conference but will become a law with the seed provision in it.

If the motion of the Senator from Mississippi is defeated, I intend to offer a motion, that I do not believe will be resisted, for a compromise amendment, and I want to explain that during the pendency of the first motion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I appreciate the importance of this conference report and recognize the fact that if the motion referred to shall not prevail the bill will have to go back for further conference and a further report here. I understand if the unfinished business is laid aside it can be called up at any time if the debate would seem to be proceeding at an undue length.

I wish to state that I want to have the conference report on the water-power bill disposed of as soon as possible, and I propose to keep it before the Senate until action is taken upon it one way or the other. For matters like this, which will not take much time and but little or no debate, I am willing to lay aside the unfinished business. Upon the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 93 to the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

ARMENIAN MANDATORY.

Mr. LODGE. I wish merely to submit a report. I report from the Committee on Foreign Relations a concurrent resolution, which is very brief. I ask that it may be read and then go to the calendar. I do not propose to take it up this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Reading Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 27), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress hereby respectfully declines to grant to the Executive the power to accept a mandate over Armenia, as requested in the message of the President, dated May 24, 1920.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator from Massachusetts indicate when he proposes to call up the resolution for action?

Mr. LODGE. That depends on the state of the business here; I can not say. We want to get the appropriation bills and the conference reports out of the way. I am ready to take it up, as far as I am personally concerned, at any time, but I can not tell exactly when it will be taken up.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Probably this week?

Mr. LODGE. I really can not say. I do not know how long the conference reports will take. I shall be glad to take it up as soon as the conference reports are disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I ask to have printed as a Senate document that portion of the Harbord report relating to the military problem of a mandatory. It is the report made to Gen. Harbord by Brig. Gen. Moseley, and covers the whole question of the military obligations of the mandatory of Armenia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCORMICK. I wish to ask the indulgence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] for a moment. I ask him if he will permit me, at the conclusion of the consideration of the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, to ask the Senate to consider the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, provided always, of course, that there be no time-consuming debate. The report, I might add, was unanimous, and it is extremely important, in view of the situation in the House and of the requirement for nominations by the President, that the conference report shall be disposed of without delay.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it creates no discussion, I shall be glad to yield for that purpose.

MILITARY STATUS OF CERTAIN CIVIL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have here a letter, addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, from the president of the Civil Service Commission, which letter relates to the tendency to militarize the civil service under the War Department, and refers to the great number of replacements of men in the civil service by soldiers, who afterwards, while performing civil duties, have a military status. The letter is important, and I ask that it may be printed without reading.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., May 21, 1920.

Hon. THOS. STERLING,
Chairman Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR STERLING: The civil-service act and rules make this commission in a sense the custodian of the executive civil service of the United States. This office during an experience of nearly 37 years has acquired an unusual knowledge of the trend of affairs in the service.

There appears to be a tendency to militarize the civil service under the War Department. We refer to provisions in appropriation acts replacing civilians with enlisted men, who thereafter perform civil duties with a military status. For example:

The Army appropriation act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 593), provided for the replacement of 4,000 civilians in the Ordnance Corps by enlisted men.

The Army appropriation act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 625), changed the status of headquarters clerks to Army field clerks. The number of positions affected is about 7,000.

The bill introduced in the present Congress to reorganize the Army (S. 3792) seemed to this office to propose replacement of civilians by enlisted men under the War Department to a great extent. Sections 29 to 38 of the bill provided that the permanent personnel of The Adjutant General's service and seven other services named should consist of enlisted men detailed or assigned from the permanent personnel.

Service.	Section.	Number.
Adjutant General's	29	400
Inspector General's	30	100
Judge Advocate General's	31	100
Ordnance	34	6,000
Finance	35	900
Transportation	36	12,500
Construction	37	6,000
Chemical Warfare	38	1,200
		27,200

The proposed distribution of these 27,200 men throughout the several services of the War Department, where no enlisted men were employed before the war, seems to the commission to indicate a tendency to militarize the civil service of the entire department in much the same maner as the militarization of the Quartermaster Corps, which was begun by the Army appropriation act of August 29, 1916, changing 7,000 headquarters clerks to Army field clerks, and would be completed by section 32 of pending act to reorganize the Army, which provides for 9,000 enlisted men in the Quartermaster Service.

Section 12 of the Army reorganization act authorizes the President to maintain a permanent personnel which includes more than 263,200 enlisted men. Section 15 allows 23 per cent of this number, or at least 60,536 enlisted men, to be paid additional for specialized work in the performance of which no military authority is required. This office has been able to find nothing in the bill to prevent superseding employees in the War Department by this class of enlisted men to any extent desired. The proposed basis of pay of enlisted men runs as high as $100 per month, and additional pay for specialized work as high as $30 per month. These plus the usual allowances to enlisted men would seem likely to make this particular kind of service more expensive to the Government than if civilians were employed.

The commission has invited the attention of the Senate and House Committees on Military Affairs to these provisions of the Army reorganization bill, which it regards as objectionable, but in view of their detrimental effect on the civil service, the commission believes the Senate and House Committees on the Civil Service should be similarly advised.

The act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, appropriates for Army field clerks as follows:

Number.	Individual salary.	Amount.
80	$1,800	$144,000
7	2,000	14,000
172	1,600	275,200
11	1,800	19,800
222	1,400	310,800
14	1,600	22,400
526	1,200	631,200
32	1,400	44,800
57	1,200	68,400
49	1,200	58,800
1,170

The act also provides that Army field clerks shall have the same allowances and benefits as heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks in the Quartermaster Corps, not including retirement, and that the minimum or entrance pay, exclusive of said allowances, shall be $1,200 per annum. The act also authorized the Secretary of War to employ during the present emergency, and not exceeding four months thereafter, not exceeding 4,272 field clerks. The lowest compensated of this large number of clerks receive a minimum salary of $100 per month plus $35 a month allowances. Service in one of these positions of the most temporary character entitles the employees forever after to the same degree of military preference as a soldier who endures the horrors of war on the battle field, and if they attain a rating of 65 per cent in examination they can be appointed ahead of the most highly qualified civilians. The War Department has no discretion in the matter. It can not fill these positions as they become vacant by civilians selected from among those standing highest as the result of open competitive examination. The commission believes this to be a most extravagant method of performing Government work. Passing over the possibility of securing civilians in accordance with civil-service rules to perform this work at a lower salary, it is believed that the present method of taking men on without competitive tests of fitness results in a poorer quality of work and less quantity per capita. It appears to the commission that the tendencies indicated by the facts above set forth are detrimental to the service in general and repugnant to the present form of government.

By direction of the commission:

Very respectfully, MARTIN A. MORRISON,
President.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. KNOX. Yesterday I gave notice of a proposed amendment to Rule XXV. Pursuant to that notice, I submit a resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution (S. Res. 373) proposing to amend Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. KNOX. I submit a favorable report from the Committee on Rules on the resolution, and I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for its immediate consideration, with the understanding that if it should provoke debate and discussion of any kind I will yield the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I should want to have the report read first, so that we may know just what changes are proposed to be made in the rule.

Mr. KNOX. That would require either the reading of the report or a short explanation, and a very brief explanation can be made. It merely involves the proposition which I shall state.

The Committee on Rules unanimously, 10 members of the 12 being present, have recommended to the Senate that the number of standing committees shall be reduced about 40, and cut out all the committees that rarely if ever meet. We have likewise reduced the membership of the principal committees of the Senate. Those which are known as the major committees, being 10 of the most important committees, have been reduced to the uniform number of 15, and the less important committees have been reduced proportionately.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator permit an interruption? I am heartily in favor of the Senator's proposition. I fought for it through two or three Congresses, and finally got the salaries of the employees of the committees on an equal basis. This, I was sure, would bring about this result. It has done so and I am glad of it. But unless the resolution can be disposed of without discussion, I shall object. If it can be disposed of without discussion, I make no objection.

Mr. KNOX. I anticipated that there might possibly be an objection, and if there is I will withdraw the request for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Without intending to discuss it, I wish to say, as a member of the Committee on Rules, that the report is unanimous, and I think it is very necessary that this reform should be made in the interest of the business of the Senate. I hope the resolution can be passed without discussion at this time.

Mr. KNOX. I might state to the Senate that it is not proposed to go into effect until the beginning of the Sixty-seventh Congress, when the committees will have to be recast under the rules. It makes no change in the committees of the present Congress. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the report read, so that we can get some idea of what changes are to be made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it is to take time, I shall have to object.

Mr. KNOX. It will take only two or three minutes to read the report. It is a very brief report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well, I will let it be read, but I can not consent to a discussion of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment to the rules will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended so as to read:

1. Beginning with the Sixty-seventh Congress, the following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:

Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Appropriations, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to consist of 5 Senators, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same.
Committee on Banking and Currency, to consist of 13 Senators.
Committee on Civil Service, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Claims, to consist of 13 Senators.
Committee on Commerce, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on the District of Columbia, to consist of 13 Senators.
Committee on Education and Labor, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Engrossed and Enrolled Bills, to consist of 3 Senators, which shall examine all bills, amendments, and joint resolutions before they go out of the possession of the Senate, and which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives, and which, or some one of which, shall examine all bills or joint resolutions which shall have passed both Houses, to see that the same are correctly enrolled, and, when signed by the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate, shall forthwith present the same, when they shall have originated in the Senate, to the President of the United States in person, and report the fact and date of such presentation to the Senate.
Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to consist of 7 Senators.
Committee on Finance, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Foreign Relations, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Immigration, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Indian Affairs, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Interstate Commerce, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on the Judiciary, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on the Library, to consist of 7 Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
Committee on Manufactures, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Military Affairs, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Mines and Mining, to consist of 9 Senators.
Committee on Naval Affairs, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Patents, to consist of 7 Senators.
Committee on Pensions, to consist of 11 Senators.
Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to consist of 15 Senators.
Committee on Printing, to consist of 7 Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
Committee on Privileges and Elections, to consist of 13 Senators.
Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to consist of 13 Senators, which shall have the power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to consist of 13 Senators.
Committee on Rules, to consist of 12 Senators.
Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to consist of 13 Senators.

2. The Committees to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, on Printing, and on the Library shall continue and have the power to act until their successors are appointed.

Mr. ROBINSON. I believe unanimous consent has been given to the consideration of the report. I do not desire to discuss the matter at length, but I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question regarding the committees which are provided for in this plan for reorganization. Is the jurisdiction of the present standing committees of the Senate materially affected or changed by this reorganization plan?

Mr. KNOX. Not at all. Under the twenty-fifth rule there is no provision for jurisdiction. For instance, as to the Committee on Foreign Relations there is no provision what its jurisdiction shall be and as to the Committee on the Judiciary there is no provision as to what its jurisdiction shall be.

Mr. ROBINSON. Are the so-called nominal committees, that is, the committees which merely perform any functions, eliminated?

Mr. KNOX. All of them are eliminated. For instance, there are 11 committees on expenditures in the various departments of the Government. Those have been consolidated in one committee, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the number of members of standing committees to be reduced?

Mr. KNOX. What we call the 10 major committees are to be reduced in membership to 15. They have varied, some committees consisting of 17 members, some 19, and the Appropriations Committee of 20.

Mr. ROBINSON. If this plan is agreed to, all of the 10 principal standing committees of the Senate will consist of 15 members?

Mr. KNOX. They will consist of 15 members.

Mr. ROBINSON. I merely desire to say that I am heartily in favor of this action and I hope the report will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 93 to the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the conferees on the Agricultural appropriation bill have made several reports and they have progressed in their various disagreements and agreements. In all instances where an agreement has been reached the action of the conference has been approved by the House and by the Senate; but we have not agreed on amendment numbered 93. That is the provision in the House bill which provides for the distribution of congressional seeds. The conferees have reported a disagreement. I understand that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is going to make a motion that the Senate recede from its amendment, and, of course, that is a preferential motion and is entitled to be heard first. When he makes the motion I expect to make a few remarks in order further to explain the situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I move the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 93.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to have the attention of the Senate now for a few moments in order to explain the situation in reference to the amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill which remains in disagreement. I shall ask for a roll call on the motion to recede from the Senate amendment. Of course, if the motion shall carry, the Agricultural bill will have been passed and will go to the President. However, I am opposed to the motion, and the other conferees are opposed to the motion.

The Agricultural bill, as everybody knows, contains a provision for an appropriation of $239,416 for what is known as the congressional free-seed distribution. The Senate Committee on Agriculture proposed an amendment eliminating that provision, and the Senate approved their action, so that the appropriation was rejected and the language providing for the method by which Members of the other House and Members of the Senate should distribute free seed was eliminated. The motion is to recede from the Senate amendment. So Senators who are in favor of a continuation of the free-seed distribution will vote "yea," and Senators who are opposed to it will vote "nay."

I wish to say to the Senate that there are various other provisions for seeds and bulbs and trees in this appropriation bill. For instance, on a preceding page there is an appropriation of $20,000 "for the investigation, improvement, encouragement, and determination of the adaptability to different soils and climatic conditions of pecans, almonds, Persian walnuts," and so forth. There is also an appropriation of $83,200 for the investigation and improvement of fruits, and the method of growing and harvesting fruits. On the same page there is an appropriation of $11,690 for experimental work. On page 30 there is an appropriation "for horticultural investigations, including the study of producing and harvesting truck and related crops," and their marketing, "the study of landscape and vegetable gardening," and so forth. The appropriation for that purpose is $86,940.

There is also an appropriation of $20,000 for investigations, in cooperation with the States, in regard to nursery stock, and so forth. There is another appropriation of $20,500 for the improvements on the experimental farm and agricultural station on the Arlington estate. There is also an appropriation of $92,700 "for investigations in foreign seed and plant introduction, including the study, collection, purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of rare and valuable seeds." There is also an appropriation of $130,000 "for the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds."

So if the free-seed item is stricken out there will still remain full provision for the investigation, propagation, raising, and cultivation of all kinds of fruits and vegetables. All the Senate amendment does is to strike out of the Agricultural bill the appropriation of $239,416 for the purpose of buying ordinary seeds, that may be bought anywhere in any seed store, of course, for free distribution by Members of Congress.

Mr. President, the controversy in reference to the free distribution of seeds has been an annual show ever since I have been a Member of Congress. With very few exceptions, the Senate has stricken out this provision and the House has insisted on it; the matter has gone to conference; in the end the Senate has always receded; and the provision for free seeds has been put in for the benefit of Representatives in Congress. So it has become known to the country as an annual congressional vaudeville show.

I read an editorial not long ago in one of the great newspapers, at the time the Senate had stricken the provision out, stating that the annual show was on; that the Senate had stricken out the appropriation for the free-seed distribution by Congress; that it would go to conference; that there would be a disagreement; that the matter would be brought up several times; but that eventually the Senate would recede. I am wondering if we are going to do that.

I want to say to the Senate that if the pending motion is defeated, I shall submit a motion to instruct the conferees on the part of the Senate to agree to the House proposition with an amendment; and I want Senators to listen to the reading of the amendment. In my judgment, it answers every claim that has ever been made on the floor of either House in favor of the free-seed distribution.

It is claimed by those who favor the proposition that a great many people want these seed; that some poor people want them and use them, and so forth. So they fight for the retention of the appropriation. If that be true, any person in the country who wants free seed badly enough to write a letter will be able to get them under the amendment I intend to propose, although the matter of distribution will be taken out of the hands of Members of Congress to a great extent.

I proposed the amendment in conference. The Senate conferees were willing to accept it, but the House conferees refused to take it to the House; they refused to give it that consideration or to extend that courtesy. If it is adopted by the Senate, it will go to the House, and they will then have an opportunity to act on it. The proposed amendment is as follows:

In lieu of the language proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

"For the purchase, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, $75,000. Said seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall be sent only to such persons as shall make request therefor: Provided, That all such requests made of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, if transmitted to the Department of Agriculture, shall be complied with by said department."

In my humble judgment, Mr. President, such an amendment will meet the only argument which can be made in favor of the free distribution of seed. It will reduce the appropriation from $239,000 to $75,000, and will take the distribution of seed out of the hands of Members of Congress, as I believe all thinking men who have studied the matter agree should be done.

I think Senators understand the proposition, and I am not going to go into a further discussion of it; but I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator allow us to have the yeas and nays ordered on the motion?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is the motion?

Mr. HARRISON. The motion is to recede on amendment numbered 93.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Mississippi has made a motion that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 93, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THOMAS. To recede, with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. HARRISON. The question will come first on the motion which I have made, and then if that is defeated the Senator from Nebraska may offer his motion, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the Senator from Mississippi is agreed to, then there will remain no disagreement between the two Houses?

Mr. NORRIS. That is understood; I think every Senator understands that. If the motion is agreed to, the provision for free seed goes out of the bill and the bill goes to the President.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understand it.

Mr. HARRISON. That is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator from Nebraska, in the event the motion is agreed to, will have no chance at all to offer the proposed amendment to which he has referred.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that, and that is the reason I desire the motion defeated. Then the bill will still remain before the Senate and I will be able to offer my proposed amendment. That is the reason I am opposed to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have made a motion to recede from Senate amendment numbered 93. It is the only provision of the bill now in disagreement, every other difference between the Senate and the House having been determined.

This bill ought to get out of the way. There are certain provisions in the bill touching the grades of cotton which it is important should be enacted promptly, for unless they become a part of the law by the 1st of June the old law in that regard will remain in force. I have been in favor of the free distribution of seeds through such a provision as the House incorporated in the bill, and which the Senate struck out, and such a provision has been in the bill year by year—so long, in fact, that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary; but it would seem now that there is a desire to defeat an Agricultural appropriation bill in order to change that policy. If the motion I have made is adopted, then the Agricultural appropriation bill is out of the way.

It is true that the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry reported an amendment striking out the free-seed provision inserted by the House, but in the Senate there was no roll call on the adoption of that amendment. Twice, however, the House by a vote—once on a roll call, both times by a vote practically of two to one—insisted upon the free garden seed provision, thus adhering to the old policy which Congress has pursued for a very long time.

It seems to me that it is too trifling a matter to be allowed to hold up a great Agricultural appropriation bill. If the motion which I have made is adopted, then the bill will be out of the way; and it would seem to me it ought to be adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question in order that I may get my bearings. Do I understand that the Senator from Mississippi has made a motion to recede?

Mr. HARRISON. I have moved that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 93.

Mr. BORAH. If that motion is agreed to, then the free-seed provision remains in the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. It remains in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. In other words, it is a question of "seed" and "recede." [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. I know what I desire to accomplish, but I do not know with certainty that my vote will be effective. I want to vote against the free distribution of seed, and in that case I will vote against receding.

Mr. HARRISON. When the Senator votes against my motion, he votes to allow the House provision to remain in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I am sorry the Senator from Idaho feels as he does, but if he wants to have a continuation of the free distribution of seed by Members of Congress, then on the pending motion he should vote "yea."

Mr. BORAH. I want to vote against a continuation of the free distribution of seed.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator should vote "nay."

Mr. BORAH. If I can keep my bearings long enough now until the roll is called, I shall know how to vote.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in the real working out of the two provisions, the one incorporated in the bill by the House and the one proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, we will simply have a difference between an appropriation of $75,000 and an appropriation of $239,000, or whatever amount is now fixed. In the event the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is adopted, what will the Agricultural Department do? It will buy $75,000 worth of seeds. It will then pay some money to the several agricultural and other papers in the United States to advertise the fact that it has the seeds on hand; it will solicit applications for those seeds, and they will all go out. It is a difference whether the matter will be handled by Members of Congress or whether it will be handled by the Agricultural Department. I do not think it makes a great deal of difference, except as to the amount, which proposition is adopted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I simply want to state that the outstanding contracts affecting the northern and southern mills as well as the entire cotton trade are involved in whether or not this bill reaches the President before the 1st of June. Unless it does, it will create utter confusion and will certainly cause incalculable loss. Contracts are outstanding now, and it is said by some lawyers that on account of the rider being placed last March on the wheat bill the amendment of the cotton-futures act will lapse with the termination of that bill, and there is a provision in this bill making it permanent legislation. It will involve one of the greatest industries in this country if it is not made permanent legislation before the 1st of June. Even if the seed question were more serious than it is, I think the matter is of sufficient importance for us to waive that question in order to get this bill to a point where it may be signed, to obviate that difficulty.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think there is anything in the world so fortunate as the free-seed proposition. It is always saved by some situation such as this.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I would not discuss the merits or demerits of the proposition in the face of the situation that I have outlined. The Senator from Idaho is right in this instance, that if it is to be defeated it seems to me it is fortunate that it is under the shadow of such an impelling necessity, because I assure him that there is not a mill in this country nor elsewhere but that will be affected, nor could a more serious condition confront the cotton trade than to have this thing lapse and not be signed by the 1st of June. It involves every contract.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall support the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], because I think it is all right to distribute these seeds. I did not think so when I first came to the Senate, and I helped strike the provision from the Senate bill. I did not think so the next year, but I really believe there has been a change in conditions, as a result of which the use of these seeds is doing good.

In my own instance I have calls for all that are furnished me from schools in which practical experimental agricultural gardens are conducted. I wish I had more to send them. I understand that now even the city Congressmen use their seeds, because in the cities where there is a patch of land gardening has begun in the last two or three years, and they need the seed for distribution.

I think it is all right. For eight years we have gone through the farce of striking out the seed appropriation in the Senate and then yielding to the House. The House Members are closer to the people in their districts than we can be. They have less to serve and know their wishes. I believe the people want these seeds; I believe they are entitled to have them; and I shall support this motion, because I have come to the conclusion that the House is right about the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to say just one word in regard to the argument made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and also the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], that there is a provision in this bill that makes it necessary that it become a law before the 1st of June.

The provision to which the Senator refers is one of the amendments of the Senate that makes permanent law something that will expire on the 1st of June. If this bill were not enacted until the 4th or 5th of June, I do not think it would make any material difference; it would make it permanent law just the same. But, Mr. President, the bill can go to the President before the 1st of June if we defeat this motion and make this proposition of a compromise, so that the House will have an opportunity to vote on it, which they never yet have had. It can probably all be done to-day, so that there is not any real delay involved in it.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a word.

I hope that the motion of the Senator from Mississippi will be voted down. If, as the Senator said, for seven or eight years we have yielded to the House upon this item, it is about time the Senate adhered to its convictions. Apparently—and I do not speak with any disrespect at all of the other body; of course, that would not be proper under the rule—the other body, upon a number of bills, has expressed itself very forcibly, and the Senate has felt constrained to yield.

I do not approve at all of the view expressed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I think this is a cheap and demagogic way of appealing to the people and a method of advertising by Congressmen and Senators that they want the votes of the people. I think it is a most disgraceful performance that we should appropriate money for this purpose when we know the object of it and know the misuse of the appropriation.

Mr. NORRIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may the substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska be stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has not offered any substitute.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand; but the Senator has signified that he will do so, and, of course, we should like to be advised of what the ultimate proposition is to be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can read it, but it is not in order at this time. The Senator from Montana requests the reading of the substitute again.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, of course it was not in order for me to offer it now on this motion. As I said before, if the motion to recede is defeated, then I shall offer this as an instruction to the conferees when I ask that the matter be sent back for further conference.

In the language that I use here I keep the language that is in this particular amendment. Of course, I want it to be understood that I shall offer this, if I get an opportunity, only as a compromise. I would rather have it all go out.

It reads as follows:

For the purchase, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, $75,000. Said seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall be sent only to such persons as shall make request therefor: Provided, That all such requests made of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, if transmitted to the Department of Agriculture, shall be complied with by said department.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course the Senator means that they shall be complied with within the limit of the appropriation.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes. It will not come anywhere near using up the appropriation, as a matter of fact.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I think that had better be put in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been called for. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that the Senate recede from its amendment No. 93. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. Were I at liberty to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. GRONNA's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which I transfer to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALDER. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the negative). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate. I have agreed to pair with him for the day. I find, however, that I can transfer that pair to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], and I do so, and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are absent on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence I transfer my pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. DIAL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], which I transfer to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Chamberlain	Henderson	Phelan	Smith, S. C.

So the Senate refused to recede from its amendment numbered 93.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendment numbered 93, ask for a further conference with the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be instructed in accordance with the language which I sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HARRISON. Will it have to be read again?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been read twice to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I am going to make a point of order on that proposition on the ground that it is new matter, that it was not considered by the conferees when the matter was in conference, and that the Senate can not take any action like that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Like what? Like amending an amendment or instructing the conferees—which?

Mr. HARRISON. A motion was made to instruct the conferees to substitute this provision, I understand. That proposition is not in conference at all and has not been considered by the conferees. If the conferees on their own motion should want to consider it and report it back to the House and the Senate, they could do it; but it is not for the Senate to take the initiative.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senate can amend its amendment if it chooses to do so, but the present occupant of the chair has never believed that you can instruct conferees. That is equivalent to saying to the House conferees, "You have got to take the amendment." It does not leave it open to a full and free conference if you tell the conferees that they have got to take it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Chair rules that it is not within the power of the Senate to instruct its conferees I wish to state that I admit it is something which I have never seen done in the Senate, but I think in general parliamentary law it is conceded to be a proper motion. The reason why it has never been done in the Senate, as I understand it, is because the conferees never wanted to have it done; but this motion is presented by the conferees. It is a very common procedure in the House of Representatives. It was done just the other day on this particular bill in regard to the so-called Comer amendment. The conferees were instructed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the opinion of the Chair that whenever that is done the Senate conferees ought to withdraw immediately from the conference.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the statement of the Chair?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate conferees should immediately withdraw from a conference whenever the House of Representatives undertakes to tell the Senate that it has to accept an amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not construe this motion as meaning that the Senate has to do it, and it does not mean that the House has to do it. It is a proposition. The Senate instructs its conferees to make this proposition to the House conferees. It has the added force of coming from the Senate rather than from the Senate conferees, and the House conferees do not have to agree to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Suppose the conferees agree, without any instructions from the Senate, on this proposed amendment, offered by the Senator, would it not be subject to a point of order, when it was brought into the Senate, as new matter?

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President. If the Senator will look at the amendment and the language suggested to be inserted in lieu of it, he will have to concede that it is not subject to a point of order. It is exactly the same subject, and uses the same language, as far as it goes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would be on the same subject, but modified, and then it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no doubt about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to rule, and then an appeal can be taken and the matter settled.

The Chair holds that it will be in order for the Senate, if it chooses, to adopt the amendment as presented by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The Chair holds, secondly, that it is not in order to instruct the conferees to insist upon this amendment; that that is in violation of the principle of the rule with reference to a full and free conference between the two Houses. An appeal from either or both rulings can be taken.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the Secretary may read the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In lieu of the Senate amendment insert the following:

> For the purchase, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, $75,000. Said seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall be sent only to such persons as shall make request therefor: Provided, That all such requests made of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, if transmitted to the Department of Agriculture, shall be complied with by said department.

Mr. NORRIS. I will modify the caption. It ought to read, "in lieu of the language stricken out by the Senate amendment."

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so modified.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. This is a conference report we are considering now; we are not considering it originally as a bill in the Senate. Of course, the Senate could instruct the conferees, as proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, on something which the House had done to which the Senate had not agreed; the House could instruct on the Comer amendment, because the Senate had agreed to the Comer amendment. But this is a conference report. If the Senate should adopt the substitute, what would be in conference? Would the original proposition be in conference or would this substitute be in conference?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The substitute.

Mr. HARRISON. Something which the House conferees have never considered, which has not been before the House in its original form, or before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Both the original and this substitute. An appeal can be taken. The Chair does not care anything about it, and the Chair does not know that he is right.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand; but I never appeal from a decision of the Chair, because I have profound respect for his judgment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know that he is right, but it seems to the Chair that the Senate has a perfect right now to send back the only remaining item in conference and to send back to the conferees the question whether the original Senate amendment shall stand or whether this amendment shall stand. The House conferees have an option to take or reject either one.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not so particular about it. The only thing I wanted to do was to get the judgment of the Senate on whether this would be a fair compromise in the opinion of the Senate, in order that the House conferees, as it came from the Senate instead of the conferees, might feel willing to take the matter back to the House for the House's judgment, if they will not agree to it in a report. I am not so particular whether we are instructed or not. As a member of the conference, if I am on the conference, I will submit it, or something of the same tenor, as a compromise only, because we shall have to compromise on something.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am interested in the form in which this is presented. I have not the slightest doubt but that the Senator from Nebraska has a right to take the sense of the Senate in regard to the course he desires to have the conference pursue. But I understand that this is in effect an amendment to the bill. The paper before me does not seem to me to be very clear. I have the matter offered, which reads:

> In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following.

In that form, it seems to me, we are practically undertaking to amend a bill which is no longer before the Senate, upon which the Senate took its final vote. If that can be done, then, of course, the whole course of our procedure here, as we have understood it in the past, would be changed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. REED. I will.

Mr. NORRIS. I may be wrong, of course, but I did not offer it as a matter of instructing the conferees with the idea that I was thereby amending the bill. I think that it only has the effect of expressing to the House through the conferees that the Senate would be willing to accept it. It does not mean that they have to agree on this or nothing, as I understand it.

Mr. REED. If it is put in the form that the Senate directs the conferees to endeavor to have this language inserted, I think it is parliamentary and can be done, but if it is a proposal to amend the text of the bill I do not think it can be done, and I think it would be a very hazardous precedent to establish.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to propound a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.

In the judgment of the Chair, would the language suggested by the Senator from Missouri be a proper parliamentary procedure? If so, I am perfectly willing to make my motion in that form. That is as far as I want to go.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already ruled.

Mr. REED. There was some confusion, and I did not hear the ruling.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it would be proper, if the Senator wishes to adopt it, to say that the conferees be not instructed, but requested to agree upon a compromise with the House conferees upon the proposed basis. That can be done, but the Chair does not think the Senate can instruct the conferees.

Mr. NORRIS. I withdraw the motion as originally stated and make it in the form the Chair has suggested, that the conferees on the part of the Senate be requested to submit the following language in lieu of the language stricken out by amendment numbered 93.

Mr. REED. I think that is parliamentary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As a compromise of the disagreement between the two Houses?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that can be done.

Mr. REED. With the question stated in that form, I beg the indulgence of the Senate for just about five minutes.

This is an old fight, and has its origin in the theory that the distribution of seeds is a sort of congressional graft, and that the seeds are distributed for the furtherance of the campaigns of Congressmen. It is like a great many other claims that are put forward, and no one sees fit to deny them or explain the facts until the charge becomes accepted as a fact.

I have not the slightest doubt in the world that there is not an item in all the appropriations made by Congress that so directly and immediately benefits all the people of the United States as the item in the appropriation bill which provides for the distribution of seeds. Of course, no one can follow the benefits and point out exactly where the benefits have occurred, or count up in the aggregate the value to the country; but the fact is that if the Department of Agriculture does its business right, and no one has charged to the contrary, it provides a superior quality of seed that, of course, will produce a superior product.

These seeds are called for by the people of the United States. Speaking for myself, I can not supply, out of the quota of seeds assigned to me as a Senator, one-tenth of the demands or requests that are made for seeds from my State. These requests come from the country, to use a common expression, from "the forks of the creek," from the little neighborhoods, and frequently their receipt is followed by letters of thanks.

I do not care whether the seeds are sent out through Congressmen or not. I would be quite willing to be relieved of the responsibility and that labor, but the man who thinks that seeds sent out to the country and planted and reproduced do not pay for themselves many times over is a very peculiar sort of individual. Here is a community that has just an ordinary kind of tomato. Some one sends in and gets from the Government a superior variety, and one of the good old ladies in the community raises them in her garden. All the other women folks get that seed the next year. The result is that the little package of seed that is sent out from Washington to Mrs. Jones or Mrs. Smith may be the cause of the introduction into an entire county of a superior variety of that product.

This has gone on for years. I have no doubt in the world that the seeds sent out from Washington have produced in products one hundred thousand times the value of the entire cost.

This is some more Republican cheeseparing, picayunish parsimony for political purposes. You vote $600,000,000 a year for an Army without batting an eye. You vote old-age pensions that, before you are through with them, will run to a billion dollars a year in this country, and do not shed a tear. You expend a million dollars a day to keep soldiers in Europe who ought to have been back here 12 months ago, and it does not disturb the peaceful serenity of your dreams. You carry on these plans of enormous expenditure and insist upon an Army of 300,000 men in a time of profound peace, with no enemy at our gates, and no possible enemy to attack us. But when it comes to sending some garden seeds out to the people of the United States you suddenly become very economical. You can tear down a river and harbor appropriation so that the improvements already in will be swept away in two or three years, and then you can vote ten times the sum for something that brings no return, and congratulate yourselves upon your wonderful financial ability.

I hope that this compromise and back-down proposition will be defeated. I hope the House of Representatives will stand just where it stands now, insisting on the provision as it passed the House. There is no use talking much more about it. There are some Senators here who think that this Government is going to be saved by cutting off a few pennies here and a few pennies there, who sit here, and will sit here, having voted and intending to vote in the future for expenditures that are inexcusable. The idea of an Army of 300,000 men in the United States in time of profound peace!

While we are talking about depriving the farmers and owners of little gardens in little villages of seeds, we are talking about going over to Armenia and taking charge of the battle grounds of Europe and Asia.

Mr. McCORMICK. May I interrupt the Senator to say that not many of us here are talking about going over to Armenia.

Mr. REED. I understand that the Senator is not.

Mr. McCORMICK. No; nor many anywhere in the Chamber.

Mr. REED. It may be not, and so much the better; but while that subject is being forced on the attention of the American people and a sentiment sought to be created in favor of it, a proposition that will cost the country, if it is carried, the maintenance of an army of not less than 1,000,000 men in Armenia, we are haggling here about some seeds which sown in good ground will produce one hundredfold.

I said an army of a million men, and I mean it, for whoever undertakes to take charge of the new Armenia and hold it must be prepared to hold it against the entire Turkish hordes, against the hordes of Arabia, and ultimately to defend it against the vast forces of Russia. Some Senators on both sides of the Chamber who may not be for the Armenian proposition, who balk at taking charge of a small section of the world, have been standing here for 18 months insisting that we shall go into a general scheme for the control of the entire world, with all its vast expense in blood and in treasure. Some of those same gentlemen will vote to take the garden seed away from the people in their communities.

I have talked longer than I intended and have gone into other subjects.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. REED. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as on the last roll call, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the affirmative). Making the same announcement regarding my pair and its transfer to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] as on the last roll call, I will let my vote stand.

Mr. EDGE. I inquire if the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I inquire if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut, which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]; and

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—39.

So Mr. NORRIS's motion was agreed to, and it was entered in the Journal, as follows:

Mr. NORRIS moves that the Senate request a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate amendment numbered 93, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair, and that they be requested, if possible, to compromise the disagreement upon the said amendment upon substantially the following bases:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert:

"For the purchase, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, $75,000. Said seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall be sent only to such persons as shall make request therefor: Provided, That all such requests made of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, if transmitted to the Department of Agriculture, shall be complied with by said department."

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. GRONNA, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. McCORMICK. May I presume on the good nature of the Senator from Washington to permit me now to atempt to secure consideration for the unanimous report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator from Illinois can have the report disposed of without discussion, I will ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on House bill 9783, called up by the Senator from Illinois, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the report.

[For report see Senate proceedings of May 26, pp. 7660–7663.]

During the reading of the conference report,

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will make a brief explanation of the points in disagreement and of the changes which have been made in the Senate bill, it seems to me that would answer the purpose. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the conference report be dispensed with, and that the Senator from Illinois make a brief explanation of the points of difference and of the action of the conferees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, it would be inexact as it would be ungenerous to our colleagues on the conference committee to say that, although the report embodies some changes in the form of the bill as it passed the Senate, it represents substantially no modification of the substance of that bill. The text of the report, as the Senator will learn, if he will turn to page 3, section 207, provides for the creation of a bureau of the budget; that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be the director thereof, and that there shall be an assistant director appointed by the President. The Senate bill provided that there should be in the Treasury a bureau of the budget and the commissioner thereof appointed by the President.

The bill reported by the conferees includes, in section 205, the provision that for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for the service of that year only, there shall be presented an alternative budget, incorporating therefor an important provision of the House bill which was not included in the Senate bill.

Those are the sole radical departures from the substance of the Senate bill.

Under Title III, creating the general accounting office, the report of the conferees includes all of the substantive provisions of the Senate bill, but does not create by statute——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the second change to which he has just referred, I think it would be very well for him to explain what he means by the alternative.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, it was felt by the conferees for the House that possibly some good might accrue from the presentation of a budget classified in detail according to the kind of service purposed to be supported by appropriations rather than classified according to departments and establishments of government.

I may illustrate by pointing out that to-day there are a number of map-making services scattered through the several departments and that there are a number of health services distributed through the several departments. If I understand the purpose of the conferees of the House, they intend to vest in the President the power to present for the fiscal year 1923, and for this year only, the budget in two forms, the first following in general terms the present Book of Estimates and classified by departments and divisions, the second or alternative budget presenting the estimates aggregated and correlated as to the kind of service. Thus, for example, the estimates for these several map-making services or health services would be presented under the general head of maps or of health rather than classified by departments and establishments of the Government, as under the Book of Estimates with which Senators are familiar.

If I have answered the query of the Senator from North Carolina as it touched the alternative budget, I shall proceed to a very brief consideration of the general accounting office.

The Senate bill provided that there should be three assistants to the comptroller general, each charged with specific responsibilities, to be carried out under the direction of the comptroller general and with his approval—an assistant comptroller, discharging the duties of the present auditors; a second, who would be an expert accountant; and a third, who would be the general bookkeeper of the Government. The conferees of the House held that it would be a mistake rigidly to confer upon three statutory subordinates of the comptroller general the responsibilities fixed by the Senate bill, for reasons of general administration, but especially because the responsibilities of the comptroller general were to be new, and that to departmentize too rigidly now would hamper in the organization of his department. They held that especially it would inhibit an effort to rid the department of about 20 per cent of the employees now engaged in the work for which the comptroller general would be responsible. The conferees of the Senate were brought to agree with the conferees of the House by their argument. The conferees of the House, on the other hand, accepted the general additional powers of the comptroller's office, upon which the committee of the Senate had insisted from the beginning. Finally, that provision of the Senate bill of the value of which the members of the Senate committee were the least certain, the provision creating the board of appeals, we struck out. There was none of the members of the Senate Committee on the Budget who was clearly convinced of the wisdom of this provision; and in the face of the insistence of the House conferees, and conscious of our own want of confidence in our provision, we yielded.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCORMICK. Certainly.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if there is any reviewing board or any appellate power that takes the place of the provision that was stricken out?

Mr. McCORMICK. The comptroller, for certain purposes, may vest specified responsibilities in his subordinates in order that they may make settlements. Provision is made that settlements so determined by his subordinates may be appealed to the comptroller himself.

Mr. President, like all agreements upon measures of this general character, like the agreement between the House and Senate on the railroad bill, there has been concession on the part of the conferees for the Senate and on the part of the conferees for the House. As I suggested at the beginning of my remarks, in my judgment, in substance, the conferees for the House yielded the greater part.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois further yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCORMICK. I do.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think, now, that with the arrangement made the bill is entirely congruous?

Mr. McCORMICK. It is that. It is devoid of any incongruity.

Mr. KING. It articulates in such a way as that there will be proper functioning of the various departments and agencies created?

Mr. McCORMICK. It does. It was the long labor necessary to contrive articulation which delayed our report.

I have only trespassed upon the generosity of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] because the members of the House Budget Committee have urged, and insistently urged, first, that we act to-day in order that they might act, and, secondly, in order that under the new law the President of the United States may make the necessary appointments before the Senate goes into recess. The very important appointments of the comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general must be submitted to the Senate for confirmation before the new law takes effect on July 1. I hope that the Senate may adopt this report to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I merely want to say one or two words.

It is very well known that the Senate committee charged with the duty of framing legislation for the purpose of establishing a budget gave most mature consideration to the House bill, and as a result that committee, of which I was a member, materially changed the House plan. Of course, it was expected when the matter went to conference that there would be stubborn contention on the part of the conferees representing both bodies for their views. The conference report does not, in my judgment, materially change the measure as it passed the Senate, and practically all of the changes that are made are with reference to matters about which there was controversy in the Senate committee framing the bill.

There were two courses of procedure with reference to the establishment of the budget system. Both of those methods met approval on the part of certain members of the Senate committee. We finally selected the one which was different from that proposed by the House. Now, the conferees have compromised these matters of difference, retaining a part of the Senate plan, and the Senate has yielded to a part of the House plan.

In my judgment the result of the conference has not materially weakened the bill as framed by the Senate committee. It has merely changed the form of the procedure and shifted slightly the responsibility of final action; but, in my judgment, the general result has been not to weaken the system which it is sought to establish.

This matter of a budget system is one that has been very much discussed in the country. As I took occasion to say once before, both parties have thoroughly committed themselves to a budget system. I do not believe it is possible for the two branches of Congress to have worked out and finally come to an agreement upon a system that will more effectually accomplish the purpose which the Congress has in mind and which the country has in mind in the establishment of a budget than this conference report, and I trust that we may have practically a unanimous vote in support of the conference report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. KING. During the consideration of the bill in the Senate an amendment was offered which created an organization or agency that might go into the departments and make an examination with a view to securing efficiency. The amendment was offered by my colleague, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I understand that that provision has been materially modified. Does the Senator state that the bill as now presented contains any of the terms of that provision?

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that the conference report gives authority which will be amply sufficient to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. If the Senator from Utah will turn to the provisions touching the relation between the budget bureau on the one hand and the comptroller's office on the other with Congress, he will find that both are in large measure either responsible to Congress or required to afford Congress such information as it seeks.

Mr. SIMMONS. He will find also that the accounting department has the right to make investigations to enlighten itself with reference to expenditures, and that for that purpose they may call for the books of every bureau, department, or establishment of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the senior Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I was simply going to add to what the Senator said that it also provides that Congress shall have the right and power to request this bureau to make an examination and report the facts to Congress on any item found in the budget. I recognize the fact that it is not exactly in conformity with the amendment which was offered by me and agreed to by the Senate, but perhaps it will work out as nearly through the agency created in the budget bill, as now reported, as it could possibly be without the adoption of the plan originally offered by me. I would prefer, of course, to have had the other provision, but I am quite confident that the compromise will work out along the lines which some of us had in mind, namely, that Congress would have some agency at their command to make a thorough investigation on any estimate calling for money from the Treasury of the United States and report their findings direct to Congress and not through some other source.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I entirely concur in the statement made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I think the bill provides ample authority to enable Congress to secure such information as it may need. I think it also confers upon the accounting bureau ample authority to make investigations in the departments, that all the facts will be available to them, and that they will have full authority to examine the books and obtain the information in order to advise Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

TUNGSTEN ORES.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. PHIPPS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment or two only to make a statement?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I am very much interested in securing consideration for the bill (H. R. 4437) to provide revenue for the Government and to promote the production of tungsten ores and manufactures thereof in the United States. During the past week I have been absent on account of illness, and I realize that as the time of the Senate has been taken up with other measures, that bill has not been reached. I wondered if it would be possible to agree upon a time when consideration of that measure might be had, and whether it might be agreeable to take it up during the morning hour of Saturday next. In order to test the question, I ask unanimous consent that it be taken up in the morning hour on Saturday next.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

HAWAIIAN HOMES COMMISSION.

Mr. NEW. I move that the Committee on Pacific Islands, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13500) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended, to establish a Hawaiian homes commission, and for other purposes, and that it be referred to the Senate Committee on Territories. The reason for the motion is simply that House bill 13500 is the same as the Senate bill on the same subject. The bills are identical. They were introduced concurrently in the two Houses. The one in the Senate was referred to the Committee on Territories, which has had hearings on the bill and is about ready to submit a report. The House bill when it came over to the Senate was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Islands, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. I talked with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], chairman of that committee, about this change of reference, and he thoroughly understands it. The purpose is simply to avoid complications.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes; requests a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GOOD, Mr. VARE, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

S. 4163. An act to incorporate the Roosevelt Memorial Association; and

H. R. 4438. An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I call up the unfinished business and ask for the adoption of the conference report on the water-power bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I very greatly regret that I can not support this conference report, because I realize that it does contain very many excellent features in the public interest. On the other hand, it does contain some features which, in my judgment, are so inimical to the public interest that I can not support it.

I appreciate, Mr. President, that this conference report will in all probability be adopted, but because of the position which I have always taken with reference to this legislation, and the dangers which, it seems to me, lurk in the provisions to which I shall refer in a moment, I wish to make a statement with reference to it before the vote is taken.

I realize, Mr. President, the very great necessity of the development of our water power, the great saving of coal and the effect on transportation which will result from the development of our water power, and I believe that inducements necessary to secure development should be offered to private capital. The difference between the committee and some of us is simply as to what inducements are necessary to secure that development. The committee evidently believes that it is necessary to go very much further in inducements than I believe is necessary to secure that development.

But aside from that, Mr. President, there is one section in the conference report—section 12, found on page 28—which, in my judgment, goes beyond the power of Congress to enact, and I believe that if this report is adopted and this becomes a law the court will hold that at least that section is unconstitutional, and it may hold that because of the unconstitutionality of that section the entire act is rendered invalid.

Mr. President, our jurisdiction with reference to this water-power legislation upon navigable streams depends wholly upon our jurisdiction over navigable waters, and we have no right to legislate with reference to any navigable stream except for the purpose of improving the navigation thereof. All water-power legislation is based upon the theory that the erection of a dam and the conservation of the waters will improve navigation, and if in improving navigation water power is also created in the carrying out of that purpose the Federal Government has the right to deal with that power thus created. But if it be granted in any particular case that the construction of a dam across a navigable river, instead of improving navigation, destroys navigation, it is utterly beyond the power of the Congress to enact any such legislation.

Section 12 as passed by the House provided:

SEC. 12. That whenever application is filed for a project hereunder involving navigable waters of the United States, and the commission shall find upon investigation that the needs of navigation require the construction of a lock or locks or other navigation structures, and that such structures can not, consistent with a reasonable investment cost to the applicant, be provided in the manner specified in section 11, subsection (a) hereof, the commission may, before taking action upon such application, cause a report upon such project to be prepared, with estimates of cost of the power of development and of the navigation structures, and shall submit such report to Congress with such recommendations as it deems appropriate concerning the participation of the United States in the cost of construction of such navigation structures.

So that Congress may, if it deems best, itself provide the navigation structures.

This was permissive as passed by the House, and the Senate adopted an amendment providing that in such case, where the needs of navigation, according to the finding of the commission, required a lock or locks or other navigation structures before granting any applications for a license the matter should be reported to Congress, so that navigation could not be obstructed upon any navigable stream, and that before or in connection with the construction of the dam provision should be made for the necessary lock or locks, in order not to interfere with navigation. Those were the differences between the Houses, the House making it permissive, the Senate making it mandatory.

But now what do we find the conferees have done? The conferees have stricken out both of those provisions and have inserted a new one, reading that the commission "may grant the application, with the provision to be expressed in the license that the licensee will install the necessary navigation structures if the Government fails to make provision therefor within a time to be fixed in the license."

Under the agreements reached by the conferees this commission has the right to obstruct and destroy navigation upon any and every navigable stream in the United States. There is not any question about it; there can not be any question about it. They have the right to grant an application to put a dam across the Mississippi River, so that no boats can float upon that river until such time as Congress, in its wisdom, within the time fixed by the commission, may provide locks, or a private party or a licensee after the expiration of that time may provide them.

But for a period of time fixed in the license the Congress of the United States proposes to give to this subordinate body the power to destroy its navigation in any stream of the United States. That, I say, is beyond the power of the Congress to do. When a body created by Congress, carrying out the directions of Congress, make a finding that the needs of navigation require the construction of a lock or locks in case a dam is built, I say that Congress has no power, either itself or by delegation of power, to authorize the absolute obstruction of that stream without a lock or locks.

I do not believe there is a lawyer in the Senate who upon reflection will disagree with that proposition. It is no answer, as the answer may be made, that the commission would not undertake to exercise any such power, but why put it in? We have a dam across the Mississippi River now at Keokuk. The licensee was required to construct locks in connection with that dam so as not to interfere with navigation, and the theory was that the construction of the dam would in fact improve navigation. But here is authority to absolutely obstruct navigation. Not only is there no possibility in a given case, so far as power is concerned, of improving navigation, but power is delegated to destroy navigation, something utterly and completely beyond the power of Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, and I inquire for information, his position is that this provision of the bill in the reported agreement of the conferees permits the Federal Government to engage in the power business by obstructing navigation; in other words, it subordinates its power to control navigation in the interest of commerce, to the establishment of power instrumentalities upon the streams of the country?

Mr. LENROOT. That is true. I think it will be conceded by everyone that the Congress has no power to obstruct and destroy navigation upon the navigable streams for the purpose of creating power.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that is so obvious that the mere statement of it carries with it the conviction of its soundness. The Federal Government may not interfere with navigable streams except for the purpose of protecting the streams for navigable purpose or uses. It has no power and it has no right, as I understand the law, to go upon a stream and regard it primarily for power purposes, and it may exercise no authority whatever over the streams except to say that they shall not be interfered with for navigable uses.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is correct. The law very clearly is that the only power of Congress over a navigable stream is for the control and improvement of its navigation. It may be in a given case, where the Congress authorizes the erection of a dam across a navigable stream, that opinions will differ as to whether that dam did improve or injure navigation. The courts would not inquire into that, holding that that was a matter for Congress to determine. But here is a case where it is expressly provided in the law that a body created by Congress, if they shall find that navigation will be injured by the construction of the dam, nevertheless may destroy navigation and absolutely obstruct the stream.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that he stated the proposition a little too broadly with respect to the action which the courts might take? It seems to me, of course, that it is a legislative question to determine whether or not a structure constructed in a stream injures navigation, and yet at the same time cases will suggest themselves to the minds of Senators and can easily be conceived of where there could be no possible question but that the structure created did destroy navigation, so that it would cease to be a legislative determination and become a question for the courts to pass on.

Mr. LENROOT. I agree; and a very plain illustration would be this: Supposing the Congress enacted a law authorizing the erection of a dam across the Mississippi River without any provision for locks. That very clearly would be beyond the power of Congress. But Congress might pass a law authorizing the erection of a dam across the Mississippi River with locks, and even with those locks it might be a question of fact whether navigation was improved or injured by the erection of the dam.

In such case the courts would not inquire into that question of fact, but would take the conclusion of Congress as being final. But in the case I just mentioned I do not believe the chairman of the committee would undertake to say that we have the right to authorize the absolute obstruction of the Mississippi River without providing navigation facilities; and yet that is exactly what this does, after a finding by the commission that those facilities are necessary in the interest of navigation.

I think it is very unfortunate. It would be very much better to have left the House provision as it was, which was permissive. The Senate provision was even very much better. I really can not understand what may have been in the minds of the conferees, not only upon the merits of the case, but to so greatly endanger the constitutionality of this measure. So much for that proposition.

The next proposition to which I refer is a provision with reference to the charges that may be imposed as a consideration for the granting of a license. The House bill provided that the commission should have the right to exact a charge for the privilege granted. The Senate provision modified that, in effect, limiting the charges, except upon public lands, to reasonable charges to pay the cost of the administration of the act. The conference agreement provides for a charge for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the cost of the administration of the act, for recompensing it for the use and occupancy of the enjoyment of any public land, and then goes on and provides:

And for the expropriation to the Government of excessive profits until the respective States shall make provision for preventing excessive profits or for the expropriation thereof to themselves, or until the period of amortization as herein provided is reached, and in fixing such charges the commission shall seek to avoid increasing the price to the consumers of power by such charges, and charges for the expropriation of excessive profits may be adjusted from time to time by the commission as conditions may require:

Mr. President, I have never contended that the United States ought to exact any charge for the privilege granted other than to reimburse itself for the cost of administration in any case where the public will get the benefit of the privilege. I have only contended, and have contended for years, that the commission should have the authority to exact a charge only where the public does not and will not get the benefit of the privilege and the privilege granted enables the licensee to make exorbitant profits for itself.

I am not going to take the time to-day, for I have argued it many times before, to discuss the classifications where the public would not get the benefit of the privilege and where the only recompense the public can secure is through the exaction of a charge.

One of the most familiar illustrations is that where the power created is not distributed to the public, but is a power created for a manufacturing establishment either owned directly or indirectly by the same financial interests that erect a dam. The regulation of charges in that kind of a case by State commissions does not amount to a snap of one's finger. It is taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another pocket, and that is all that it amounts to.

With the language that is agreed upon, while there is a great deal of language there looking to the protection of the public against excessive profits, in actual practice it will be of no value because the provision is directed against the licensee and against the licensee alone, and wherever the licensee distributes the power created to the general public there is no occasion for any charge. The State commission can regulate it in that kind of a case.

But take a great water power for the production of nitrate, where it requires 100,000 horsepower, where the creation of the horsepower is for the purpose of that manufacture, as to which there is a monopoly in the United States to-day, the only nitrates coming in competition being the nitrates that may be imported from Chile. In that kind of a case what would any licensee do? The licensee in its corporate capacity would not own the manufacturing plant. The licensee would erect the dam, the licensee would make a rate and charge to its subsidiary corporation for the power created, and the subsidiary corporation might make 100 per cent a year upon the money actually invested in it, and it is absolutely without the terms of the bill.

On the other hand, if the commission were given discretion to take all of these things into consideration, it could inquire and would inquire whether such a subsidiary corporation was in fact owned by the same interests that owned the stock of the licensee, and if they found that there was such condition they would impose and could impose and should impose a charge upon the licensee. It will not be done and it can not be done under the provisions as agreed upon in conference.

The next and last provision to which I desire to call attention is the one which was discussed so much when the bill was before the Senate previously, relating to what I then claimed amounted to a perpetual license to licensees under the bill. I am very clear that I was correct in my contention, but, whether I was or not, there is no question now, in the form that the conferees have reported it, that it is a perpetual license. It goes on forever. Not only that, but it delegates to the courts the power to determine whether or not a law enacted by Congress is reasonable, which is something entirely unprecedented in the history of the Congress of the United States. The House provision read:

Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over and does not issue a new license to the original or a new licensee, then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license—

And so forth. The Senate provision read:

Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not issue a license to a new licensee, or tender a new license to the original licensee, upon the terms and conditions aforesaid which is accepted, then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee—

And so forth. The conferees have stricken out the word "tender" and have inserted the word "issue," so that it now reads:

Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not issue a license to a new licensee, or issue a new license to the original licensee, upon reasonable terms, then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee.

Mr. President, when the conferees struck out the word "tender" and inserted the word "issue" they removed any possible doubt as to the definition the word "issue" should have in this connection. It might have been argued, and it was argued by the very gentlemen who are interested in this legislation in connection with the conference report of last year, that the word "issue" as used herein did not mean a license accepted by the licensee, but one that was tendered. I admitted in the argument here when the bill was before the Senate that that question was open to argument; but when the conferees strike out the word "tender" and insert the word "issue" they must have had some purpose in so doing. So in the construction of this act the courts will not read "issue" as being synonymous with "tender," but they will necessarily read that a new license in order to be effective must be accepted by the original licensee. Consequently, if the original licensee chooses to sit back and say, "I do not care to accept this new license; I prefer to go on from year to year so long as time shall run under the original terms of my license," he will have the legal right to do so under this conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The effect would be, would it not, to make the lease perpetual?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. At least, it gives the lessee the right to make it perpetual?

Mr. LENROOT. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. The Government would have in reality nothing to say about it.

Mr. LENROOT. Absolutely nothing. That is the very contention that I am making. The lessee may go on forever under the terms of the original lease until such time as the licensee is willing to accept a new license or lease from the Government.

But it is said, Mr. President, that the provisions for the recapture of the property and its leasing to a new licensee or the recapture by the Government itself are a sufficient protection to the Government, because at the expiration of the term the Government could take over the property upon paying the compensation provided for in the bill. I am sure that not one of the gentlemen interested in this bill believe the Government should ever take such property over and operate it; they are all against that; but they say if the original licensee is not willing to accept a new license we can lease it to a new licensee who is willing to take it over and pay for it. Let us see what the new licensee would have to pay and how impossible it would be for a new licensee under any ordinary conditions ever to accept a transfer. Under the provisions of this bill, Mr. President, if the property is transferred to a new licensee he must pay not only every dollar that has been invested in the plant, less any amortization which may have occurred during the term, but he must under the provisions of the bill pay what is termed "severance damages" to the original licensee, which may easily amount to a great deal more than the entire value of the property that is taken over. He gets no value from those damages. The only value to the new licensee is the property that is taken over, but under the bill he is compelled not only to pay for that but to pay damages upon the theory that the licensee has been injured at the end of the term by the severance of his property. Of course, treating the license as a perpetual franchise, as is now provided in the conference report, the original licensee is injured by the severance of his property; but if the lease had been for a flat term of 50 years, as it ought to have been, giving the Government the power to accept the terms instead of granting such power to the licensee; if Congress had been given any control over these water powers, as it ought to have been, after giving such liberal inducements to private parties as would result in their development, then there could be no damages at the end of the 50 years. How could there possibly be any damages when the licensee has secured all that his contract called for?

But under the terms of this conference report, as I said a moment ago, after paying the full value of the plant, it is provided that severance damages must be paid, upon the theory that the licensee has been injured at the end of the 50 years through the severance of the property. Gentlemen can not take the position that this is not a perpetual license, on the one hand, and then say severance damages are just upon the other. The only possible justification for severance damages would be that at the end of the 50 years the licensees had legal rights still existing of which we were depriving them, and, therefore, that severance damages would be proper. If they have no legal rights at the end of the 50 years, there can be no proper severance damages.

But that is not all. The Senate adopted an amendment, which was proposed by me, providing some limitation upon the severance damages that might be allowed; a very liberal limitation it was, too. It provided that the total severance damages allowed should in no case exceed the value of the works taken; in other words, if the Government took over the property, or if a new licensee took it over, the severance damages should in no case exceed the value of the property taken; or if the Government took it over, or if a new licensee wanted it, they should in no case be compelled to pay more than twice what the plant was worth. But we find the conferees have stricken out that limitation; it is not now found in the bill. There is no protection either to the Government or to a new licensee. There is no limit to the severance damages that may be allowed; and under the language of the bill as it now comes to us from the conferees, recognizing the right under a perpetual franchise of a licensee to damages for the severance of his property, the courts may very well hold that if a water power is created under a license of the Government at a cost of $10 per horsepower per year, and the plant is taken over and horsepower from other source or by steam is required to take its place, costing $30 per year, the Government must pay a profit to the licensee of $20 per horsepower per year.

Mr. President, the provisions for recapture found in this bill are not worth the paper upon which they are written, so far as any protection to the Government is concerned, for the bill provides practically for a perpetual franchise. I am very sorry that we come to the end of this important legislation with such a surrender as it seems to me is found in the conference report.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, under the act passed by Congress in 1906 to construct dams across navigable waters, and the further act passed in 1910, no obstruction may be placed upon navigable rivers without the consent of the Federal authorities. Since the act of 1910 was passed, no further legislation has been enacted covering this question.

The present water-power act provides a method for getting permission of the Federal authorities to erect dams and other obstructions on the navigable waters of the country. Some such act is undoubtedly necessary if the water-power development of the country is to be allowed to proceed.

I am not finding any fault with the general purpose of the act, although there are Senators who have taken that position. What I do object to is the definition of "navigable waters" contained in this bill.

The House provision reads as follows:

That the term "navigable waters," as used in this act and as applied to streams, shall be construed to include only such streams or parts of streams as are in their ordinary natural condition used for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce or which through improvement heretofore or hereafter made have been or shall become usable in such commerce.

The Senate amendment to the House bill, which has been adopted by the conferees, reads as follows:

"Navigable waters" means those parts of streams or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and which either in their natural or improved condition, notwithstanding interruptions between the navigable parts of such streams or waters by falls, shallows, or rapids compelling land carriage, are used or suitable for use for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce, including therein all such interrupting falls, shallows, or rapids, together with such other parts of streams as shall have been authorized by Congress for improvement by the United States or shall have been recommended to Congress for such improvement after investigation under its authority.

The Constitution of the United States does not specifically mention "navigable waters." The only right of Congress to take jurisdiction over such waters is under the clause of the Constitution allowing Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States.

The purpose of this bill is not really to regulate commerce but to control water powers. As such it should not go beyond what really affects the commerce of the country.

At a hearing before the conferees of the House and Senate on this bill a number of Senators and Representatives who object to the Senate amendment made the following suggestions to the conferees, either that the House provisions be adopted as it stood or that the Senate amendment be adopted with the following changes:

First. To strike out the words "or other bodies of water" on line 2 of the amendment. This would prevent the making of all parts of streams which are the outlets of navigable lakes subject to the provisions of this bill, which the present amendment would clearly do.

Second. The striking out of the word "and" in line 5 of the amendment. This would limit the rest of the amendment to the parts of streams which are navigable and would not be in addition thereto.

Third. To strike out the words "are used or suitable for use," in line 9, and insert the following: "are habitually used or with or without the proposed improvements have a reasonable prospect of being so used." The purpose of this change is to limit the section to parts of streams which are really to be used for the purpose of interstate or foreign commerce.

Fourth. To strike out lines 14 and 15, which read "or shall have been recommended to Congress for such improvement after investigation under its authority."

It is absurd to claim that the action of Congress in recommending a survey to determine whether a part of a stream may be so improved as to make it navigable should make that part of the stream navigable before the improvement has been authorized by Congress.

None of these proposed suggestions were adopted by the conferees. The only change that was made in the Senate amendment by the conferees was the addition of the words "between the navigable parts of such streams or waters" after the word "interruptions" in line 8.

Congress can not under the Constitution determine what shall and what shall not become "navigable waters." The decision must lie in all cases with the courts, and the decisions of the courts as to just what constitutes "navigable waters" are not uniform.

On May 4 Congressman WHITE, of Maine, made a very excellent speech in the House of Representatives, and I will refer to what he says about navigable waters:

What are "navigable waters" of the United States? What is the rule which must be applied in determining whether a particular stream comes within our jurisdiction? Cases in which the question has been discussed are many, but in them all the principle which must guide is clearly recognized.

In the Daniel Ball (10 Wall., 557) the court said:

"Those rivers must be regarded as public navigable rivers in law which are navigable in fact. And they are navigable in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition as highways of commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water.

In the Montello (20 Wall., 436) the court accepted navigability of the river in its natural state as the proper test, and said:

"If it (the river) be capable in its natural state of being used for purposes of commerce, * * * it is navigable in fact, and becomes in law a public river or highway."

And, again, it lays down the proposition that—

"The vital and essential point is whether the natural navigation of the river is such that it affords a channel for useful commerce."

The case quotes with approval the language by Chief Justice Shaw, of Massachusetts (21 Pickering, 344), in which he asserts that it is not—

"Every small creek in which a fishing skiff or gunning canoe can be made to float at high water which is deemed navigable, but in order to give it the character of a navigable stream it must be generally and commonly useful to some purpose of trade or agriculture."

And through the years the principle laid down in these early cases has been followed. The measure is the use or the susceptibility of use of the stream in its natural condition for useful commerce.

In United States v. Rio Grade Dam & Irrigation Co. (174 U. S., 690) the court limited the definition in this language:

"The mere fact that logs, poles, and rafts are floated down a stream occasionally and in times of high water does not make it a navigable river."

This case emphasizes the requirement that we must look to the ordinary and natural condition of the stream and to its natural availability for substantial commerce.

The case of United States v. Brewer-Elliott Oil & Gas Co. (249 Fed. Rep., 615) states the essentials of the rule with unusual clarity. I quote from the opinion:

"The issue of navigability is one of fact. * * * A river is not navigable unless so in fact. It will be deemed navigable when used or susceptible of use in its ordinary condition as a highway of trade and travel in the customary modes on water. * * * The exceptional use of a stream for purposes of transportation in times of temporary high water or 'the mere fact that logs, poles, and rafts are floated down the stream occasionally * * * in * * * high water does not make it a navigable river.' To meet the test * * * a watercourse should be susceptible of use for purposes of commerce or possess a capacity for valuable floatage in the transportation to market of the products of this country through which it runs. It should be a practical usefulness to the public as a public highway in its natural state and without the aid of artificial means. A theoretical or potential navigability, or one that is temporary, precarious, and unprofitable, is not sufficient."

In Donnelly v. United States (228 U. S., 262) we find the rule expressed thus:

"The question of the navigability in fact of nontidal streams is sometimes a doubtful one. It has been held in fact that what are navigable waters of the United States within the meaning of the act of Congress in contradistinction to the navigable waters of the States depends upon whether the stream in its ordinary condition affords a channel for useful commerce."

One of the recent cases on this subject, and the last to which I shall refer in this connection, is United States v. Cross (243 U. S., 316). I quote:

"In Kentucky * * * numerous cases have arisen where it has been necessary to draw the line between public and private right in waters alleged to be navigable, and by an unbroken current of authorities it has become well established that the test of navigability in fact is to be applied to the stream in its natural condition, not as artificially raised by dams or similar structures; that the public right is to be measured by the capacity of the stream for valuable public use in its natural condition; that riparian owners have a right to the enjoyment of the natural flow without burden or hindrance imposed by artificial means, and no public easement beyond the natural one can arise without grant or dedication save by condemnation with appropriate compensation for the private right. * * * We have found no case to the contrary. * * * Many State courts * * * have held, also, that the legislature can not by simple declaration that a stream shall be a public highway if in fact it be not navigable in its natural state appropriate to public use the private rights therein without compensation. * * * This court has followed the same line of distinction."

The opinion then cites with approval some of the cases hereinbefore mentioned by me and later in the opinion reaches the conclusion:

"That the servitude of privately owned lands forming the banks and bed of a stream to navigation is a natural servitude, confined to such streams as in their ordinary and natural condition are navigable in fact and confined to the natural condition of the stream."

There have also been other decisions by the courts which hold practically the opposite.

It may be claimed that under some of these decisions practically all of the rivers of the country are "navigable." That is a matter for the courts to decide.

It may be claimed that no obstructions of any kind can be put on these rivers without the permission of the Federal Government. That is also a matter for the courts to decide.

In any event, under the provisions of this bill the Water Power Commission will, unless prevented by the Congress, assume jurisdiction over practically all of the rivers of the country. Licenses will be obtained from the commission to erect dams and water powers. Those who apply first and who get the permission of the Government to do so will secure a priority of right over those who do not. The result will be that it will not be safe for anyone depending on their constitutional rights to proceed without the permission of the Water Power Commission. Endless litigation will be started, and the courts will have to decide specifically in each case as to whether the parts of the stream on which the improvements are to be made are or are not within the jurisdiction of the commission.

It is, of course, too late to offer any amendment to the bill, now that the bill is in conference and the conferees have reported. I will say frankly that we prefer the House amendment, because in our opinion it is not as broad as the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment provides specifically that all connecting parts of streams between navigable waters shall themselves be considered as navigable. The House bill has no such provision.

Under the Senate amendment, if a stream were navigable near its mouth and at some portion of the stream 100 miles away from its mouth and in no way navigable in between, all of the intervening waters would become navigable under the bill, though under no possibility could they become navigable in fact.

The Water Power Commission would have jurisdiction over all of these unnavigable parts of streams. This would not be the case under the House provision. Under the latter we believe that the Government would not assume jurisdiction over waters where there was any question of their navigability, and the people who desire to make improvements could proceed as they do now in many cases without applying in any way to the Federal Government.

In my State we have many valuable water powers, developed and undeveloped. These water powers we regard as among the principal assets of the State. As far as possible we desire to handle them for the use of the people of the State of Maine under State instead of Federal regulations.

Many of the streams in my State are used for lumbering purposes, and temporary dams and temporary obstructions are constantly being put in these streams for logging purposes. Often the need for action is very immediate. To have to go to the Water Power Commission in each case for permission to do so would be intolerable.

I sincerely trust that the conference report will be defeated, and that a further conference will be ordered which will report back the bill with the House provision restored.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. FERNALD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I will say to the Senator from Maine that I expect to speak for perhaps an hour. Does the Senator from Maine desire to say something on this matter?

Mr. FERNALD. I do; but I am very anxious to listen to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield to the Senator for a few minutes.

Mr. FERNALD. I think if the Senator will yield for just a few moments I shall be able to conclude what I have to say.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. FERNALD. I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that it should seem necessary for me to pursue a course so unusual and extraordinary as to oppose a conference report. This matter, however, is of so much interest to the people of New England, and particularly to the constituents whom I represent, that I deem it only fair to make a statement to the Senate which, I am sure, will have due and proper consideration.

I have listened with great satisfaction to the eloquent appeal made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] in explaining the legal status of this bill, and I have also listened with much interest to my colleague [Mr. HALE]. My State, as you know, is the most easterly of the Union. I assume that every Senator feels it his duty, when any matter concerning his particular State is brought to the attention of Congress and any legislation is about to be enacted with reference to or which will in any way affect the business interests of his State, to present whatever evidence there may be for or against such legislation; and the State of Maine is so seriously affected by this particular bill that I deem it only fair to present a few facts.

As stated, my State is the most easterly of the Union. While it is known as an agricultural State, we have no fields and lands that, tickled with the hoe, laugh with the harvest; but the land responds bountifully and splendidly to efficient service and hard work. A large part of our State, however, is still in the virgin forest. We have 5,000 rivers and streams in the State of Maine and more than 1,500 lakes. I assume that we may have been blessed with this enormous amount of water because we have not permitted ourselves to have any other liquids for drinking purposes, and it seemed only fair that we should have all the water we wanted; and in the early days these streams were used somewhat for purposes of navigation, if streams that float logs may be considered navigable streams.

As I say, we have in our State thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of virgin forest. We have, as was suggested in a report from the Forestry Service, about one-third of the growing spruce of this country. It is estimated that we have more than 22,750,000,000 feet of spruce about 6 inches at the stem. From that we can cut 750,000,000 feet of spruce annually from now to the end of time and have just as much growing as we have now. Our lumbermen are conserving the forests, and these forests are being manufactured into pulp and paper on the rivers and streams of my State. We have many large pulp mills, we have a great many cotton mills and woolen mills and boot and shoe factories, all operated, or nearly all, by power generated from the water powers in the State of Maine. When you affect the interests of the owners or operators of these powers, you affect the entire business of the State; you affect every mill and every manufacturer that is receiving power from these streams.

I assume that every Senator knows a little more about his own State than any other Senator. When Senators from the Middle West talk to me about the great prairies and the wonderful crops that are being harvested from the plains and splendid lands of the Middle West, I assume that they know something about the wheat and corn business of that section. When Senators from the South talk to me about rice and cotton, I assume that they know more about the raising of rice and cotton and their manufacture than I do up in Maine, where we have nothing of that kind; and when I tell you about the water powers of my State, I assume that you will believe that I know something about the power that is generated down in the State of Maine.

We stand second in water power of all the North Atlantic States. More than 900,000 horsepower may be generated and developed in the State of Maine. On the river that runs nearest my home, with a power of 180,000 horsepower, 120,000 horsepower is already developed; and many other manufacturers and many other men engaged in the development of that sort of power are now contemplating the development of the entire stream.

On this particular river we have a reservoir which will hold more than 30,000,000,000 feet of water, covering a territory of more than 1,200 square miles. I am telling you this, Senators, so that you may understand the interest my constituents have in this power bill.

I am in sympathy, in the main, with this bill. I realize the effort which the chairman of the Committee on Commerce has made and the sincerity of his associates in producing a bill which might be fair to all of the business interests of this country. I have been a member of that committee. I have watched carefully to guard well the interests of my State, and yet it is believed by some of our legal fraternity in Maine that we are not sufficiently protected, that some changes should be made in this bill, and it is for that reason that I bring the matter before the Senate this afternoon.

I assume that nothing I may say will change the bill. I assume it is likely to be adopted, because I realize that in the main it is going to be of great interest to the people of the country. I realize that of all the waste in the country which may be mentioned, there is none so inexcusable as water power running undeveloped, because, unlike coal and oil, there is just as much running, and just as restlessly, as in the beginning of time. The sooner this is developed, of course, the more advantageous it will be to the people of Maine, and it ought to be done immediately.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have always had a very high opinion of the legal fraternity of Maine, but I want to say that if the legal fraternity of Maine hold to the opinion that this bill affects injuriously conditions which confront them now upon navigable waters, my opinion will change very materially. I want to say to the Senator that this bill, in the definition of navigable waters, and so forth, does not interfere with any rights they have now in any way, shape, or form. As a matter of fact, there is a law on the statute books now which prohibits any interference with the navigable capacity of streams, and if, under the advice of the legal fraternity of Maine, men have invested their money in the construction of dams, and so forth, under that law, they will lose their investments.

Under this bill their rights in that respect will not be in any way affected, either adversely or favorably, for that matter, but under the bill provisions are made by which they can come to the Government and get a permit which will insure their investment and make safe that which now might be unsafe. However, under this bill they do not have to come to this commission to get a permit. If they want to take the risk, if they want to put their money in, they can go on and do it just the same in the future as they have done in the past. There is absolutely nothing in this bill which prohibits anyone from putting an obstruction in a stream. I thought I would just put that in the RECORD, in view of the statement of the Senator that the legal fraternity of Maine are fearful of the effect of the bill.

Let me say that the Senator from Maine has guarded this in the most effective way. He has given it his most careful attention, and the provision is not subject to any criticism whatever.

I know it has been stated by some that it was put in the bill secretly. It was not. It was put in the bill in the Senate committee openly, was reported to the Senate, was on the calendar here for weeks, was then brought up in the Senate, and passed without any objection whatever. It was all done openly, and in my judgment it is clearly in the interests of the people and for the benefit of the interests in the State of Maine described by the Senator.

Mr. FERNALD. I thank the Senator from Washington, and I want to say that I know what he says is true, so far as these amendments and the consideration of this bill are concerned. These matters were discussed. I did not always agree with the majority. Many things which I had suggested which I felt would be of interest to my State were allowed to go in the bill. I want to say further that, fortunately or unfortunately, I do not know which, I am not a lawyer, but I followed carefully the legal effect of the different provisions in the bill. I believe all the Senator from Washington told me, fine lawyer as he is, and with his honesty, as to the legal status of these provisions. He represents a State similar to mine. There is a very large water development in the State of Washington. I believe it has a larger water power than any other State of the Union, some 10,000,000 horsepower of developed and undeveloped water power, in his State. Then, coming down along the Atlantic coast to the North Atlantic States, New York is one of the large water-power States. Then comes Maine, which people sometimes forget is as large in territory as all the other New England States. It is often referred to as the playground of the world, because for a period of six months we have perhaps the finest climate on earth, and the water powers are a great asset to us. We have all of these timbers in the forests which we desire to have worked up by our own mills and with our own power, and the State some time since placed upon its statute books a law that no power should be carried from the State, but that it should all be used in the State. We have what was referred to by my colleague as a dam act. He did not intend, I am sure, to begin his speech by swearing at the chairman of the committee, but we refer to it often in the State of Maine as the dam act, because it has been before our courts and has been always construed as sound and good law.

Our riparian-right law there is that any man who owns both sides of a stream, the banks, may cast a dam across the stream and use the power for any purpose he chooses, provided he pays any damages to other men's land where the water may flow, and by paying for the flowage rights he can go on and do business.

In the early days the pioneers had their sawmills on these streams. Later they were developed and great manufacturing plants and cotton mills were erected there, until to-day, on one little river, which is less than 100 miles long, whose source is in the adjoining State of New Hampshire, running across about 30 miles and down through my State, there is more than $50,000,000 worth of property, paying an annual pay roll to the operatives of more than $10,000,000. So Senators can see what interest the people have in this one particular river; and we have three large rivers of like size and like development.

The one provision in the bill to which I object, and to which my constituents object very seriously, is the vague and indefinite definition of "navigable waters."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GERRY in the chair). Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. For the sake of clarity, as the Senator is now taking up that subject, I desire to invite his attention to the fact that the only change made by the conferees in that provision of the bill is formal. The conferees have not changed the substance of that provision at all, as I read it. They caused to be inserted the words "between the navigable parts of such streams." I ask the chairman of the committee if I am correct.

Mr. JONES of Washington. All the conferees put in was the clause "between the navigable parts of such streams or waters."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So the significance of it is not changed at all. The complaint the Senator is making, as I interpret it, is against the provision which was inserted not by the conferees but by the Senate when the bill was before it. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Washington, the chairman of the committee, if any request for a hearing was had before the committee upon the definition of "navigable waters," as given in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No request for a hearing was made until after we had been conferring quite a good while, and after the House conferees had really accepted the amendment. Then the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] asked for a hearing, and the hearing was given. The Senator from Maine and the Senator from Massachusetts and Members of the House came over and discussed the matter, and after that hearing the words to which the Senator has just called attention were inserted in the amendment. That was all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that the criticism is rather late now.

Mr. FERNALD. I assume it may be too late, Mr. President. I realize the legislation which has already taken place regarding the water-power development in the country, and I am going to read a statute on the subject. I do not often refer to law books, but I am going to read a statute taken from the United States Statutes at Large, Fifty-fifth Congress, 1897–1899, volume 30, page 1151, paragraph 10. I want to say, Mr. President, that at that time Senator Frye was chairman of the Commerce Committee, and I am sure that this country has never seen a more efficient, honest, sincere legislator in this or any other body than the Senator from Maine at that time. I will submit to the lawyers of the Senate if the language of this act is not very vague and indefinite, so far as the definition of "navigable waters" is concerned.

What I desire, in legislating in this body, is to have it so clear that the common layman can understand it. We have passed legislation here within a year which affected billions of dollars' worth of property; and it took the best lawyers in this country to determine the meaning of it; and members of the committee who reported upon that legislation were unable to give me or anybody else any light on the subject. If we are about to pass such legislation, we ought to send about 150,000 lawyers to go with it, so that the business men in the country might have somebody to interpret it. I know the lawyers of my State have written me asking what certain phrases meant in laws which have been passed. I do not propose, if I can help it, to have any laws passed which I do not understand myself, so that if a man asks me, I can give him some faint idea of their meaning.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that if the Senator will take the experiences of Congress for the past 10 or 15 years, he will discover that anything is a navigable stream for whose improvement you can get an appropriation.

Mr. FERNALD. Exactly; the Senator is right. Now, I am going to refer to this act, and I am going to leave it to the lawyers in the Senate if this is not a vague and uncertain definition of what navigable waters are.

Mr. NELSON. Is the Senator about to read the old law?

Mr. FERNALD. The old law; yes.

Mr. NELSON. In what year was it passed?

Mr. FERNALD. It is found in United States Statutes at Large, 1897–1899, volume 30, page 1151, section 10.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say, incidentally, if the Senator will allow me, that I was a member of the Committee on Commerce at that time and served under Senator Frye, and I indorse everything the Senator said about Senator Frye.

Mr. FERNALD. I thank the Senator. I want to say, too, that I have followed the Senator from Minnesota in this legislation carefully, because I knew he was as well versed as anybody in this country, and I have all confidence in him.

This is the law, and I want the lawyers in the Senate to give attention:

> That the creation of any obstruction not affirmatively authorized by Congress, to the navigable capacity of any of the waters of the United States, is hereby prohibited; and it shall not be lawful to build or commence the building of any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, weir, breakwater, bulkhead, jetty, or other structures in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, navigable river, or other water of the United States, outside established harbor lines or where no harbor lines have been established, except on plans recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War; and it shall not be lawful to excavate, or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, unless the work has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War prior to beginning the same.

I am frank to say that the navigable waters are not defined at all in that law.

Now, Mr. President, I realize and appreciate that I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], but I am going to cite the Senate to one concrete case which in my judgment represents every river and stream in the United States. I will take one of the rivers in my own State.

The Androscoggin River has its source at the outlet of Umbagog Lake and flows thence to tidewater below Brunswick, Me.

From its source to tidewater, a distance of considerably more than 100 miles, there is a total fall of about 1,200 feet, with numerous falls or rapids capable of development for power purposes.

Tidewater stops at the foot of the falls at Brunswick. The river is not navigable for boats or vessels above Brunswick, but formerly was used for floating logs from the Great Lakes down river even as far as Brunswick. In other words, it is a "floatable" stream, in the language of the Maine decisions.

The numerous falls in the river made it more useful and valuable for the development of power, and in the process of time the sawmills at Brunswick, Lisbon, Lewiston, and so forth, have all disappeared, and at the present time logs are only driven down river to the pulp and paper mills and a few sawmills on the upper reaches of the river.

Except, then, for log driving, it can not be said that the river in its natural condition ever afforded a "channel for useful commerce"; that is, boats and vessels never plied back and forth on the river carrying merchandise or engaged in trade and commerce. The most that can possibly be claimed is that logs in the sections in northern Maine were floated to the sawmills at various points in New Hampshire and Maine and there sawed into lumber, from which points the manufactured products were sent to market by rail, but never by water boats or conveyance.

The waters of this river always have been, and now are, used almost exclusively for manufacturing purposes, formerly by direct power, and now, to a considerable extent, by hydroelectric power. Indeed, during these trying days of coal shortage, it is safe to say that not a single manufacturing plant on the Androscoggin River has been obliged to shut down or lose an hour's time.

The investment in manufacturing plants directly and indirectly on the river operated by water power or hydroelectric power will amount to more than $50,000,000. My own judgment is very considerably in excess of that, but I do not wish to overstate, and the annual pay rolls for operating labor will amount to not less than $10,000,000.

These manufacturing industries include a great variety of products—cotton and woolen goods, shoes, lumber, wood products, paper, and many other things. None of these various products go to market by water—that is, by this river—but all are shipped by rail from the various points of manufacture along the river.

More than one-half of the available head on the river is now developed and used for these manufacturing purposes, and the power developments operating these varied industries have been made almost wholly at power sites on the river where the power could be developed at a low cost per foot of head. The undeveloped heads are more expensive for development, but they will be developed and used as called for by business conditions.

The present owners, representing probably 75 per cent of the developed and undeveloped power on the river, have spent not less than $3,000,000 in storage reservoirs at the headwaters of the river, and maintain a system of control and regulation of flow on the river which it is conceded make this river one of the best controlled and regulated streams of its size in the United States.

These storage reservoirs have a capacity of more than 30,000,000,000 cubic feet of water, with a watershed of about 1,200 square miles.

What I have said above applies in a degree to all of the numerous tributary streams flowing into the Androscoggin.

Leaving now the description of the river and its industries, I take up another branch, that is, the legal side of the question.

It seems certain that the Federal Government can have no control over the Androscoggin River above tidewater, except such as it may have under the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. The Government owns no soil in the bed or on the banks of the river, and it can not acquire such lands except, of course, by purchase or by condemnatory proceedings for some public use.

On the other hand, the riparian, under the laws of Maine, may build a dam on his own land and raise a head of water to run his mill or factory.

Does this bill undertake to impose any restriction upon the exercise of the settled rights of the riparian; and, if so, what?

It would seem to me that the bill applies primarily to such water powers as there may be on public lands now owned by the Federal Government and, next, upon the navigable waters of the United States, like, for example, the Androscoggin River below Brunswick, where the tide ebbs and flows, and upon which boats and vessels may pass engaged in commerce.

If there is any claim that the owners of undeveloped power privileges on this river may not build dams and develop and use the power so created without the consent of the Federal Government under the provisions of this bill, we ought to know it, and we also ought to know what the extent of that consent would be.

I am hoping that this statement of facts, in connection with the law as we have all understood it, will enable me to inform my constituents what the claims of the proponents of the bill are as applied to the Androscoggin River.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCLEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In this connection I wish to repeat what I said a while ago, that there is nothing in the bill that prohibits the people of the Senator's State from doing anything that they want to try to do, and that they can do now.

Mr. FERNALD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Is there not something in the bill—and I am addressing myself to the Senator from Washington, with the permission of the Senator from Maine—that requires the citizens of the State, those who live upon the river to which the Senator is referring, to obtain a license from the Federal Government for the construction of power plants upon the stream?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is not. There are provisions in the bill which permit people to get a permit, but it does not require them to do so. There is not a prohibitory provision in the bill with reference to the construction of dams in streams, but there are provisions in the bill under which, if a person wants to be sure he will not be interfered with under the law to which the Senator referred and which he read, he can come to the commission and ask for a permit and get it upon certain conditions. But if they want to take the chances, they can go on and put a dam in the stream, just as they can do now.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me further, as I interpret the bill it makes a man who constructs a power plant upon a so-called navigable stream a trespasser unless he obtains a license from the Federal Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the bill does not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wish to remind the Senator from Utah that the prohibition is not in the pending bill. The prohibition is in the law now. A person can not do it at all now without an act of Congress, while under the pending bill he can get a permit from the commission.

Mr. FERNALD. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana if under the provision of the law which I have read he finds that clause?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. It prohibits any obstruction of a navigable stream.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to make one observation?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The courts have held repeatedly, I understand, that it is not such an obstruction as the Federal Government could take cognizance of unless it does interfere with navigation. There may be obstructions, there may be locks, there may be dams, but if they do not interfere with navigation, under the law which the Senator read and to which the Senator from Montana now refers, such obstructions may be placed in the river.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As stated by the chairman of the committee, there is no such prohibition in this bill at all.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what is the purpose of the bill with reference to the States in which there are no public lands, if it is not for the purpose of fastening a Federal system of leasing and licensing upon all the power streams of the United States?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This is the purpose of the bill. Under the existing law anyone who wants to put any obstruction whatever in a navigable stream must come to Congress and get a special act. The pending bill is a general act granting power to give permits through this commission. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I suggest further in connection with this matter that the Senate placed amendment No. 58 on the bill, under which it provides a way by which a person or company or corporation may get the judgment of the commission with reference to whether a stream is navigable, if they desire to do it. That is for the protection of any person who contemplates putting a dam in a navigable stream. If they exercise the right given to them in this section of the bill, the commission will first make an investigation to see whether or not the stream is navigable, and they can not put their dam in if the commission says that it is navigable; but if the commission says that it is not navigable, then permission is granted to put the dam in. However, there is nothing which requires them to come to the commission in the first instance and ask their judgment as to whether the stream is navigable or not.

They can go on and take their chances under the prohibitory law which the Senator from Montana read, and that is the law now. That law we do not seek in any way to change in this bill except to provide a way by which a person can get a permit so that he will not bring himself under the prohibition of the law as it exists now.

Mr. FERNALD. I thank the Senator.

Personally, if the bill is not dangerous to the great manufacturing interests of the Androscoggin River, which represents other rivers of my State and of the country, I think we should support the bill. It is unnecessary for me to say that the owners of the undeveloped powers are broad, progressive men, and that they are not holding these undeveloped privileges for any monopilistic purposes. These privileges will be developed as and when the business conditions require, but we do not want the cold hand of Federal authority laid upon our property rights, which we have bought and paid for and improved by the vast storage reservoirs at the headwaters of the river, and be told that we can not use our own except by the consent of some one who has no property rights on the river.

I can not imagine that the power developments that have made possible such cities as Lewiston, Auburn, Rumford Falls, Berlin, and many similar cities and towns are or can be considered an obstruction to the navigation or commerce on the Androscoggin River.

Mr. President, in closing let me say that the one particular feature of this bill to which I object, and which I believe the proponents of the bill ought to accept an amendment to remedy, is the absence of a clear definition of the term "navigable waters." I do not know what definition may be laid down in any of the law books of the country, but I do know that a definition might be placed upon "navigable waters" which would be so plain and clear that anybody might understand it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Maine that we do not attempt in this bill to define "navigable waters" at all. We simply say that for the purpose of this act—that is, for the purpose of applying for permits to build dams, and so forth—certain waters shall be considered navigable. That leaves the whole matter as to whether in fact a stream is navigable to be determined under the rules which have been laid down by the courts, and they have laid them down in a great many cases.

Mr. FERNALD. Does not the Senator from Washington think it would be wise right here and now, in three or four lines, to define what a navigable stream is? I think it could be done by an amendment that, if it were in order, I might suggest.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I remember, a Congress or two ago, that we spent days discussing the proposition of defining a navigable stream in connection with the water-power bill; and while it may appear very plain and simple to the Senator from Maine, I am satisfied that if we were to open up on the proposition and try to define in legislation the term "navigable streams" we should be discussing it for weeks. The courts have laid down pretty good rules in reference to the matter; and in framing this bill we do not seek to interfere with those rules at all.

Mr. FERNALD. But, Mr. President, if the chairman of the committee wishes—and I know he does wish—to be fair in this matter, does he not think it would be better to define what a navigable stream is here than to permit the question to go to the courts, at an expense of millions of dollars, as it has already done? It seems to me right in this bill we have reached a point where in three or four lines we could readily define, so that it might be clearly understood, exactly what a navigable stream is. I think I can suggest such an amendment to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the courts have laid down rules which determine that question mightly well. However, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has given the matter especial consideration, and I will let him answer the suggestion which has been made by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. FERNALD. I very gladly yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think the Supreme Court has long ago settled, as nearly as it can be settled, the question as to the navigability of streams. I refer to their decision in the case of the Montello.

Mr. FERNALD. Let me ask the Senator from Minnesota before he proceeds, if the interpretation of the court which he is about to read is generally accepted by the lawyers of the country, or are they still in disagreement in reference to the matter?

Mr. NELSON. I have never heard the decision questioned; on the contrary, it has been followed in other cases. The decision is found in Twentieth Wallace, on page 430. It is what is known as the case of the Montello, that being the name of the vessel. Merely to save time, I will read only the syllabus.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I did not catch the title of the case from which the Senator from Minnesota is going to quote.

Mr. NELSON. The title of the case is the Montello, which is the name of the vessel.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I recall it.

Mr. NELSON. To save time I will read the syllabus of the case instead of going into the decision in detail. It is as follows:

THE MONTELLO.

1. The navigability of a stream for the purpose of bringing it within the terms "navigable waters of the United States" does not depend upon the mode by which commerce is conducted upon it, as whether by steamers, or sailing vessels, or Durham boats, nor upon the difficulties attending navigation, such as those made by falls, rapids, and sand bars, even though these be so great as that while they last they prevent the use of the best means, such as steamboats, for carrying on commerce. It depends upon the fact whether the river in its natural state is such as that it affords a channel for useful commerce.

This was a case arising in Wisconsin and related to the navigation of the Fox River, a stream that flows into Green Bay, which itself connects with Lake Michigan; so that the navigation of the stream was connected with the waters of the Great Lakes. The headwaters of that stream are very near the Wisconsin River, which flows southward into the Mississippi River. There was only a slight portage between the Fox River and the Wisconsin River, over a distance perhaps of 2 or 3 miles. In early days commerce went up the Fox River from Green Bay and Lake Michigan, and crossed the portage into the Wisconsin River and then down the Mississippi River. The Supreme Court held that, although there were rapids and falls in the stream, around which it was necessary to portage the freight, it was a navigable stream and so came within the commerce clause of the Constitution. I may add that the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of "The Daniel Ball," Tenth Wallace, page 557, is to the same effect.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. This bill, as I interpret it, would make every stream navigable, even to the headwaters of the smallest stream, or up to the snow line, where the snow melts and finds its way by little trickles and rivulets into some other stream. For instance, this language, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. NELSON. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the first part of the amendment, which reads:

"Navigable waters" means those parts of streams or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States—

Mr. KING. The Senator will see that that does not impose any limitation upon the Federal Government as to what it may regulate. When it confers the power to regulate commerce among the States, et cetera, that is not a definition of what commerce is or the extent to which Congress may control streams. The Supreme Court has held, as I understand, that tributaries of tributaries of other tributaries, if any part of such tributary of the final stream was navigable, would be under the cognizance of the Federal Government. That would carry up to the snow line.

Mr. NELSON. The court's decision only goes to this extent—and the facts in the case must be considered—that as to the tributaries that supply water to the main stream, which is in fact and in law navigable, Congress of necessity must have sufficient jurisdiction over those feeders to prevent their being dammed up and thereby preventing the supply of water running into the main stream. That is the extent of the decision and the Senator ought to see that that is inevitable, for if all the feeders of our great rivers, such as the Mississippi, the Missouri, and other navigable rivers, could be dammed up so that water would be kept away from them they would cease to be navigable.

Mr. KING. I am not arguing that question.

Mr. NELSON. So the Government has jurisdiction to the extent that the supply of water can not be cut off from a navigable stream.

Mr. KING. Obviously, then, under the Senator's contention, the Federal Government would have jurisdiction over the snow line, and, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] sotto voce says, it would have jurisdiction of the clouds which produce the snow which melts and produces the spring which produces the tributary flowing into the river which is navigable. So that the Federal Government may stretch out its powerful and omnipotent hand until it can grasp the snow in the mountains and say, "We have jurisdiction over that."

Mr. NELSON. That is a forced construction.

Mr. KING. I think that the Senator's position leads to that.

Mr. NELSON. It does not lead to that, and that is not my position. The Senator a few moments ago referred to the Rio Grande case. The court intimated incidentally in that opinion that the control of Congress extended to the feeders of the stream, but when it comes to applying the principles of law to the facts in each case they must be measured by the facts. The court did not mean to decide that the feeders were navigable. What the court meant to say was that the Federal Government has sufficient jurisdiction over the feeders to see to it that the supply of water shall not be destroyed or so diminished in the feeders as to prevent the main stream from being navigable. The Senator on reflection ought to see that if the Government had no control whatever of the feeders—if such a thing were possible, although I can not conceive it—if it were possible for the States or individuals to dam up the feeders and prevent a drop of water flowing into the main navigable stream, they could dry up the main stream and destroy navigation on it. Except in those sections where the water is exhausted for irrigation, the erection of dams in feeders, as a matter of fact, for instance, in the East and in the Middle West, does not diminish the supply of water, for the water flows over the dam in one way or another and enters the feeders and then the main stream. It is only in the arid West where it is possible to divert water entirely for irrigation purposes from the main stream.

To what extent can that be done? I take it that if a case of that kind should come before the court, the court would consider both the rights of the farmers, who needed the water for irrigation, and the interests of commerce requiring water for navigation, and the question would be one of fact in each case. Does the diversion of the water of a certain feeder of a certain stream for irrigation purposes diminish the quantity of the water to such an extent as to destroy the navigability of the main stream? If the diversion of the water did not diminish the navigability of the main stream, the Government would have no control whatever. Furthermore, it would only have control to the extent of the supply of water needed to subserve the purposes of real navigation.

We are not seeking to interfere with the present situation, and no matter what we put into this bill, if the Senator from Maine will excuse me a moment longer, we can not change the decisions of the Supreme Court as to their determination of the words "navigable stream." We could not undo by this legislation, if we should make the effort, what they have decided. We have made no such attempt. We have simply said that those parts of streams or bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and which in either their natural or improved conditions, and so forth, are naviable, shall be considered to be navigable streams. That is all we have said. We have simply left the matter where the courts have left it; and if we undertook to change the law as it is and to say that a certain class of streams which are navigable in fact are not navigable the Supreme Court would overrule us.

Mr. FERNALD. Without going more fully into the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, I wish to cite the case of Samuel Veazie and Levi Young, plaintiffs in error, against Wyman B. S. Moor, reported in Fourteenth Howard:

"SAMUEL VEAZIE AND LEVI YOUNG, PLAINTIFFS IN ERROR, V. WYMAN B. S. MOOR.

"The River Penobscot is entirely within the State of Maine, from its source to its mouth. For the last 8 miles of its course it is not navigable, but crossed by four dams erected for manufacturing purposes. Higher up the stream there was an imperfect navigation.

"A law of the State, granting the exclusive navigation of the upper river to a company who were to improve it, is not in conflict with the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, and a license to carry on the coasting trade did not entitle a vessel to navigate the upper waters of the river.

"This case was brought up from the Supreme Judicial Court of the State of Maine by a writ of error issued under the twenty-fifth section of the judiciary act.

"The facts in the case are stated in the opinion of the court.

"It was argued by Mr. Paine, for the plaintiffs in error, and by Mr. Kelley and Mr. Moor, for the defendant in error.

"The following propositions were contended for in an elaborate brief filed by the counsel for the plaintiffs in error:

"1. That the constitutional power of Congress in question embraces the right to adopt any means reasonably necessary in their opinion to the successful prosecution of commerce among the States and with foreign nations.

"2. That Congress has adopted as such means the whole commercial marine of the country, every part of which as a unit is under their entire control and regulation, without regard to the waters on which the navigation is carried on.

"3. That to constitute a part of this commercial marine, no other qualifications are necessary than those prescribed by

(569) Congress in the several acts regulating the registry and enrollment of vessels, and such registry or enrollment is evidence of a compliance with the prescribed conditions.

"4. That any vessel so enrolled, being licensed, has an unrestricted right to navigate all the navigable waters of the United States, wherever they may be found serviceable to its use.

"5. That the power of Congress to regulate commerce is as extensive on land as water, and is irrespective of both—that these compose no part of commerce or navigation, but are subject to be adopted as ways or thoroughfares of it, whenever they may be required by the wants of either—and that in legislating upon the subject Congress has not discriminated between one class or body of navigable waters and another, but has made all such waters free for the uses of navigation, wherever any portion of the commercial marine of the country may exist.

"6. That under the statute of 1831, March 2, section 3, the plaintiffs' boat is expressly included as provided for by said act, and is thus embraced within the power of Congress, even if not included in the general provisions of the acts regulating the 'coasting trade.'

"7. That the right of Congress to regulate 'commerce with the Indian tribes,' extends to and embraces the Penobscot Tribe of Indians, and the Legislature of Maine has no right to restrict the people to, or deprive them of, any particular mode of intercourse or trade with them.

"8. That any act of a State legislature contravening such right of navigation, as does the act set forth in defendants' bill of complaint, is absolutely null and void.

"The points made by the counsel for the defendant in error were thus stated:

"The only question here is, whether the grant to Moor is in conflict with that provision of the Constitution which gives Congress the right to regulate commerce.

"A party alleging that a State law is unconstitutional takes on himself the burden of establishing there three propositions:

"First. That the matter or subject in controversy is within the legislative jurisdiction of Congress.

"Second. That Congress has de facto legislated on the subject, and embraced it within regulations established by its legislation; and

"Third. That the party impeaching the law has himself acquired rights in the subject matter which is in controversy, and that these rights have been invaded by the legislation of the State.

"570. Applying these rules to this case, plaintiffs are bound to show: First. That the navigation of the Penobscot River, above Oldtown Falls, is within the jurisdiction of Congress.

"Second. That Congress has embraced this navigation in its legislation, and provided regulations for it; and "Third. That they have acquired rights in that navigation under the legislation of Congress, which rights have been impaired by the law of the State.

"Plaintiffs must establish all three of these propositions. It is not enough for them to establish any two of them. If they fail in any one of them they have no ground to stand upon.

"First. As to the first of these propositions. The grant being confined to waters wholly internal, plaintiffs can carry on no navigation by means of those waters, with any foreign nation, nor with any other State. We think this is almost too plain for argument. (Moor v. Veazie, 32 Me., 343; Wilson v. Blackbird Co., 2 Pet., 250, 3 Kent, Com., 458; Livingston v. Van Ingen, 9 Johns. (N. Y.), 506; Gibbons v. Ogden, 17 Id., 488; Id., 9 Wheat., 1; New Bedford Bridge case, 1 Woodb. & M., 404; Kellogg v. Union Co., 12 Conn., 7; Passenger cases, 7 How., 283; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat., 419; New York v. Miln, 11 Pet., 102; 3 Cow. (N. Y.), 713.)

"Again, this grant is not in conflict with the power of Congress to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes.

"1. Because commerce in this connection does not include navigation. (32 Me., 343.)

"Vol. XIV.—39.

"2. Because the Constitution manifestly refers only to independent tribes with which the General Government may come in conflict; not to those small remnants of tribes scattered over the country, which are under State jurisdiction and guardianship. (32 Me., 343.)

"Second. We hold that plaintiffs entirely fail to establish the second proposition, to wit: That the navigation of these waters is embraced within the actual legislation of Congress. None of the acts cited were ever intended to apply to waters wholly within the limits of a State, and which could not be reached by vessels from foreign ports or from other States.

"Again, we contend that if Congress has, or should pass any acts interfering with commerce purely internal, they would be unauthorized and void. (Passenger case, 7 How., 283; Genesee Chief, 12 Id., 443.)

"Third. As to the third proposition, the case fails to show that plaintiffs have acquired any rights in the navigation of the waters of the upper Penobscot, under any regulation of Congress or in any other way or manner.

"Assuredly there can be no pretense that plaintiffs were engaged (571) in any commerce on those waters with any foreign nation, or with any other State. Nor is there any fact or evidence in the case tending to show that they were engaged in commerce with the Penobscot Tribe. It does not appear that they traded or had any intercourse with that tribe, nor that they wished or intended to have any such intercourse. The Penobscots are not represented here. They do not complain of the grant. There is no fact going to show that this grant has any bearing or effect on any commerce to which they are parties. If they have any ports of entry or clearance, for aught the case finds, such ports may be as hermetically sealed as those of Japan.

"If plaintiffs fail to show that they have acquired rights which have been taken away, they can not complain, even if the act was most palpably against the Constitution. (Wheeling Bridge case, 13 How., 518; East Hartford v. Hartford Bridge Co., 17 Conn.)

"Mr. Justice Daniel delivered the opinion of the court.

"The questions raised upon this record, however subdivided or varied they may have been in form or number, are essentially and properly restricted to the power and the duty of this court to inquire into the constitutional obligation of the law of the State of Maine, upon which the decision of the supreme court of that State was founded, for if that law and the privileges conferred thereby be coincident with the eighth section of Article I of the Constitution they can be assailable here upon no just exception.

"It is insisted, however, that the statute of the State of Maine is in derogation of the power vested in Congress by the article and section above mentioned, 'to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.' We will examine the character of this objection with reference to the facts disclosed by the record and with reference also to the provisions of the statute in question, as they have been designed to operate on those facts; and, as these last are all agreed by the parties, there can be no need of a comparison of the testimony to ascertain their verity.

"The River Penobscot is situated entirely within the State of Maine. Having its rise far in the interior of the State, it is not subject to the tides above the city of Bangor, near its mouth. Between the city of Bangor and Old Town, a distance of 8 miles, the Penobscot passes over a fall, is crossed by four dams erected for manufacturing purposes, and for the above space is not at this time and never has been navigable; but there is a railroad from Bangor to the steamboat landing at Old Town. On the 30th day of July, 1846, the Legislature of Maine, by (572) law enacted that—

"'William Moor and Daniel Moor, jr.,' their associates and assigns, were authorized to improve the navigation of the Penobscot River above Old Town, and for that purpose were authorized to deepen the channel of the river; to cut down and remove any gravel or ledge, bars, rocks, or other obstructions in the bed thereof; to erect in the bed, on the shore or bank of said river suitable dams and locks, with booms, piers, abutments, breakwaters, and other erections to protect the same; to build upon the shore or bank of said river any canal or canals to connect the navigable parts of said river; or (in case it shall be deemed the preferable mode of improvement) any railroads for the like purpose.

"After providing the modes of acquiring lands or gravel on the shores or in the bed of the river, and for compensating the owners of property used in the prosecution of the contemplated improvement, the act proceeds to limit the time for the contemplation of the undertaking, with particular termini therein named, to the period of seven years from its date, and, further, requires that within the period thus limited the grantees shall build and run a steamboat between those termini, and shall, within the same time, make a canal and lock around the falls of the river or a railroad to connect the route above with that below the falls.

"Then follows section 4 of the statute, containing the provision objected to. It is in these words: 'If said William Moor and Daniel Moor, jr., their associates and assigns, shall perform the conditions of this grant as contained in the preceding section, the sole right of navigation of said river by boats propelled by steam from said Oldtown so far up as they shall render the same navigable is hereby granted to them for the term of 20 years from and after the completion of the improvement, as provided in the third section of this act.' The defendant in error, who is assignee of the original grantees from the legislature, having made certain improvements in the river by the removal of rocks and by deepening the channel in other places, so as to enable boats to run therein, with 2½ feet less of water than was requisite for navigation previously to these improvements, and all within the limit prescribed to him by law, built, and on the 27th of May, 1847, placed upon the said river the steamboat Governor Neptune and ran her from Oldtown over the Piscataquis Falls to a place called Nickaton. In the spring of the year 1847 the defendant in error placed on the river the steamboat Mattanawcook and ran her to Lincoln till obstructions were removed by him at a place called the Mohawk Rips, above the Piscataquis Falls; and has also built, and is now running upon the river, another steamboat (573) called the Sam Houston, in addition to the Governor Neptune and the Mattanawcook.

"The plaintiff in error, Samuel Veazie, built the steamboat Governor Dana, and in conjunction with other plaintiffs, Levi and Warren R. Young, ran her upon the Penobscot River between Oldtown and the Piscataquis Falls from the 10th of May, 1849, until they were arrested by an injunction granted at the suit of the defendant in error. The steamboat Governor Dana was enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade at the customhouse at Bangor. The Penobscot tribe of Indians own all the islands in the Penobscot River above Oldtown Falls, some of which they occupy; and this tribe always have been, and now are, under the jurisdiction and guardianship of the State of Maine.

"Upon this state of facts agreed, the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine, after argument and advisement, at its June term, 1850, decreed that the plaintiffs in error be perpetually enjoined to desist and refrain from running and employing the steamboat Governor Dana, propelled by steam, for transporting passengers or merchandise on said river or any part thereof above Oldtown, and also from building, using, and employing any other boat propelled by steam on that part of the said river for that purpose without the consent of the said Wyman B. S. Moor, obtained according to law, until the said Moor's exclusive right shall expire. The court further decreed to the defendant in error the sum of $1,052.45 for damages and expenses incurred by him by reason of the interference with his rights on the part of the plaintiffs in error.

"Upon a comparison of this decree and of the statute upon which it is founded with the provision of the Constitution already referred to we are unable to perceive by what rule of interpretation either the statute or the decree can be brought within either of the categories comprised in that provision.

"These categories are, first, commerce with foreign nations; second, commerce amongst the several States; third, commerce with the Indian tribes. Taking the term commerce in its broadest acceptation, supposing it to embrace not merely traffic, but the means and vehicles by which it is prosecuted, can it properly be made to include objects and purposes such as those contemplated by the law under review? Commerce with foreign nations must signify commerce which in some sense is necessarily connected with these nations, transactions which either immediately or at some state of their progress, must be extraterritorial. The phrase can never be applied to transactions wholly internal between citizens of the same community or to a polity and laws whose ends and purposes and operations are (574) restricted to the territory and soil and jurisdiction of such community. Nor can it be properly concluded that, because the products of domestic enterprise in agriculture or manufactures, or in the arts, may ultimately become the subjects of foreign commerce, that the control of the means or the encouragements by which enterprise is fostered and protected, is legitimately within the import of the phrase 'foreign commerce,' or fairly implied in any investiture of the power to regulate such commerce. A pretension as far-reaching as this would extend to contracts between citizen and citizen of the same State, would control the pursuits of the planter, the grazier, the manufacturer, the mechanic, the immense operations of the collieries and mines and furnaces of the country; for there is not one of these avocations, the results of which may not become the subjects of foreign commerce, and be borne either by turnpikes, canals, or railroads, from point to point within the several States, toward an ultimate destination, like the one above mentioned. Such a pretension would effectually prevent or paralyze every effort at internal improvement by the several States; for it can not be supposed that the States would exhaust their capital and their credit in the construction of turnpikes, canals, and railroads, the remuneration derivable from which, and all control over which, might be immediately wrested from them, because such public works would be facilities for a commerce which, whilst availing itself of those facilities, was unquestionably internal, although intermediately or ultimately it might become foreign.

"The rule here given with respect to the regulation of foreign commerce, equally excludes from the regulation of commerce, between the States and the Indian tribes the control over turnpikes, canals, or railroads, or the clearing and deepening of watercourses exclusively within the States, or the management of the transportation upon and by means of such improvements. In truth, the power vested in Congress by Article I, section 8, of the Constitution was not designed to operate upon matters like those embraced in the statute of the State of Maine, and which are essentially local in their nature and extent. The design and object of that power, as evinced in the history of the Constitution, was to establish a perfect equality amongst the several States as to commercial rights, and to prevent unjust and invidious distinctions, which local jealousies or local and partial interests might be disposed to introduce and maintain. These were the views pressed upon the public attention by the advocates for the adoption of the Constitution, and in accordance therewith have been the expositions of this instrument propounded by this court, in decisions quoted by counsel on either side of this cause, though differently applied by them. (575) (Vide The Federalist, Nos. 7 and 11, and the cases of Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 1; New York v. Milne, 11 Pet., 102; Brown v. The State of Maryland, 12 Wheat., 419; and the License cases in 5 How., 504.)

"The fact of procuring from the collector of the port of Bangor a license to prosecute the coasting trade for the boat placed upon the Penobscot by the plaintiff in error (the Governor Dana), does not affect, in the slightest degree, the rights or condition of the parties. These remain precisely as they would have stood had no such license been obtained. A license to prosecute the coasting trade is a warrant to traverse the waters washing or bounding the coasts of the United States. Such a license conveys no privilege to use, free of tolls, or of any condition whatsoever, the canals constructed by a State, or the watercourses partaking of the character of canals exclusively within the interior of a State, and made practicable for navigation by the funds of the State, or by privileges she may have conferred for the accomplishment of the same end. The attempt to use a coasting license for a purpose like this is, in the first place, a departure from the obvious meaning of the document itself, and an abuse wholly beyond the object and the power of the Government in granting it.

"Upon the whole we are of the opinion that the decision of the Supreme Judicial Court of the State of Maine is in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, and ought to be, and is hereby, affirmed.

"ORDER.

"This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Supreme Judicial Court of the State of Maine and was argued by counsel. On consideration whereof, it is now here ordered and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of said supreme judicial court in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed with costs."

Mr. President, I feel that I ought not to occupy the floor longer. The Senator from Colorado gave notice yesterday that he would speak to-day, and I feel that I am imposing on him by taking so much time.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no desire to abbreviate the remarks of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FERNALD. I have already used more than an hour, although I intended to speak but a few moments.

Mr. President, in conclusion I wish to ask in order to bring this question back to a concrete matter, what will really happen when a man who owns the banks of a stream wishes, under this bill, if it shall be enacted into law, as it probably will be, to erect a dam? What will be the first thing he will do? Will he not go to the best lawyer he can find to ascertain what his rights are?

Mr. President, it is readily apparent that there is a great difference of opinion among the leading lawyers of the Senate, as there is a great difference of opinion among the courts of the United States in the various States, as to this question. Some decisions are on one side and some on the other. All I want to do is to provide a definition which everyone can understand, so that it will not be necessary for a farmer, if he desires to build a dam across a stream, to ascertain whether or not it is a navigable stream.

I am going to suggest to the chairman of the committee a definition which, I think, would make the matter plain. It would apply to every stream and every State in the United States, and would obviate any further dispute about this matter. It would take, I am sure, a considerable business away from the lawyers—and that is what I am here for, for I am not a lawyer. [Laughter.]

I would suggest, if the committee of conference mean what they say—and I know they do—that they ought to be willing to accept my definition, and it is simply this. It is only four lines, and everybody can understand it; and if the term has not been defined up to this time in any law, it is time that it was defined in this bill.

"Navigable waters" as used in this act includes only those streams or sections of streams that are shown to be navigable in more than one State, for boats drawing more than 2 feet of water, and are more useful for navigation than for other purposes.

That defines the term so that anybody can understand it, and I suggest that definition to the conferees.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am satisfied that if the Senator's definition were incorporated in this law, it would create a harvest for the legal profession that would support them for at least one generation to come.

I sympathize with my friend the Senator from Maine and all other representatives of the nonpublic-domain States with regard to this question of Federal control of their streams; and yet simple justice requires me to say to those gentlemen that the position which they have heretofore occupied with regard to similar questions on the public domain is the cause of their present difficulty, and their dilemma is a situation which, with all due respect to them, serves them perfectly right. As the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] suggests, they are getting now what they have given to us for a great many years; and it is a source of some consolation, therefore, to know that these chickens are coming home to roost.

We have stood upon this floor for years protesting against the restrictions and the constantly growing extension of Federal authority over the public lands, over the public waters, and the use of them, against the continuous enlargement of the legal and statutory definitions of navigable streams, against the interference of those definitions as applied in practice with the development of the public-domain States, against the discouragements which they have furnished to immigration and development; and during all these years Senators from the older States have constituted an almost solid phalanx in sustaining this policy, in promoting it, and in defeating every effort at relief which western Senators and Congressmen have attempted to secure. The result is that the term "navigable stream," as applied to Federal jurisdiction, means all the waters in the country, including the surface waters falling from the heavens and filling the streams, and thus contributing to the navigability of the greater rivers to which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] referred.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows my position on this question, and the position that I have taken on it for about 12 years.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Until a year ago, there were two separate bills always introduced at each Congress, one for navigable streams and one for the streams of the intermountain country.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; one for streams in the public domain.

Mr. SMOOT. In the public domain. A year ago they conceived the idea that by combining the two propositions into one bill it would be very much easier to secure the passage of the proposition in that way than to try to pass the bills separately. I want to say that while the bill is not what I should like to have it, and if I had the writing of it the Senator knows that it would be an entirely different bill, the situation got so intolerable that I thought it was best to get legislation by which we could at least develop some of the water powers that have been tied up in the West for so many years.

I was informed this morning that if the bill becomes a law there are already prospects of the expenditure of great sums of money for the development of water power under its provisions. I hope I shall not be disappointed. I may, however, but I hope not; and it is for that reason that I signed the conference report on this bill. In my opinion it is the best possible measure that we could pass through Congress that at least allows, with restrictions that are almost unbearable, the development of the water powers of the West.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I expect to hold my nose and vote for it, also, if necessary. The definition given to the subject of navigable waters in this bill, however, to my mind will eventuate in its applicability to every stream favorably passed upon by the engineers, who will probably pass upon any stream which in some particular district is sufficiently formidable to justify an application for an appropriation to improve it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator think that if that is true it will make Senators and Representatives a little bit more careful about asking for surveys of rivers, and thereby result in the saving of money?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not. If I thought so I would support the bill enthusiastically. I do not think anything will put a stop to that except the introduction of a new policy of appropriation in the Congress.

This bill does provide for permits, which may or may not be applied for—to use the language of the Senator having charge of the bill—according as the interested party may be willing to take chances; but before the bill has been in operation three years the department down here will construe that provision of the act as mandatory, and there is not a man in your State who can build a cow track or a sheep's bridge across one of your streams without coming down here to Washington and getting a permit; and again I say, it serves you right.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose we define in this bill what a navigable stream is. Does that make it a navigable stream?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know whether it does or not, because the chances are that in nine cases out of ten the courts will have to define the definition.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course, as a matter of fact, it does not, but in the practical workings that will be the effect of it.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly. I am speaking about its practical operation.

Mr. BORAH. They will find this authority here spread upon the statute, and they will exercise it, and there will be nobody who can stand against their exercise.

Mr. THOMAS. Precisely. We from the West have fought against this policy by day and by night, in season and out of season, and have been compelled to go down to defeat every time, because we have been confronted by an almost solid phalanx of opposition in the East and in the Middle States. Now, gentlemen, the medicine is of your own preparation. Please take it, and look as pleasant as you can. We have had to do it for some time.

ACTIVITIES AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

But, Mr. President, I rose, pursuant to a notice which I gave a day or two ago, to submit to the Senate some observations upon the part played by the War Department in the recent war against Germany.

The part assigned by fate to the Great Republic in the tragedy of the German war, and her performance of it, surpasses the combined military exploits of history. The generation which wrought the stupendous task have reached the high tide in human accomplishment. Posterity will record their deeds in epic, song, and story. These may be emulated in the crises of the future, but no achievement, however heroic in purpose or stupendous in proportions, can overshadow it.

We are too near the great episode, we have been too much a part of it, to appreciate the magnitude of its proportions or the sublimity of its perspective. We have been involved in its details, annoyed by contact with the conception or the execution of some of the plans, critical of its operation here and there, doubtful of the earnestness, the capacity, or the integrity of personnel, and impatient over costly delays seemingly avoidable. Apprehension and anxiety, mingled with crimination and recrimination and synchronizing with the development of a mighty military machine, have been too acute and too chronic to subside with the triumph of our arms and the close of hostilities. These, coupled with the magnitude of the public expenditure, extravagant beyond the experiences of the past but unavoidable in the waste of war, have displaced in public vision the vastness of the national task and the implacable need for its speedy accomplishment.

This state of mind, coupled with an approaching presidential election and the prospect of a supply of unlimited campaign material, have impelled the Congress to devote the greater part of the session, now more than a year old, to numerous and microscopical investigations of the details and methods of mobilization and supply, and of the departments, bureaus, boards, and individuals through whose agencies the work was done.

The investigators have revealed a few small dents in the national armor, a stray blemish on the escutcheon of national achievement, an occasional inability in personal effort. Like spots on the sun, these are for the astronomer's vision, and, like the astronomer, they are paraded with sinister enthusiasm by their discoverers, while the sun shines on.

The majestic sweep of an Amercian Army across the French landscape 3,000 miles away, their transport across the submarine-infested seas, their sustained equipment of munitions and supplies, the assembling and discipline of still vaster hordes of American youth in huge cantonments springing into existence overnight, the concentration of a nation's limitless industrial resources for a nation's cause, the titanic effort of a hundred million people for the overthrow of an overshadowing menace fraught with unspeakable disaster to a harried world, and the speedy retransportation of a victorious army—these are to-day obscured by the probings, the calumnies, the denunciations, and the personal animosities of the hour. Failures here, profligacy there, inability, incompetency, and dishonesty everywhere, form a clamoring chorus of complaint and detraction, undignified in character and unworthy of the Nation.

If it need be that such offenses must come, then rebuke and denial are alike impotent to overcome them. But they justify an attempt to draw the public mind for a brief moment away from the arena of acrid and passionate contention to a brief contemplation of the Nation's record as a whole during that period of 19 months which forms its "crowded hour of glorious life."

Let me, therefore, present to your dispassionate consideration a brief and imperfect sketch of the outlines of America's military campaign against the Central Empires during the years 1917 and 1918.

Since the date of the armistice on the western front a period has elapsed that is about equal to the period of American participation in the World War. Much has been written about the great accomplishments of our armies in France, but little has been said about the other and equally great achievement of our War Department in the creation and delivery of those armies in Europe. It is but just that something of the colossal measure of that achievement should be known.

Before passing to its review it seems fitting that we should touch upon still another—one that underlay and made possible both of these achievements—the effort of the American people. In the World War for nearly three years we had stood apart. We had no hand in bringing it about; no share in its conception. We had no thoughts of conquest or dominion. A great Nation, not insensible of our strength, we accorded to the smallest of peoples the full measure of national freedom which we demanded, as of right, for ourselves. We questioned the purposes of none. We believed that each nation was moving in its own way toward ends that the world would judge as good.

Suddenly, to us at least, the war burst upon Europe. Amazed at its onset, we watched, almost incredulously, its flames sweeping over Europe, then leaping to the remotest corners of the earth. What madness was theirs who kindled them? Everywhere men's hearts were gripped with apprehension. The structure of European civilization was assailed—a structure that had been a thousand years in the building. And then we, too, came in.

It is not needful to refer here to the causes which thrust us into the arena and for which we fought. They are known to all men. Nor is it wished to prolong the terrible passions of the war. These must be quenched. Mankind can not go forward until they die out. Without passion, without malice, our people are setting themselves to new tasks. And it is in no mean or ignoble spirit that they are facing them. The memory of recent years is fresh upon them; a memory of a common effort in an unselfish cause, when, revealing themselves to the world and to each other in new and unsuspected lights, they went forward, with a unity of purpose, of resolution, and of effort, to the greatest achievement in history.

The moral basis of that achievement is beyond measure or praise. The outlines of the achievement itself can be appraised. And the more we contemplate it, as it recedes in perspective so that we can see its full outlines, the more stupendous it appears. The conditions under which we began our task were not promising either as to an early or even as to a final success. For nearly three years the most powerful military machine ever created, the product of a century's growth, had marched triumphantly on. The Central Empires had been almost everywhere successful. Their opponents now to become our associates in the war had passed the zenith of their power. The eastern front was crumbling, and the Russian armies, shaken by excessive losses and repeated defeats, palsied by internal convulsions, showed but a shadow of their former strength. The fears then felt as to their dissolution and the total collapse of that once mighty nation were soon to be realized.

The task before our people was of transcendent magnitude. Could we offset the loss of Russia? Russia, a military nation, having a population nearly twice our own, and the largest armies in the world, organized and trained to meet this very event, whose borders ran with those of the enemy, so that her full strength could be exerted in the struggle, whose 8,000,000 troops had fought until so recently with an unflinching courage! Would it be possible for us, in practice and by inclination an unmilitary nation, to overcome the handicaps of our lack of preparation, to surmount the difficulties surrounding the dispatch of armies across 3,000 miles of a sea infested with submarines? In the face of these conditions, would it be practicable for us to exert a military effort equal to that lost by the defection of Russia?

But our task was much greater. We must exert that increased measure of effort that would be necessary to turn the tide of battle in our favor, and we must develop that effort with the utmost speed lest our associates, now facing enemy forces swollen by the release of his armies from the eastern front, should be crushed before we could come to their aid. Prior to the collapse of Russia the Allies had been able to maintain a numerical superiority on the western front of about 30 per cent; but the defection of that nation would permit the Central Powers not only to wipe out the allied superiority but to attain for themselves a superiority on that front of about 50 per cent. Our associates had put forth their maximum efforts. From now on their strength must wane. Their premiers and their military experts united in urging upon us that promptness was imperative. We must act quickly. Delay, whether avoidable or not, would be irretrievably disastrous.

The countries at war were literally nations in arms. The great military establishment each had maintained in peace lent itself to that expansion which was forced by the impelling need of three gruelling years, until their whole people had been molded into vast war machines. Great Britain alone afforded us an example even partially analogous to our own situation. Possessed, like ourselves, at the outbreak of war with an Army so small as to be, from a European standpoint, almost negligible, and, like ours, one not adapted to rapid expansion, her achievements had well earned our admiration. They might afford a comparative measure of our possible accomplishments. Yet Great Britain, close to the western front, without the great transportation difficulty that was facing us, in the 18 months following the outbreak of war had been able to assemble in France a force of only about 1,000,000 men. Our task might well have been looked on as impossible. In the light of the facts of the war until then it was impossible. Then we must do the impossible. We must surpass achievements that hitherto had found no parallel in history. We must demonstrate the old assertion that autocracies seem more efficient than they are, while democracies are more efficient than they seem.

It was in this spirit that our people met the great problems of the war. With unalterable resolution, with singleness of purpose, with constantly growing effectiveness of effort, they met every demand, overcame every difficulty, and turned an otherwise certain defeat into a decisive victory. And it was this spirit wafted overseas which brought renewed hope to the exhausted people of the Allies. And from this spirit flowed the resolution, the indomitable courage, that inspired our troops to their great deeds in France.

These deeds are well known. They are inscribed indelibly in history. But the basis on which these deeds became possible—the direction of the willing efforts of individuals into collective efforts toward essential ends, the organization of the resources of the entire Nation for the most effective prosecution of the war, the wise guidance of that organization; in brief, the achievement of the War Department in translating this unity of national purpose into unity of national effective effort—this is less known. Yet this achievement finds no counterpart among similar performances elsewhere in the war or in preceding history. Without leadership of high quality the sacrifices of a generous people would have been in vain. But again in a crisis, American leadership rose to the full measure of need and met every test.

The outstanding task which faced us upon our entry into the war was that of exerting our military strength upon the western front with a minimum of delay. To this task, which fell to the War Department, all others were subordinate or secondary. Time was everything. To its inexorable demand all other elements were subordinated. The main steps that had to be taken by that department for the accomplishment of this task included raising the men; organizing, training, and equipping them; transporting them overseas; and subsequently providing them with the supplies and munitions needed in the conduct of operations.

The declaration of war, on April 6, 1917, found the United States, from a military standpoint, wholly unprepared. We could not make the deliberate preparation that had marked the development of the European military systems. The latter were the products of systematic and prearranged plans in time of profound peace, developed in the gradual manner of great commercial enterprises, such as the United States Steel Corporation or the Pennsylvania Railroad. The War Department, without time for experimentation, had to proceed along untried lines and with the utmost speed to the accomplishment of the greatest enterprise ever undertaken. Let us examine what its task was and how that task was accomplished.

When we entered the war in the spring of 1917 the submarine situation justified grave doubts as to our ability to transport, much less to maintain, large forces in Europe. The sinkings during that spring were unusually heavy and were increasing from month to month to such an extent as to cause our associates to become apprehensive lest the decreasing ocean tonnage should preclude their obtaining the necessary foodstuffs and the material for munitions requisite for the further prosecution of the war. If this increased rate of sinkings should continue it would be possible to dispatch overseas only a comparatively small force, as the greater part of the available tonnage would be required for foodstuffs and supplies for our associates. These considerations led to the adoption at that time of a tentative program, which involved—

(a) The immediate dispatch overseas of a small but, in a military sense, complete body of troops—one division—to serve as the nucleus for the organization and training of the American forces that were to follow and to afford a physical evidence of our participation in the war.

(b) To follow this advance detachment by an expeditionary force as large as the shipping situation would permit. For housing this latter force during the period of organization and training, work was at once started on the construction of 16 National Army cantonments and 16 National Guard camps, having a total capacity of one and a half million troops.

(c) To construct shipyards and turn out ships faster than the enemy could destroy them.

The adoption of a detailed plan of organization had to await the report of Gen. Pershing, then in France. That report was submitted under date of July 10, 1917, and recommended the dispatch to France of an American army of 30 divisions, a force which would aggregate 1,372,399 troops. Subsequently, the serious situation produced by the German offensive on the western front in the spring of 1918 led to the conviction that the war could be brought to a successful end only through a greater participation by the United States than was possible under the 30-division program. Accordingly, on July 8, 1918, the War Department enlarged that program so as to provide for the assembly in France by June 30, 1919, of 80 divisions, or 3,360,000 men, with 18 divisions at home, or a total force of 4,850,000 men. This was the program followed from then until the date of the armistice in the dispatch of troops to France. The premiers of our associates and Marshal Foch insistently urged, however, that a program even of that magnitude would not be sufficient to insure that the war would be brought to a successful termination, and on September 3, 1918, the War Department extended that program so as to provide for the assembly in France by June 30, 1920, of 100 divisions, or 4,260,000 men, with 12 divisions at home, or a grand total of 5,500,000 on that date.

The forces available upon our entry into the war as a nucleus for such enormous armies were, indeed, small. Our Regular Army comprised only 128,000 men, scattered throughout the United States, Panama, Hawaii, Alaska, and the Philippines. A large portion of it was guarding the Mexican border, which could not be wholly denuded. The strength of the National Guard in Federal service, as a result of the troubles on the border, amounted to about 64,000, and the National Guard troops in State service amounted to about 111,000. Our total forces, both Regular and National Guard, amounted to only about 300,000, including the Regular troops in our insular possessions. Our National Guard troops had to be assembled, organized into divisions, their training completed, and their expansion effected to their war strength of approximately 400,000 men. The small force of trained Regular troops had to be drawn on to obtain detachments to act as training leavens for the divisions to be organized from the draft and to afford nuclei for the additional organizations created under the national defense act, and then further diluted by an expansion to war strength, until finally these organizations contained only a small percentage of men with prewar training.

In the following year and a half these small forces had been expanded to a total of approximately 4,000,000 men, of whom 2,000,000 had been assembled in France. An indication of the true measure of this accomplishment will be found in the rate of expansion achieved by the British. The latter, although their trained forces were double ours, and notwithstanding their heroic efforts and their proximity to the battle field, were able to assemble in France only 1,000,000 men in the first 18 months after their entry into the war, and it required three years for them to assemble there the number that we assembled in half that period.

This rapid and large expansion in our military forces was made possible by the selective-service act of May 18, 1917. Enlistments were from two sources—voluntary and the draft. During the spring and summer of 1917, before men could be obtained through the draft, voluntary enlistment was resorted to in order to expand the Regular Army and National Guard to war strength. From September of 1917 onward nearly all enlistments were obtained through the operation of the selective-service act. Of our total male population of 54,000,000, 26,000,000, or nearly one-half, were registered, and over 2,800,000 were inducted into the military service, or 60 per cent of our armed forces. The act was applied in a manner recognized by our people as just and equitable and with a minimum of interference with our economic life, yet it continued to meet the progressive needs of our constantly expanding military forces and would have met the 100-division program asked by Marshal Foch. The country supported the law in letter and in spirit and held the drafted soldier and the volunteer in equal honor and esteem. The earnest, unselfish cooperation of the people in the application of that law will endure forever as a monument to American patriotism.

The men called in the initial draft in the fall of 1917 were used in the creation of the 17 new National Army divisions. Subsequently calls under the draft varied from month to month, depending upon the rate of shipment of troops to France. As this rate increased, releasing greater housing facilities at cantonments, the monthly increments in the draft were correspondingly increased. As it required about a month to call, receive, and distribute a single large increment of the draft, the total number that could be called during a month was limited to the maximum number that could be received and assigned during that period. The distribution of the draft among the cantonments was made with a view to completing the different units in the relative order in which they would have to be dispatched to France, in order to maintain there at all times a well-balanced army. In this distribution consideration had to be given also to the necessities which had arisen in the World War of supplying to each organization men with special qualifications for particular functions. These specialists could be obtained from the draft, as it had brought into the service men of all trades. The number obtained from agricultural districts, however, was too small to meet the needs of the organizations formed from the drafts from those districts, and it was found necessary therefore to examine and classify all men received and reassign those with mechanical or other special training to organizations as needed. This classification served also to disclose those who were inferior in physique, or whose knowledge of the English language was inadequate, and permitted special measures to be taken for the correction of those deficiencies. The effect of this system was to obtain the maximum value from each increment of the draft, as each man was placed in the position that he was best qualified to fill; and it was an important factor in the conservation of the man power of the country and in tending to disturb to a minimum degree the economic life of the Nation.

As the war progressed men were needed not only to make up the new divisions required in the expansion of the Army, but also to replace the wastage in divisions already formed. This wastage arose not only from battle casualties but from disease and from rejections of men because of physical or other deficiencies. It became an increasingly serious problem as the war went on until in the summer of 1918 the replacements required had risen to 50,000 men per month.

In the initial organization of the divisions of the National Army, as well as of those of the National Guard, each division was made up of men drawn from the same locality. At first it appeared to be desirable to restrict the replacements sent to a division to men drawn from its home locality, so as to maintain its local character, but subsequent events challenged its practicability. It was unavoidable that the character and extent of exposure to battle casualties of different divisions should vary widely, and if replacements had been so distributed as to maintain the localized character of divisions the losses suffered by certain communities would have far exceeded those of others. For example, the Twenty-sixth Division was drawn from New England; the Twenty-seventh Division from New York; the Thirty-third Division from Illinois; the Thirtieth Division from North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee. During the course of the war each of these divisions received about 30 per cent of replacements, drawn from about 40 States other than those from which the division was originally raised. Had the First and Second Regular Divisions been drawn from particular localities the changes in their original character would have been still more marked because of the heavier losses they sustained. These facts indicate that the policy followed in the distribution of replacements tended to the distribution of losses equitably over the entire country.

With the limited means on hand, the training of our armies appeared to offer a problem that might prove insurmountable in the time available. The officers of the Regular Army numbered less than 6,000, those in the National Guard about 12,000. The latter were needed and were retained with the divisions drawn from the National Guard. The small corps of Regular officers afforded the only source from which instructors could be obtained to train the nearly 200,000 new officers that were needed for our expanded armies. But that source had to be drawn on at the same time to meet a multitude of other pressing needs arising in the organization of our armies here and abroad. The training of our forces could not be carried on without shelter for the men during the training period. It was required on an enormous scale, and none was available; and its construction had to be begun at once, as the initial draft could not be assembled until it was completed.

Immediately after the declaration of war steps were taken by the War Department to meet both these pressing needs. Orders were issued in April, 1917, for the first series of officers' training camps, which opened on May 8, 1917, and which was attended by approximately 38,000 candidates for commissions, selected after tests as to their physical and mental qualifications. These candidates were given an intensive course of instruction for three months in the duties of an enlisted man and of platoon and company commanders. The results were excellent and of fundamental and far-reaching importance. Over 27,000 of the graduates of this first series of camps were found qualified for commissions, and it was these graduates who supplied the initial quotas of company officers for the National Army divisions organized in September, 1917. Subsequently three other series of training camps were held with equally good results. The rapid expansion of the commissioned personnel from its total of 18,000 at the declaration of war to nearly 200,000 at the date of the armistice was made possible largely by the results obtained at these camps. Of these 200,000 officers, approximately one-half were drawn from these camps, 3 per cent came from the commissioned and 8 per cent from the enlisted personnel of the Regular Army, 6 per cent from the National Guard, and the remainder, a majority of whom were for the Medical Department, entered the Army directly from civil life.

Simultaneously with the initiation of the first series of officers' training camps steps were taken by the War Department toward the provision of shelter and suitable training areas for the new forces. The construction of 16 cantonments for National Army divisions was authorized in May, 1917, the last site secured on July 6, and on September 5 of that year, when the first installment of the initial draft was called to the colors, cantonment accommodations were available for 430,000 men. This capacity was shortly increased to 770,000, or an average capacity per cantonment of 48,000.

In May, 1917, the construction work was started also on camps for the 16 National Guard divisions which were called into the Federal service in July of that year. Although the soldiers were quartered under canvas, the provision of these camps involved extensive construction work, including the erection of many wooden structures, the provision of water, sewer, and lighting systems, and the construction of roads. These camps had a capacity of 684,000, so that the total capacity of the camps and cantonments constructed in 1917 amounted to one and a half millions. In addition to these 32 camps and cantonments, a large amount of additional construction was required for the provision of suitable embarkation centers at New York and Newport News, and of schools for special services. This additional construction had a capacity for more than 300,000 men, so that during a few months in 1917 there was constructed as an essential part of our war program shelter for approximately 1,800,000 men.

The costs of construction were necessarily higher than they would have been if time had not been a controlling consideration; but time was the essential factor, and the outstanding feature of the accomplishment was its rapidity. Each of the cantonments was completed in substantially 90 days. It was this speed which made it possible to begin the training of the drafted army in the fall of 1917, and that made it available just in time for the critical battles of the summer of 1918.

The problem of the initial equipment of our forces, and subsequently their maintenance in munitions and supplies overseas, at best an exceedingly difficult one, was complicated for us by the fact that our associates were drawing and must continue to draw from us large quantities of munitions and supplies which were essential to the maintenance of their armies. As a consequence, the War Department, notwithstanding the delay thus entailed in our own preparations, was forced to develop new fields to meet our needs.

Some phases of this problem presented difficulties as to quantities rather than as to character, as, for example, blankets, clothing, and so forth. While the provision of adequate quantities of these latter articles was less difficult than the provision of noncommercial articles, such as ordnance, yet the quantities needed were so enormous as frequently to overtax the industries of the country. This was due not only to the large requirements for initial and reserve stocks but also to the vast but unavoidable wastage in the operations of troops in campaign. For example, the number of blankets purchased by the Army during 1918 was two and one-fourth times as great as the entire American production in 1914. In 1918 the margin between demand and supply had so decreased that it became necessary for the War Department to take over certain industries and control the output throughout all stages of manufacture. In the same year that department found itself obliged to follow the precedent established by the British Government and commandeer the entire wool supply of the country.

The great difficulty, however, in equipping our new Army was that of supplying it with munitions—that is, rifles, machine guns, artillery, ammunition, airplanes, guns, toxic gases, and so forth. These are noncommercial articles, which find no place in our economic life, and involve such technical difficulties in manufacture that their production can not be improvised and can be materially shortened in point of time only with the greatest difficulty. This problem had been found a critical one by each of the countries at war, and to meet it our associates had been forced to supplement their own facilities by drawing heavily upon us. Then, too, unlike the other belligerents, we entered the war without large initial stocks of equipment to tide us over the period until new facilities could come into quantity production. The problem frequently appeared an insuperable one. That it was met and mastered is a tribute both to the capacity and foresight of the War Department and to the patriotism of American industry.

But it should be remembered that the actual achievements in our production of munitions, great as they were, were but a foretaste of the far greater accomplishments that would have been achieved by the War Department had the war continued through 1919. And it should be remembered also that the fact that much of the equipment and munitions used by our troops in France was obtained from our associates was due in large measure to the imperative need that confronted us in the spring of 1918 of responding to the urgent appeals of our associates by employing all available tonnage for the shipment of troops, to the exclusion of the dispatch of equipment, and accepting the offers of our associates to supply equipment for those troops. The situation then existing is well described by Lieut. Col. Repington, the British military critic, writing in the Morning Post, of London, on December 9, 1918, as follows:

> * * * They (the British war cabinet) also prayed America in aid, implored her to send in haste all available infantry and machine guns, and placed at her disposal, to her great surprise, a large amount of transports to hasten arrivals. * * *
> The American Government acceded to this request in the most loyal and generous manner. Assured by their allies in France that the latter could fit out the American Infantry divisions on their arrival with guns, horses, and transport, the Americans packed their infantry tightly in the ships and left to a later occasion the dispatch to France of guns, horses, transport, labor units, flying service, rolling stock, and a score of other things originally destined for transport with the divisions. If subsequently—and indeed up to the day that the armistice was signed—Gen. Pershing found himself short of many indispensable things, and if his operations were thereby conducted under real difficulties of which he must have been only too sensible, the defects were not due to him and his staff, nor to the Washington administration, nor to the resolute Gen. March and his able fellow workers, but solely to the self-sacrificing manner in which America had responded to the call of her friends. * * *

When we entered the war we had 600,000 rifles; at the date of the armistice this number had been increased to over 3,000,000, of types that were superior in accuracy and rapidity of fire to those used by either our associates or our enemies. The expansion made necessary in our stocks of machine guns was on a still greater scale. The extensive use of machine guns, as exemplified in the World War, had revolutionized the tactics of the battle field. The allowance of such guns authorized by Congress in 1912 was 4 per regiment. The experience of the World War has shown that this allowance should be eighty-fourfold greater, or 336 per regiment. Our production of machine guns was one of the striking features of our war effort. Our stocks were increased from a few thousand to 227,000 on the date of the armistice, a number well in excess of that required for our forces on that date. Moreover, a majority of these guns were of the Browning type, invented during the war by an American of that name, which were found superior to any machine guns in use by any of the other belligerents.

Of the enormous amount of equipment required in the expansion of our Army from its prewar to its final strength, artillery and artillery ammunition were among the elements that could be improvised with the least facility, for the necessary processes of its manufacture involved irreducible periods of time. As in the case of rifles, the quantity of light artillery the United States had on hand at its entry into war was sufficient to equip an army of only 500,000 men. We had on hand only 544 3-inch fieldpieces, whereas the 42 divisions organized in 1917 required 2,100 guns of that type. Few of our industries were adapted or could be adapted in the time available to the manufacture of complete pieces; so that the production of these pieces in quantity could be obtained only by distributing the work among many factories in such a way that each was allotted only the particular components that it could best produce. The success of this method involved a harmonizing and a coordination of effort in the work of many industries, so that the processes of all could be so timed that the subsequent assembly of the completed units would not be delayed. This coordination was attained, and during the period before the armistice the United States produced a total of 1,642 pieces of light artillery, and the work of production was under such headway that before it could be advantageously checked, in April, 1919, this total had risen to more than 3,000.

Our artillery program required the production of enormous quantities of artillery projectiles. As in the case of the artillery itself, no factories were prepared to manufacture complete rounds, and it became necessary for the War Department to assume the burden of distributing these components among manufacturers in such a manner as to secure harmony of effort in the production of the finished projectiles. By October, 1918, our monthly production had risen to the enormous total of 3,000,000 rounds. Our production of smokeless powder and high explosives was on an even greater and an unprecedented scale. Our output in 1918 not only met our own needs, but in addition met nearly one-half the needs of our associates.

A measure of the results obtained by the War Department in the manufacture of these munitions is afforded by comparing our output in the first 20 months after our declaration of war with the output of Great Britain in the first 20 months after her entry into the war. On making these comparisons we find that in respect of only one element, light artillery, was our output exceeded by that of Great Britain. Our output in heavy artillery was nearly double that of the British, exceeded it in light-artillery projectiles, was sixfold greater in heavy artillery projectiles, and 40 per cent greater in powders and explosives.

The manufacture of toxic gases was a problem that for us was wholly new. When, in 1915, the British and French lines in the Ypres salient were suddenly enveloped in clouds of gas, a new weapon had been introduced into warfare. That it was a terrible one is shown by the fact that during 1918 between 20 and 30 per cent of all our battle casualties were caused by gas.

When we entered the war we had had practically no experience in the manufacture of toxic gases, and possessed no facilities that could be readily converted to their manufacture. By the date of the armistice we had produced more than 10,000 tons, and on that date we were equipped to produce gas at a greater rate than France, England, or Germany.

One of the striking developments of the war was the wide application of caterpillar traction to military uses. It was variously applied and, as the war progressed, in increasing measure. Caterpillar tractors were used to haul heavy artillery, and to draw caterpillar trailers loaded with artillery ammunition or other heavy weights. During the latter stages of the war guns of constantly increasing size were mounted on caterpillar tractors, so that they became self-propelled batteries, which could travel over the roughest of country and fire directly from the conveyances on which they were mounted. In this new field our production made rapid progress, and before the armistice over 1,400 large artillery tractors had been shipped overseas. Another and a revolutionary military application of the caterpillar principle was the tank, which is merely a caterpillar having armored protection for the men and guns it carries. The progress of the war had led to the development of two distinct types, the light, 6-ton, and the heavy, 30-ton, tank. In the production of both these types we had made gratifying progress by the date of the armistice.

For the expansion of our aviation we set, in the general enthusiasm aroused by the creation of that new military arm, a program whose magnitude we did not in our ignorance then appreciate. At our entry into the war we possessed only a few airplanes, and these were not of battle types. The designs of the battle types developed during the war and prior to our entry therein had not been accessible to us, as they had been carefully guarded and withheld from neutrals. There was a general lack of appreciation, shared by even the best informed American authorities on aviation, as to the requirements, other than that of simple flying ability, of the enormous program that we had laid out for ourselves; and our people were thus led to cherish expectations that were beyond the possibilities of realization. The magnitude of that program is shown by the fact that after four years of intensive effort, and when at the height of her strength, Germany was able to maintain on the western front only about 2,500 airplanes.

Following the advice of our associates, our production of airplanes was largely concentrated on observation and bombing machines, which were subject to less frequent changes in design than pursuit planes, leaving the construction of the latter types to the European factories, which were in close contact with the front. As foreign engine production was insufficient to meet even the needs of our associates, it was found necessary to redesign many planes so as to take American-made motors. By November, 1918, our total production of service planes had reached 4,000, and was then proceeding at the rate of over 1,100 per month. America's chief contribution to aviation, however, was the development and production of Liberty engines. Engine production had been and continued to be the limiting factor in the aviation expansion of our associates. It was essential that we should develop a high-powered motor which could be adapted to our commercial methods of standardized quantity production. This need was met by the development of the Liberty 12-cylinder engine, which was adapted to our methods of quantity production and which could be produced by us in quantities to meet our own needs and those of our associates. By October, 1918, the production of these engines had reached a monthly output of 3,850, and the production to the date of the armistice totaled 13,574. After exhaustive trials our associates pronounced this engine a complete success, and vied with each other in attempting to obtain our total monthly output.

It may be said, indeed, that our accomplishments in aviation, while not equal to the initial program that we had laid out for ourselves, were what might have been anticipated in the light of a fuller knowledge of the subject and of the experiences of the war, and equaled the accomplishments of any of our associates during a like period.

The rate of delivery of our armies and their equipment overseas stands as an achievement that is unique and unprecedented in history. It was beyond the previous expectations of ourselves of our associates, and at a rate which the Central Empires had confidently assumed as wholly impracticable of attainment. Back of it there lay the most stupendous transportation system, rail and sea, ever assembled under a single control, directed by the War Department with an efficiency which met every demand made upon it.

The necessity for the creation of a great transport fleet arose just at the time when the world was experiencing its most acute shortage of tonnage. At the opening of hostilities the War Department possessed only 7 small transports, but within a period of 18 months it built up from this small beginning a transport fleet of over 600 vessels, totaling over three and a half million tons. In the assembling of this great fleet every possible source of tonnage had to be drawn upon. The first great increment was the seized German vessels, which amounted to about a half million tons. A million and a half tons were obtained by the withdrawal of ships from those commercial routes whose maintenance was not a vital economic need; a million tons of new ships were obtained from the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and the balance of the tonnage was obtained by charter from Dutch, Scandinavian, and Japanese sources.

In the summer of 1917 our troop movement was not rapid. In the fall of that year, as the former German liners were repaired and put into service, our embarkations increased to a rate of about 50,000 per month. In the spring and summer of 1918 this rate increased progressively and rapidly, until in the single month of July 306,000 men were landed in France, or 10,000 men per day. Within a period of 18 months over 2,000,000 men were transported overseas. Of these a half million were transported in the first 12 months and one and one-half millions in the last 6 months. The transportation of troops on such a scale or over such a distance has never before been attempted or contemplated. While credit for this movement must be shared with our associates, particularly the British, it should be said that the accomplishment of our transports exceeded theirs, both in the extent to which they were loaded and in the speed of their turn around.

Cargo shipments rose from 16,000 tons in June, 1917, to over 800,000 tons in November, 1918, and the total oversea cargo shipments amounted to 7,500,000 tons. This cargo included not only food, equipment, and munitions for our armies, but large quantities of building and railway material for the extensive overseas construction required for the maintenance of those armies in France. It included, for example, 47,000 motor trucks, 27,000 freight cars, and about 1,800 locomotives, of which 650 were shipped set up on their own wheels, so that they could be unloaded on the tracks in France and run off in a few hours under their own steam. The need for additional locomotives for military operations in France was a constant and pressing need. The shipment of set-up locomotives of large size had never been made before, but at the date of the armistice the War Department was prepared to ship these set-up locomotives at the rate of 200 a month.

The movement of troops and supplies within the United States reached tremendous proportions, nearly 14,000,000 soldiers being moved by rail during the war to camps or ports of embarkation, but because of the centralized and efficient control of our railways, which permitted an effective coordination of the measures taken to meet both military and commercial needs, these movements were carried out with but little interference with the normal traffic of the country.

During the entire period of active hostilities the Army lost at sea only 200,000 tons of shipping, of which 142,000 tons were sunk by torpedoes. No American troop transport was lost on its eastward voyage. For this splendid record the Navy, which armed, manned, and convoyed the troop transports, deserves the highest commendation.

The record made in the dispatch of our troops to France has been excelled only in the rate at which they were returned to our shores after the armistice. This return movement reached its maximum in June of 1919, when 364,000 troops were embarked from French ports, nearly all of whom were carried in American ships.

No effort was spared by the War Department to safeguard the health of our soldiers. The Medical Corps of the Army, numbering about 2,000 commissioned officers, was expanded by the addition of over 31,000 physicians from civil life, including practically all the leaders in the medical profession. Adequate hospital facilities were provided, and all of the most recent advances in medical science were applied toward the prevention of disease. As a result, for the first time in our history the deaths in war from disease were not far in excess of those resulting from battle. In this war approximately half the deaths occurring among our soldiers were due to disease, and it is estimated that of this number nearly one-half was due to the influenza epidemic occurring in the fall of 1918. In the Spanish War the number of deaths from disease were five times, in the Civil War two times, and in the Mexican War seven times as large as the number of deaths from battle. America's debt of gratitude to the medical profession is immeasurable. No branch of our citizenship rendered more splendid service.

Execution of the details of the Nation's colossal undertaking demanded many new organizations, attainable only through business and scientific management, and talent of the highest order. To this need the business and professional men of America made prompt and loyal response. They came from every industrial center of the country. Unmindful of the pressure of their own affairs, they tendered their services to the departments, which gladly welcomed them, and, without pay or hope of pecuniary reward, they cheerfully accepted and sustained every responsibility which the Nation in its exigency placed upon their competent and willing shoulders. It is not too much to say that these splendid patriots contributed an indispensable element to the success of American arms in the great war just ended. The duties falling on them were as vital as those committed to the men in arms and at the front. They helped to organize victory. I wish that time would permit me to recite the long list of these men, all, or nearly all, of whom have long since returned to their homes and quietly taken up the tasks they abandoned for the sterner and most insistent duties of American citizenship. With scarcely an exception that I can recall, they paid their own expenses, lived upon their own resources, made and canceled many monetary obligation incurred solely for the Government, assumed responsibilities on critical occasions which imperiled their private fortunes, and effaced themselves in the work their heads and hands were called upon to perform. Baruch, Hoover, Ryan, and Garfield are types of this great galaxy of war-time servants of the country's urgent needs.

With many of these the tongue of slander and the spirit of detraction have been busy. But they may take serene pleasure in the fact that the illustrious men of our past were even more bitterly assailed than they, and that posterity, always dispassionate and always just, will lay its laurels upon their memories and cherish with undying gratitude their unselfish devotion to their country in its hour of travail.

As the war progressed more and more of our industrial activities were diverted from their normal uses and drawn in to become integral parts of the constantly expanding national war-making machine. Until the date of the armistice this machine was moving at ever-increasing speed. On that date the machinery had to be reversed and the work of demobilization begun. The problem was not a simple one. Nearly 4,000,000 men, 2,000,000 of whom were overseas, had to be returned promptly, yet with a minimum of interference with our industries and without causing hardship to the men, to the places in our social and economic life that they had quitted to enter the Army. War contracts had to be terminated with the minimum of delay consistent with a due regard for the interests of both the Government and of industry.

Fortunately, the War Department had foreseen the character of the problem which would arise and was prepared to adopt at once an effective and wise policy of demobilization. Three classes of industrial workers whose immediate discharge was for the public good—anthracite-coal miners, railway employees, and railway mail clerks—were demobilized at once. Individuals whose families were in need or distress or whose services were specially needed in our economic reconstruction were discharged in advance of the demobilization of their military organizations. With these exceptions, the plan followed was that of demobilization by military organizations in the order in which they could be best spared—transporting each soldier before final discharge to the camp nearest his home; retaining in service those of impaired physical condition who could be improved by treatment; preventing the congestion of unemployed discharged soldiers in the larger cities; and aiding the soldiers in securing employment.

The demobilization of our armies was accomplished with remarkable celerity, with fairness to the soldier, and without disturbing our economic life. In the first month after the armistice over 600,000 men were demobilized, and in one year the number discharged had risen to 3,200,000. This rate of demobilization would have been far exceeded had it not been retarded by the delays incident to the return of 2,000,000 troops from France and to the accompanying necessity of retaining in service in this country organization for the reception and demobilization of men and equipment from abroad. Notwithstanding this unavoidable retardation, the rate of demobilization was twice that attained in the discharge of the Northern armies at the close of the Civil War.

The great military industrial machine created during the war had also to be demobilized and incompleted war contracts liquidated. This was done promptly and with a great saving of public funds. The total value of uncompleted war contracts liquidated was approximately $3,000,000,000, and those were liquidated at a cost of about 13 per cent, effecting a saving to the Government of about $2,600,000,000.

These are the larger aspects of the achievement of the War Department during the World War. They speak for themselves. It was the will of the American people that we should have made no preparation for that struggle. It was their will that, once entered, we should expend, if need be, every ounce of national strength in bringing it to a successful end. In effort and in achievement the War Department responded to that will. From small beginnings it created a mighty structure, built on foundations of a still greater scope. If upon minute examination of each detailed part imperfections be found here and there, due to the impelling haste in its creation, they do not mar its splendor, and they are lost in the overshadowing perspective of the massive whole. It rises beyond the reach of those who might wish to deface it. It stands out as the achievement of all the ages; an achievement well worthy of the genius of our people; an American achievement under American leadership; an achievement immeasurably beyond the capacity of any other nation of any time; an achievement made possible by the genius and the development of a Government dedicated from its birth to the great principle of liberty, linked with justice and protected by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

RECESS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] left the Chamber, as he was not feeling well. I can not ask for a vote upon the report in the absence of the Senator from Utah, but if any other Senator desires to speak on it I should like to have him take the time until about 5 o'clock. As no one seems to be inclined to do so, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, May 28, 1920, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 27, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Life, all love abounding, we thank Thee for this beautiful world full of life and activity, wherein we can develop our physical, intellectual, and moral being to the largest scope of our energy.

"Hitherto my Father works and I work." In this saying of the Master will be found the keynote to real success. God grant that we may study Thy laws and work in harmony with them, that together we may accomplish Thy will and fulfill our destiny. In Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa presented the conference report and statement of the House conferees on the bill (H. R. 11892) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4411. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Pembina, N. Dak., and Kittson, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4438. An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4163. An act to incorporate the Roosevelt Memorial Association.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I shall object unless the gentleman will make the statement that the minority have been consulted and that they have agreed to it. I am going to make objection each time unless that statement accompanies the request for unanimous consent. You might just as well understand that now.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the ranking Democratic member of the committee, Mr. DENT, left the conference room with me and knew I was coming here for the purpose of making this request. He is present.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman may be present; he may be in the Hall; but unless that statement accompanies the request for unanimous consent to send a bill to conference you are not going to conference by unanimous consent. You might just as well understand that.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, it is a fact that the chairman of the committee consulted me, and he and I came over to make this request.

Mr. GARNER. It is easy enough for the gentleman to make that statement when he asks unanimous consent.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I did not know that the gentleman from Texas had grown so particular. This is the first time I have heard him make this statement.

Mr. GARNER. It is unfortunate that the gentleman has not been in the Hall. This is the fifth time I have made that statement on the floor of the House.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman ought to be fair. I have been in conference on the Army reorganization bill every morning, every afternoon, and frequently at night, and I have not been able to be in the House all the time.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that. I made no criticism of the gentleman's absence, but I make the statement that this is the fifth time I have made this identical statement. I think it is a reasonable request, and the gentleman hears it.

Mr. KAHN. There is no use getting excited about it.

Mr. GARNER. I am not. I am merely stating that this is the fifth time I have given this notice.

Mr. KAHN. And I make the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. KAHN, Mr. ANTHONY, and Mr. DENT.

CROW INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I was going to call up the conference report on the Crow Indian bill, providing for the leasing of certain lands, but I understand that the statement of the House conferees does not accompany the report.

The SPEAKER. Apparently there is no statement accompanying the report.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then, of course, I shall not call it up at this time.

SIMPLIFICATION OF THE REVENUE ACT OF 1918.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 14198——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

PENSION APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to call up the pension appropriation bill (H. R. 13416) and to move to concur in two Senate amendments which are made necessary by the enactment of the Fuller bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up from the Speaker's table pension appropriation bill with Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 13416) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, these two amendments of the Senate are made necessary by the enactment of the Fuller bill. When the pension appropriation bill passed the House the Senate had not acted upon the Fuller bill. The estimate of the Pension Office, upon inquiry, is that $150,000 will be necessary, for fees of surgeons for making examinations, in lieu of the $20,000 carried by the House bill.

I want to congratulate the Commissioner of Pensions. I think he has been fair and zealous in the performance of his duty, doing justice to the claimants and protecting the Treasury by a fair administration. I believe his estimate is reasonable, and therefore I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There are just two Senate amendments?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; that is all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And the gentleman moves to concur in both of them?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does that close up the bill?

Mr. CANNON. That closes up the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

SIMPLIFICATION OF THE REVENUE ACT OF 1918.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14198) to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, with Mr. REAVIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14198) to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That Title II of such act is amended by adding at the end of part I thereof the following new section:

EXTRAORDINARY NET INCOME.

"SEC. 207. (a) That compensation received in any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1919, for personal service rendered by the taxpayer during a period of more than three years, and gain derived in any such year from the sale of capital assets acquired more than three years prior to the date of sale, shall be deemed to be extraordinary income; and such income, less losses of the same class or description and the expenses or other deductions properly chargeable thereto, shall be deemed to be extraordinary net income.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, this section of the bill, if adopted, will introduce another complication into an already complicated income tax. Not only will it make the returns more complicated but, if I understand the purpose of the section, it will cost the Government a loss of millions of dollars of revenue.

What is the meaning of this section? Under the present law if I bought a piece of real estate in 1916 and paid $100,000 for it, kept it until the year 1920 and sold it for $500,000, I would make a profit of $400,000. Under the law I must render that in my income tax as income received for the year 1920. But under this amendment, if I understand it, it would enable me to claim that that income, if it was 20 per cent or more of all of my income, it would enable me to have that distributed over a period of years and to have my income tax reassessed and thereby have my surtaxes very largely reduced.

Now, I remember that when we had the war-revenue act of 1918 under consideration I asked the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], who had charge of the bill at that time, a question with reference to this particular matter of real estate taxes. I remember that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] also asked questions with reference to it, and at the time I was of the impression that we ought to permit a man to distribute such income ratably. But the argument of Mr. KITCHIN convinced me that I was wrong, and the more I study the proposition the more convinced I am that the law should remain as it is at present.

How are you going to tell how much gain resulted in 1917? How are you going to tell how much gain resulted in 1918? How are you going to tell how much gain resulted in 1919? It seems to me that the only feasible plan is to require the rendition of the income as of the year it was received.

Not only that. I think it equitable to the public that we should do so, because if there is any income that ought to be heavily taxed it is the unearned increment on real estate. If there is any income that ought not to be exempted from tax burdens it is income of that sort. I do not believe that there is anything that has contributed to the high cost of living any more than the rapid rise in real estate values, which have been occasioned by inflation and speculation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks for three minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall be compelled to object unless the gentleman from Texas confines himself to the paragraph under consideration. He has not said a word about it yet.

Mr. BLACK. I will read the paragraph to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We are considering section 207, which applies to personal services only and has nothing to do with real estate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Let me read it:

That compensation received in any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1919, for personal service rendered by the taxpayer during a period of more than three years, and gain derived in any such year from the sale of capital assets acquired more than three years prior to the date of sale, shall be deemed to be extraordinary income.

And so forth.

Now, that is the very class of gain to which I am addressing my remarks. The bill has defined the words "capital assets" in a subsequent section, but it is certainly a relevant subject at this time, and it is in order for me to discuss the class of gain that the gentleman is seeking to except. And I want to read from the gentleman's own report.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The provisions for that are governed by the subsequent section.

Mr. BLACK. I have read the paragraph, and that is the one that undertakes to establish the law, and the words "capital assets" are defined in the subsequent paragraph. Now, here is what the gentleman says in his own report:

Under the present law all gains, profit, and income derived by way of compensation for personal service and from sales from dealing in property, either real or personal, are taxable as income of the year in which received.

And then the gentleman goes on to say that the purpose of this amendment is to abrogate and repeal that provision of the present law, and I contend that if the bill is passed it will enable real estate speculators to make these large profits from unearned increments in real estate and escape a very large payment of income tax to the Federal Government. It can not mean anything else, and I submit that we ought not to introduce into the income-tax law this new and indefensible scheme that the gentleman undertakes to do here by calling it extraordinary income.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I have tried in vain for some time to obtain a copy of the report and the bill under consideration. Many other Members are unable to follow the debate for the want of a printed bill. I think the consideration of this matter should be postponed until we can have some printed bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not state a point of order. The Chair is laboring under the same difficulty of having no bill here.

Mr. JUUL. I want to participate in the debate, but I am unable to do so for want of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret the situation that we find ourselves in without copies of the bill. I supposed they would be here.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If the gentleman will yield, I understand the bill was printed in the RECORD of Friday.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not state about that. The difficulty is that the bills we had the other day have been destroyed. I have had books with my name on them thrown away. They were bound in leather and stamped with my name. The pages gathered up the bills, and instead of putting them back on the desks when we had the hearings before, they threw them away. I sent to the Senate and to the Ways and Means Committee to get more copies of the bill, but was unable to do so.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. I would suggest that the gentleman have the Doorkeeper order the pages who gather up the bills to return them to the desk. I maintain it is utterly unfair to ask Members to sit here and vote for bills they can not get a copy of.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman will find a copy of the bill on pages 7605 and 7606 of the RECORD of Tuesday last.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, because there are no copies of the bill to be had, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be again read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the paragraph.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, first, permit me to apologize to my friend from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. This section is preliminary to the taxing section. Therefore I thought we would better postpone discussion of it until we reached that section. My remarks made to him were probably not strictly correct when I said that he was talking about matters not contained in the paragraph, and I apologize to him.

The purpose of this section is to remedy a great inequality which now exists; first, with reference to compensation for personal services. A lawyer may have worked upon a case for five years. He receives the pay, we will say, this year. Under the present law, unless he has allocated his charges for each year he will have the whole sum charged up to him as income of this year and have to pay a very high surtax upon it; but he may, if he chooses, get around this provision by allocating a part each year as he goes along. Therefore some will pay the high tax and some will not. It is the same way with reference to property sold.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman speaks of allocating. I do not understand what he means. Suppose a lawyer collects a fee of $1,000 this year for services over a series of years. What does the gentleman mean by allocating that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Suppose he had charged on his books $250 for the first year, $250 for the second year, and so on, until he made up the thousand dollars. He could have had the $250 which he considered perfectly good against his client set into his income each year, if he desires.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman means that he could have put in $250 as a part of his income several years ago.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Which he had not received?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And which he did not know he ever would receive?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; if he considered it good.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, he might do it; but if he did, he would not be a lawyer—he would be a fool.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman classes as fools some lawyers of very high standing.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think not. I do not think any lawyer does that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would think the more correct answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] would be not that the lawyer charge this as income, but merely enter on his books that portion of the fee which he thought he had earned, but never sent in a bill for it until the present year, so that he would escape the highest tax, if his fee was earned in years before the highest tax had to be paid, making it a fairer proposition.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It might be that some lawyer does that, but it is not customary. It is not often that a lawyer would collect a bill until he had made out his final fee, and determined upon the exact amount to be charged in his books. Then the income-tax agent would have to go over his books and examine them to see whether he is right or not, and they would have to cross-examine him and determine on what theory he made the charge, and the confusion that is now confounded about making a return would be eternally worse confounded under this provision.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit, the people whom this affects would like to see it done, because it is fair, because it is honest, because it is right.

They earned this money in the preceding years, and they ought not by right, by fairness and justice, to have it charged up to them all in a lump at the end of one year. The gentleman says that this makes things worse for them. They are the ones who would like to see this done, naturally, because if carried into effect it would somewhat lower their taxes. It is fair and just that it should be done.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is this permissive or compulsory? Does the man have the choice, or is he required to do this?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He has the choice.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Where is the language that gives him the choice?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He is not compelled to list anything as extraordinary income. He can leave it out, if he desires, in his return.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no. He has to put in all of his income.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But he does not have to list any of it as extraordinary.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the law says he must, he has to. The gentleman will pardon me for asking the question, but I can not get a copy of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman can find it in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I can not read the fine print in the RECORD, and I do not propose to try.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is not necessary that the choice should be given here, because it would be given him by the general provisions of the income-tax law, and if my friend will pardon me, I think I am fairly familiar with that subject.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman may be. All of my familiarity with the income tax in the main comes from trying to understand the unintelligible blanks that are sent out by the income-tax office. It strains my intellect, and I am never sure that I am right, and probably never have been, in making up the return. The gentleman may know how to do it, and if he does he ought to sit down here and tell the rest of us how to do it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No man will be obliged to list any portion of his income as extraordinary income if he does not so desire. That is a mere matter of choice with him, and if, as the gentleman says, it is going to confuse the taxpayer, he will not be obliged to do it. That is the answer to that proposition.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I would be better satisfied if the gentleman would show me the language.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I fail to understand the difficulty of my friend from Illinois.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. What is the reason for limiting this privilege to a man whose extraordinary income amounts to at least 20 per cent of his income? If it is a good thing, why not give all of those the benefit of it who have extraordinary income?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We had to draw the line somewhere, and unless it amounted to at least 20 per cent it would make no very great difference with the man.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It might make a great difference. It might be a considerable amount, and yet not be 20 per cent of his total income.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, if it is not 20 per cent of his total income it will not add greatly to the surtax; that is the reason. It might be a large sum, but if his income was so large that it was less than 20 per cent it would not greatly affect his surtaxes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. What method will be used in the case of the sale of real estate to determine the amount that the land increased in value for a particular year? What is to be the basis of the determination? Suppose the land was held for five years and increased during that five years and was sold in the last year, what process would you use in determining the profit that accrued to the land during the last year in order to determine what is the extraordinary income?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The only basis that can be taken is the same that has been all the time, the original cost.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I know the original cost, but if he holds it for five years under the terms of this bill he would not have to pay the tax on the difference in the original cost and the final selling price, but only on the amount the land gained during the last year?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; the gentleman misunderstands entirely. The effect of this would be to permit him to apportion it to each year.

Mr. JONES of Texas. He can rate it as between those years——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And he will have to pay the tax for those years on it, whatever tax he would have paid had he received the money during those years.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The tax for each year will be paid during the last year.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. How do you determine that for each year——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. By the sworn return of the taxpayer the same as you do ordinarily; there is no difference

Mr. JONES of Texas. You let the taxpayer himself determine the amount?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not a particle different than we do now under the terms of the law, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; now you take the original cost or value and subtract that from the final selling price and it is an easy matter to determine accurately the increase.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I regret my friend is not more familiar with the law. As soon as you go back to 1913 you always take the value; it is not a question of cost at all, and a greater number of these sales apply to cases in which the property was acquired prior to 1913.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But that will not assist you in apportioning the increase for any individual year, and will not the man be inclined to put the principal increase in value during the year he had the least taxes?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It simply increases the surtax if he does not divide it as much as he could.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That depends upon the way the law was drafted. It would be a pretty complicated way to determine it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, just one word further in reference to this provision so far as it applies to real estate. The Treasury has thought that so far as sales of real estate are concerned——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would ask that I have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With reference to sales of real property I will say that the Treasury officials think it will bring a good deal more income tax if this provision is passed for the reason that so many sales are now being held up. People are unwilling to sell property without paying the enormous surtax which would eat up their profit, and consequently they have determined not to sell at all but to keep the property.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Does not the gentleman think that in a period of such wild speculative values in land it would be a good economical thing for the country if real-estate sales are held up to a certain extent?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; not for the benefit of the Government; not to get the taxes. The Treasury would like to see this property sold while prices are high, so it can get this income tax.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. What does the Treasury Department say about it? Has the Treasury made a recommendation?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Treasury has recommended all the provisions of this bill, and are very desirous that it be passed. Now, that is the reason why the Treasury wants to have this provision as to real property, because they believe it will get a great deal more money than the present provision.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. A man sells a piece of real estate on three years' or five years' time, payable in equal installments. The first installment is made. He does not have to return that or can wait until the five years are up?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He would have to make a return of that. This provision does not apply to property sold on the installment plan.

Mr. CANNON. That much?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And he would have to return the second. I think I get the gentleman's idea. He could return that and have far less surtax if he would divide it up and get his yearly payments, and then he would not have so much as he would if he took payment in five years, because he would have then a larger surtax?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the way most of the sales are made now on various payments. But this provision does not apply to a case like that.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield for a question? In making these installment payments——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My friend is mistaken. This does not apply to installment payments at all.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This would apply to a case, if the gentleman will pardon me, such as this: Suppose the gentleman from Illinois had bought some property in 1910, and there had been an appreciable rise. If he sold that property to-day, he would have to pay the difference between the cost to him as of March, 1913, and the value for which he sold it and return his this year's income and pay the high rate of taxation. Under this bill he can go back and apportion it over. That is the real case.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Ohio is correct. The holders of real property will not sell unless they are forced to do so, and the Government is not getting income taxes from those cases.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As I understand the gentleman's statement now, a man who owned property in 1919 and had sold it and had taken and invested the proceeds would have to return the income as a part of his income return? If he sells it now, of course he will have to return the profit from it as income under existing law?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Whereas if he had sold in 1913, the income from the proceeds would have been distributed through the years from 1913 until now. And the theory of the bill is that not having sold the property, the income in the way of profit shall be distributed in the same way as though it had been sold?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is correct. I thank him for his statement.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It looks like a fair proposition.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will permit, under existing law there are two ways of getting the income. The Internal Revenue Department permits two ways of figuring that. Suppose you purchased a piece of property in 1905 and sell it this year, and you make a certain amount of profit; the Internal Revenue Office would permit you to prorate the profit over the term of years you held that property and say that it earned pro rata a certain amount each year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They told me they would not.

Mr. FORDNEY. They permitted me to do it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Possibly they did that because the gentleman is chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. FORDNEY. Even if I am, I have no rights that the gentleman has not. I went to the commissioner and told him that I was unable to testify as to the correct value of the property as of March 1, 1913, and asked permission to prorate that income for a period of years, and they permitted me to do it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is an arrival at the income as from the original cost. That is a different proposition.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a very brief statement of my impressions of this provision in the bill.

Of course, an income tax law ordinarily contemplates the imposition of a regular scale of rates from all profits arising from any business, trade, or profession. That, as a rule, means the annually recurring profits that come to a taxpayer or citizen from any trade, profession, or business. That includes under this general rule the profits derived from the purchase or sale of property, either real or personal, conducted by a dealer or one who makes that his business. Our law likewise taxes, under the construction given it, a certain class of profits that do not come within the category of those of a regular business. Most other laws have not undertaken to tax the profits derived from the sale of capital assets, for instance, by a manufacturing concern, but only the profits they derive from the prosecution of their regular business. The same laws do not tax the profits derived from the sale of a piece of real estate purchased for use and not purchased for resale for a commercial profit. But your real estate dealer would conduct a commercial purchase and sale subject to tax. The purpose of this pending provision is to deal with the three classes of profits that do not annually recur in connection with any trade or business. First, where a farmer, for instance, purchases a farm for use; at the end of 10 years he decides to sell that farm, and may purchase another one; he sells it for double the cost; under the present high scale of surtaxes it is manifestly unfair to take those profits that cover 10 years in their accrual and make him pay the higher rates for one year. So he may prorate them and pay taxes thereon. You understand this does not apply to profits from the sale of real estate by dealers and those in the business, but only the exceptional cases to which I have referred.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. If I understand the law correctly now, every income-tax return permits you to state whether you are rendering income received or income accrued, and all of these classes covered here under the bill, if they want to, can render that income in the year in which it accrues. They get it now under the law.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The department, by a very strained construction of the law, has undertaken on a different state of facts to give to a certain extent a liberal construction where real estate is sold on credit and payment made in installments.

But it is a harsh construction of the law. Now that is one class of cases, Mr. Chairman.

The English Government is undertaking to tax this class of profits and tax them in this way for the first time, whereas we have been doing it from the beginning.

Another class of cases is where a contractor undertakes to build a railroad, or a bridge, or a tunnel, or a ship, which requires three or four years. It is impossible for him to get his profits as they accrue at the end of each year; that is, his proportionate amount. And this covers a case of that kind. Or it covers the case of a lawyer where he is not able to collect his fee except out of the recovery, and the litigation extends over a number of years.

I introduced some months ago a bill covering these three classes of profits. I provided certain safeguards in there to the effect that the Treasury must be satisfied of the good faith of the transaction, so as to prevent the contractor, or the occasional purchaser or seller of real estate, from evading the law by holding out for a longer period of time and reducing the rates. I hope they will yet be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, since hearing the gentleman explain the bill I do not know that I could have any objection to this provision of it, or perhaps any other. This bill is an illustration of a situation. Gentlemen sometimes have an idea that by putting on high taxes they get lots of money. Now, along comes the Treasury Department and the Ways and Means Committee and recommend to us to practically reduce the taxes on sales of real estate and some other things, because they say that with the present exorbitant surtax owners will not sell, and instead of receiving money from this source they say they find that people keep their property, incur no income by sale and profits, and the Government receives no revenue. And yet, in spite of a bill of this sort to reduce these taxes, we have pending before us a proposition generally to increase taxes under the internal revenue law and income taxes on the theory that they will bring more money. And I venture to say that some of the taxes proposed in one of the bills now pending, instead of increasing the revenue, will likely decrease it. If you put taxes up so high that people do not incur them, you can not get the tax. You do not get the tax now on the sales of real estate, much because people prefer to hold their real estate rather than to sell it and give the Government the proceeds of it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLACK. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(b) The term "capital assets" as used in this section includes (but is not limited to) property held by the taxpayer for consumption or use; but does not include any property, whether real, personal, or mixed, held by a dealer for sale or included in the inventory of the taxpayer taken at the close of the preceding taxable year. The terms "compensation received" and "gain derived" mean compensation or gain accrued in the case of taxpayers who make returns upon the so-called accrual basis; but the provisions of this section shall not apply in the case of sales upon the installment plan when the income or gain is accounted for in installments as the payments are received.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the section.

Mr. BLACK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I presume that the House will take the same action on this paragraph as was taken on the other, and after I submit the few remarks that I am going to submit on this paragraph I do not intend to argue the matter further.

But I want to call attention to this one fact: That we have had it frequently argued on the floor of the House—it has been frequently argued in the press—that Congress ought to show more favorable consideration, more discrimination, in favor of earned incomes. It has been the contention that incomes that are earned by a man's efforts should not be taxed as highly as accrued incomes, and while that proposition has never received favorable consideration so far as legislation is concerned, it does seem to present some merit. And yet in this bill we are taking a backward step and showing the favoritism to accrued income, to wit, unearned increment on real estate, and in my opinion there has not been a more indefensible proposition brought before this House during this session of Congress than this section of the bill which I am now debating.

I remember when the matter was up during the discussion of the act of 1918 that the able gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] made a speech on this proposition and convinced the House that there ought not to be any distribution over a period of years of these accrued incomes, and I dare say if he were in the House at this time his voice would be raised against this proposition. At the very time that gentlemen are arguing and contending for a soldiers' bonus and for the increasing of income taxes to pay it we have a proposition brought in here by the Committee on Ways and Means to reduce very substantially the income taxes received from this class of real estate transactions.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; in a moment. Now, what does the gentleman from Iowa say in his report on that?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is making a very violent indictment of his Secretary of the Treasury and his Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who have drafted this resolution and are urging it upon us.

Mr. BLACK. It is absolutely immaterial to me as to whom the remarks apply. The proposition is wrong to my mind from any standpoint.

Now, what does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] state in his report? "It is contemplated," he says, "that if this provision is enacted into law a separate schedule will be provided in the income-tax return for the allocation of the extraordinary income to the proper years and a recomputing of the income taxes for such years." It means that the Treasury Department has got to go back and pick up the old returns and recompute the tax.

I wonder if the House is going to vote for a proposition of this kind, which will further complicate an already complicated situation by adding to it this so-called extraordinary income and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to go back in such cases where it is applicable over all this period of years since the enactment of the income tax in the Underwood tariff bill and recompute income-tax returns. I am not going to vote for it, Mr. Chairman, and I serve notice on the House that I am going to offer a motion to recommit this bill with instructions to strike out the entire section; and if I can do so I will get a record vote on that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether he correctly understood the motion?

Mr. BLACK. It was to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained to hold at this time that that motion is premature because the section has not been read in its entirety.

Mr. BLACK. I mean the paragraph.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

SIMPLIFICATION OF THE REVENUE ACT OF 1918.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] had familiarized himself with the income-tax law he would not be so rash in his assertions about this provision being indefensible. Does the gentleman think that the Secretary of the Treasury, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and every single member of the Committee on Ways and Means are going to bring in here an indefensible proposition? It is because the gentleman does not understand it. His talk here shows that he does not understand it.

Mr. BLACK. In what particular?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman says this exaggerates the difference between the earned and unearned income. It does not change the situation a particle. It puts them in the same position as they were before, and the gentleman is basing his argument on that proposition, which is absolutely erroneous, and if the gentleman had made a little study of it he would know it.

Mr. BLACK. Under the present law does not all the income derived from the sale of a piece of real estate have to be rendered and assessed and paid for the year that the income is received?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It does.

Mr. BLACK. Will not this law permit the allocation of that income over a period back to 1913?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. Has the gentleman any quarrel with that?

Mr. BLACK. If that is not a discrimination in favor of accrued incomes I would like the gentleman to explain what other class of incomes mentioned in the bill can be allocated.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Compensation for personal services, I would say to the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK. I said "other classes mentioned in this bill."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All other classes of income, every class of income to which this provision could apply is covered by the bill. There is no exception anywhere. If the gentleman can not read and understand the English language I can not make it plain to him. That is all there is of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. The various acts authorizing the issues of Liberty bonds are amended and supplemented as follows:

(a) On and after January 1, 1920, 4 per cent and 4¼ per cent Liberty bonds shall be exempt from graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations, in respect to the interest on aggregate principal amounts thereof as follows:

Until the expiration of two years after the date of the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government as fixed by proclamation of the President, on $125,000 aggregate principal amount; and for three years more on $50,000 aggregate principal amount.

(b) The exemptions provided in subdivision (a) shall be in addition to the exemptions provided in section 7 of the second Liberty bond act, and in addition to the exemption provided in subdivision (3) of section 1 of the supplement to the second Liberty bond act in respect to bonds issued upon conversion of 3½ per cent bonds, but shall be in lieu of the exemptions provided and free from the conditions and limitations imposed in subdivisions (1) and (2) of section 1 of the supplement to second Liberty bond act and in section 2 of the Victory Liberty loan act.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PLATT. At the end of section 6 insert a new paragraph as follows:

"(c) When Liberty bonds are held to maturity and paid by the Government, the holder of said bonds shall not be required to report as taxable income the difference between the par value of such bonds and the purchase price."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, when a purchaser of Liberty bonds below par, as they are at the present time, buys them and sells them again, the profit made on the sale should, of course, be included in his income. But if the purchaser of bonds holds them till maturity and the Government pays them—and that is what we want purchasers to do; we want to induce them if possible to hold these bonds to maturity—when the purchaser holds his bonds to maturity and the Government pays them, it seems to me there is no reason why the difference between the purchase price and the payment made by the Government should be considered as income. A good many people would not think of it as income, and probably would not return it, and the revenue agents would have no way of finding out whether it was included in income, but as a matter of fact under the law it is returnable as income.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Do I understand the gentleman to say that if a man buys Liberty bonds to-day, say, at 85 and holds them until maturity the profit ought not to be considered as income?

Mr. PLATT. If he holds them to maturity and the Government pays them, the Government loses nothing. It simply pays its obligations, and we want people to buy these bonds and hold them to maturity. I think the difference between the purchase price and the par value in such a case should not be considered as taxable income. At any rate it is a subject worth discussing.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, people in buying bonds to-day take into consideration the advance that they will receive if they hold the bonds until they become due.

Mr. PLATT. Exactly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And figure their rate of interest upon that whole basis.

Mr. PLATT. Exactly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And the gentleman's amendment is designed to do something toward keeping up the price of Liberty bonds.

Mr. PLATT. That is its sole purpose.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Ways and Means Committee has never done anything toward that.

Mr. PLATT. Not as far as I have ever heard. You will see in the financial tables showing the yield of the various Liberty bonds, if purchased at present prices, the gain between the present price and the maturity price. But that is not true of most purchases, because that tax has got to be taken out of it if the gain is reported as income.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Suppose you bought Liberty bonds at par and sold them at 82 to-day. In your tax return you have a right to deduct your losses from your profits; and if I buy those bonds, you do not want me taxed for whatever profit I make if I hold the bonds. What consideration do you give the Government in the way of getting taxes? The gentleman says the Ways and Means Committee has never done anything for the bonds. What has the Ways and Means Committee done that can be said to have contributed to the sale of Government bonds on the stock market to-day at 82? Nothing.

Mr. PLATT. What we want to do is to get people to buy these bonds and hold them to maturity.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; but when you give a man the right to deduct his losses if he sells the bonds at a less price than he paid for them, why should you not make the man pay taxes on the profit that he makes out of the man who sells the bonds to-day?

Mr. PLATT. If he holds them to maturity, the Government simply pays its obligations.

Mr. FORDNEY. Of course the Government expects to pay and will pay 100 cents on the dollar, and when you buy bonds to-day at 82 cents on the dollar you know that you will get 100 cents on the dollar if you keep them until maturity.

Mr. PLATT. Unless you pass such a provision as this, the lower the bonds go the more likely they are not to come back to par. The inducement to buy the bonds and hold them to maturity will tend to keep up the price.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not think the gentleman's amendment will help to maintain the stability of the bonds at all. The Congress of the United States voted $100,000,000 to the Secretary of the Treasury to buy bonds that were offered below par in order to stabilize the price of them, but it helped in no way whatever.

Mr. PLATT. There was not enough of it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Unless you bought all bonds offered for sale, it would not help, of course.

Mr. PLATT. This amendment of mine would help some.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not believe it would, but it would eucher the Government out of the tax it should receive on the profit made by the man who buys them at 82 and collects on them at 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is in violation of paragraph 3 of Rule XXI.

This paragraph, relating to the germaneness of amendments to revenue bills, is undoubtedly the most technical paragraph in the rules. It provides, in the case of bills affecting revenue, not only that the amendment must be germane to the subject matter of the bill, but it must directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed. I was unable to quite catch the significance of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, but I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that he offers his amendment to paragraph (b) of section 6, which relates only to exemptions of Liberty bonds. Clearly, it seems to me, his amendment is not germane to paragraph (b) of section 6, and I very much doubt its germaneness to the bill in any respect.

Mr. PLATT. The amendment is offered at the end of section 6, and makes a new paragraph.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask that the Clerk report the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PLATT: At the end of section 6 add a new paragraph, as follows:

"(b) When Liberty bonds are held to maturity and paid by the Government, the holder of said bonds shall not be required to report as taxable income the difference between the par value of such bonds and their purchase price."

Mr. LONGWORTH. This amendment is offered to paragraph (b) at the end of section 6. Paragraph (b) has no relation to the subject matter to which the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York relates.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is not offered as an amendment to paragraph (b), if the gentleman will pardon me. It is offered as a new paragraph.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He offers it at the end of paragraph (b).

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is offered as a new paragraph, and the only question is whether it is germane to the bill. It is not offered as an amendment to any paragraph.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman may be right about that. I make the point of order that it is not germane to the bill; that section 6, which relates to Liberty bonds, does not contain matter to which the amendment of the gentleman from New York is germane.

The Chair is familiar with the long line of decisions on paragraph 3, Rule XXI. It has been invariably construed by all occupants of the chair since the rule was put in force very strictly. The Chair will recall the decision of Judge Alexander, an eminent parliamentarian, who held that it was not in order to add a new item to a number of articles on the free list, and various Chairmen have construed the rule most strictly, as it was intended to be construed. I submit to the Chair that the amendment of the gentleman from New York is not germane.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the rule to which the gentleman from Ohio refers was put in the rules by a Democratic Congress for the purpose of being able to pass separate individual tariff bills.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Without a rule.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Without a rule, under which, it is true, it was intended that, with a very rank Chairman in the chair, he would rule that no amendment was in order unless offered on the Democratic side of the House. That became the practice for a time, and ranker decisions were never made in this House than were made under that rule. But this is not one of those bills. It is not a revenue bill; it is not a tariff bill. I do not think there is any provision here for raising revenue.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This rule relates to bills affecting revenue. Clearly this bill affects revenue.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It affects the administration of the laws relating to revenue.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that these decisions have been very technical, but nevertheless they are the precedents established by the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose it would be true that if we had a tariff bill under the same circumstances we would now follow the rank decisions of the Democratic side of the House, and maybe go them one better.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, section 6 has reference wholly to Liberty bonds and their exemption from taxation, and it would seem to me that the amendment I have offered is clearly germane to that and to the whole bill. Section 3 refers to "extraordinary income," and if a man purchases Liberty bonds to-day and holds them to maturity he would have the right under section 3 to allocate that profit back as extraordinary income. So it seems to me that the amendment is clearly germane to the bill, and I believe to the section where it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The rule invoked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] applies exclusively to measures affecting revenue and reads as follows:

No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter in the bill; nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

The Chair has before him a long line of precedents giving to the rule a strict and somewhat narrow construction. These precedents held that not only must the amendment be germane to the bill and paragraph but if offered as a new paragraph it must be germane to the next preceding paragraph. It does not devolve upon the Chair to pass on the question of the good faith or sincerity of those who establish these precedents. It is the duty of the Chair in the interest of the orderly procedure to follow the precedents when once set. It is very clear to the Chair that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not in order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 7, line 19, after the word "fixed" insert the words "by Congress or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 19, after the word "fixed" insert the words "by Congress or."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, it may be possible that the presidential proclamation fixing the termination of the war may not be forthcoming under the present administration, and it may also be possible that Congress may determine the date of the termination of the war. We have already, I think, passed legislation to do that. I do not know whether it has been signed or not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will yield, I was informed a moment ago that a document had been laid on the Speaker's table containing a disapproval of the act of Congress to which the gentleman refers. I am heartily in favor of the spirit in which the gentleman's amendment is offered——

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate the support of the gentleman from Ohio, and, of course, I know he feels as I do, that if the disapproval has been expressed by the action of the President heretofore taken in bringing peace to the country that Congress will unanimously override that disapproval at the first opportunity. I assume that that will be soon. But, irrespective of that, Mr. Chairman, I think in this particular paragraph relating to Liberty bonds exemption we ought to reserve the right to ourselves to be permitted in this particular case to fix the date of the termination of the war, and for that reason I have offered this amendment. I do not know whether the gentleman from Iowa objects or not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think it would change the situation at all.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, since none of us have the bill before us, that the Clerk read the entire sentence as it will read if amended, so that we will know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Until the expiration of two years after the date of the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government as fixed by Congress or by proclamation of the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were 47 ayes and 28 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do it because I desire to get some information from the chairman of the committee. I have been unable to secure a copy of the bill and have been unable to ascertain from the reading of the bill at the desk whether it exempts the original owners or purchasers of these bonds or is contemplated to exempt the present holders of the bonds from taxation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I fully understand the gentleman's question, but this applies to a surtax upon incomes, which is the only tax to which these bonds are subjected. That, of course, never applies to anyone except the one who holds the bonds at the time the tax is imposed.

Mr. SABATH. Does that exemption apply to the present holders of the bonds or only to the original holders or original purchasers?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To the present holders of the bonds. This does not go back and exempt the original holders from any taxes that they have paid.

Mr. SABATH. So that the people who have acquired these bonds at the low prices of 82, 83, and 84 will have the advantage and be exempt from taxation on these acquired bonds.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; the gentleman does not fully understand the bill.

Mr. SABATH. That is the reason I am asking the question. I would like to know.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This provision does not increase the total amount of exemptions. Under the law as it now stands the exemptions are allowed—so much for such an issue and under certain conditions, and so much for another issue and under certain conditions, and so on through, until it makes a very complex and complicated list. A man can hold as much as is provided for in this bill, namely, $125,000 in the aggregate amount of any issue, and for three years more $50,000. There might be a number of cases—not very many—where this would very slightly increase a man's exemption, but the Treasury Department estimated that the loss to the Government in revenue will amount to hardly anything. This is a simplification provision for the benefit of those holding different kinds of these bonds. Under this bill they would not have to be classified, so that a man can more easily make up his income-tax return with reference to Liberty bonds.

Mr. SABATH. Nevertheless, the people who have acquired these bonds for a low price, which they themselves have helped to bring down, will have the advantage of being able to claim exemption for these cheaply acquired bonds.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In a few instances it would slightly increase their exemptions, but if they selected out the proper issues they could hold the total amount provided for in this bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, there are some exemptions allowed now that will continue even if this be enacted into law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; this does not apply to the 3½ per cent bonds.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As I have never been able quite to understand the income-return form that has been sent to me, I ask for information. As I understand it, this exempts the income from $125,000 worth of 4 per cent and 4½ per cent bonds, no matter of what issue.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. For two years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And $50,000 for five years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman has qualified as an expert, and I desire to ask him now what authority the Treasury Department has for asking me or anyone else what my income is on 3½ per cent bonds.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, this does not apply——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know this does not; but what authority has the Treasury Department for doing that? Why do they impudently do that?

Mr. FORDNEY. Those bonds are exempt from taxation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then why should anybody be required to make a return upon them?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am unable to answer that question. It has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, but the gentleman qualified as an expert a while ago. He told me he knew all about the income tax, and I thought I would get that information.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAVIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14198, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLACK moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, with instructions to report it back forthwith with an amendment striking out section 3 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 26, nays 332, not voting 69, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present; the Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following:

"Resolved, That the Senate request a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate amendment numbered 93 to the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair, and that they be requested to, if possible, compromise the disagreement upon the said amendment upon substantially the following basis:

"In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert:

"'For the purchase, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, $75,000. Said seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall be sent only to such persons as shall make request therefor: Provided, That all such requests made of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, if transmitted to the Department of Agriculture, shall be complied with by said department.'"

That the Vice President had appointed Mr. GRONNA, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. GORE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the sundry civil appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GOOD. In this connection I wish to say that I have conferred with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], the ranking minority member, and this request is agreeable to him.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a very important amendment, I understand, was added in the Senate bill, Senate amendment No. 44, providing for an appropriation of $4,000,000 plus for transportation facilities on the inland and coastwise waterways as provided in the transportation act. I would like to have some assurance from the gentleman before this request is granted that the House conferees will give the House an opportunity to express its views on that amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I may say in that connection that that request and the estimate for the appropriation was made after the House had concluded the hearings and had acted on the bill. It was overlooked after the Congress adopted the transportation act providing for the operation on inland waterways of the vessels that had been purchased for the New York State Barge Canal, the Warrior section of Mississippi, and the Mississippi River. Now, these estimates came in after we had acted upon those matters, but for the rest of the year there is an estimate of $300,000, and the deficiency committee is reporting out the amount necessary to carry on that operation for the remainder of the year. I have not talked with the other gentlemen on the committee, but Congress having provided by law that the War Department shall carry on this service, of course we must appropriate the money for it. Now, how much is necessary I do not know. I have not examined the estimates or the Senate hearings. I know in a general way, and I know there must be some appropriation for the service. In matters of that kind I do not believe the conferees ought to go into conference in such a way that they can not enter freely into every matter in dispute. I will say to the gentleman, so far as I am personally concerned, I do not see how we could avoid agreeing to an appropriation sufficiently large to carry on that service. It is an experiment, and the experiment on inland waterways, I think, is going to be made under that appropriation, and the money ought to be sufficient, so that no one can say we have not given the inland waterways a fair chance to demonstrate what can be done in the movement of freight on our inland rivers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, with the expression of those views by the chairman of the committee, I will not resist the unanimous consent.

Mr. CLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that it is well known to a good many Members here that the State of New York is not willing that the Government shall operate any longer upon its canals. The New York Chamber of Commerce and the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, of which I happen to be vice president, and all the other commercial bodies throughout the State want the Government to get off the canals, so far as their operation is concerned, because they say that various companies had intended starting to put on boats on the just completed barge canal, but while the Government operates on it those individuals can not be induced to put their money in it. We had a hearing the other day, and Gen. Hines stated that the Government had lost $166,000, I believe, this last year in operating on it. That being the case, it illustrates to individual capitalists and small corporations that it can not afford to compete with the Government operation; and the Government does not need the canal at all. It was given freely to it by the State, that spent $200,000,000 upon the building and improvement of it, during the war; but the war is over. There is no use for the Government to operate it now, and inasmuch as it operates it only at a loss to itself and a loss to the people, why should the operation continue?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that is a legislative matter.

Mr. CLEARY. I know; but I wanted to educate these people present, who might not know, a little bit concerning it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The proposition is not involved in this Senate amendment, is it?

Mr. GOOD. No; it is not involved in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. GOOD, Mr. VARE, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

NATIONAL DEFENSE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted a conference report on the bill (H. R. 12775) to amend an act entitled "An act making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, for printing under the rule.

VETO OF PEACE RESOLUTION (H. J. RES. 327).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return, without my signature, House joint resolution 327, intended to repeal the joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany, and the joint resolution of December 7, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and the Austro-Hungarian Government, and to declare a state of peace. I have not felt at liberty to sign this joint resolution because I can not bring myself to become party to an action which would place an ineffaceable stain upon the gallantry and honor of the United States. The resolution seeks to establish peace with the German Empire without exacting from the German Government any action by way of setting right the infinite wrongs which it did to the peoples whom it attacked and whom we professed it our purpose to assist when we entered the war. Have we sacrificed the lives of more than 100,000 Americans and ruined the lives of thousands of others and brought upon thousands of American families an unhappiness that can never end for purposes which we do not now care to state or take further steps to attain? The attainment of these purposes is provided for in the treaty of Versailles by terms deemed adequate by the leading statesmen and experts of all the great peoples who were associated in the war against Germany. Do we now not care to join in the effort to save them?

We entered the war most reluctantly. Our people were profoundly disinclined to take part in a European war, and at last did so only because they became convinced that it could not in truth be regarded as only a European war, but must be regarded as a war in which civilization itself was involved and human rights of every kind as against a belligerent government. Moreover, when we entered the war we set forth very definitely the purposes for which we entered, partly because we did not wish to be considered as merely taking part in a European contest. This joint resolution which I return does not seek to accomplish any of these objects, but in effect makes a complete surrender of the rights of the United States so far as the German Government is concerned. A treaty of peace was signed at Versailles on the 28th of June last which did seek to accomplish the objects which we had declared to be in our minds, because all the great Governments and peoples which united against Germany had adopted our declarations of purpose as their own and had in solemn form embodied them in communications to the German Government preliminary to the armistice of November 11, 1918. But the treaty as signed at Versailles has been rejected by the Senate of the United States, though it has been ratified by Germany. By that rejection and by its method we have in effect declared that we wish to draw apart and pursue objects and interests of our own, unhampered by any connections of interest or of purpose with other Governments and peoples.

Notwithstanding the fact that upon our entrance into the war we professed to be seeking to assist in the maintenance of common interests, nothing is said in this resolution about the freedom of navigation upon the seas, or the reduction of armaments, or the vindication of the rights of Belgium, or the rectification of wrongs done to France, or the release of the Christian populations of the Ottoman Empire from the intolerable subjugation which they have had for so many generations to endure, or the establishment of an independent Polish State, or the continued maintenance of any kind of understanding among the great powers of the world which would be calculated to prevent in the future such outrages as Germany attempted and in part consummated. We have now in effect declared that we do not care to take any further risks or to assume any further responsibilities with regard to the freedom of nations or the sacredness of international obligation or the safety of independent peoples. Such a peace with Germany—a peace in which none of the essential interests which we had at heart when we entered the war is safeguarded—is, or ought to be, inconceivable, is inconsistent with the dignity of the United States, with the rights and liberties of her citizens, and with the very fundamental conditions of civilization.

I hope that in these statements I have sufficiently set forth the reasons why I have felt it incumbent upon me to withhold my signature.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
27 May, 1920.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to postpone action on the message of the President until to-morrow and that it shall be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to suspend further action on the message until to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I object to its being postponed. We should take action now.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER].

The motion was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 11960, the Consular and Diplomatic appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a conference report on a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill H. R. 11960, making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The conference report was read.

[For conference report see House proceedings of May 25, 1920, p. 7604.]

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I have just one observation that I want to make on this conference report. The House by its rejection of the previous conference report on this same bill made it requisite for your conferees to insist on the elimination of the compulsory passport features. The impression may very easily go abroad, I think, that word having been carried in the press of the country, that the action taken by your conferees as a result of the vote of the House the other day frees an American traveler from the necessity of supplying himself with a passport before he leaves this country for trans-Atlantic, trans-Pacific, or South American ports. It is one of our functions to try to assist our constituents to get passports if and when they are needed. I think the membership of this House ought to understand very definitely that this action of the House to-day, assuming it accepts the conference report, in no way eliminates the present requirement that American travelers going abroad shall bear passports with them.

In the first place the present emergency legislation, the war legislation, approved May 22, 1918, continues in effect as long as the United States is technically at war. Under that law, the taking out of passports is absolutely compulsory until a peace treaty or a peace resolution becomes effective, unless the President shall by proclamation decree otherwise. But there is the further point that we must bear in mind, that even though the American Government does not require, after a status of peace returns, the taking out of a passport, conditions and regulations in Europe will be such for a good many years, in the opinion of competent judges, that it will not be safe for an American citizen, irrespective of what our law says, to go abroad without a passport.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is there a requirement under the extension of the passport law that a citizen of the United States must now have a passport?

Mr. ROGERS. It is requisite that he shall have a passport now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He does not need to have one, but he should have one. The intention of the law is that aliens entering this country must have a passport?

Mr. ROGERS. It is the contemplation of the present law that American citizens shall have a passport. But the passport extension statute which became effective October 29 last, and which relieved American citizens from the requirement, does not become operative until the treaty of peace comes into effect by the proclamation of the President. As, by its terms, its life is limited to March 4 next, it seems probable that it will never become an actual factor in the situation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman to just straighten out the situation. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] asks a question and states one case, and the gentleman from Massachusetts states the other. The law which expires on March 4, 1921, makes it necessary, does it not, for an American citizen, before he goes abroad, to have a passport?

Mr. ROGERS. It is not made mandatory by the present law, but it depends on the decision of the President, under the terms of that law, as to whether the "public safety" requires the taking out by American citizens of passports. The President's original proclamation to this effect has never been abrogated. As I have just said, the extension law, if it ever comes into effect, relieves Americans, so far as our domestic law can do it, of the necessity. The State Department regards it as essential, and, so far as I know, there is no exception to the rule to-day that American travelers going forth must equip themselves with American passports.

Mr. WALSH. So that that law does apply to an American citizen leaving the country as well as aliens coming here?

Mr. ROGERS. It does.

What I wanted to do, Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House, was to put in the RECORD a summary of the requirements of the other nations of the world as to passports and as to travelers from other countries within their boundaries. I have here a pamphlet prepared last September which showed the requirements of passports in other countries as of that time. I have also a memorandum which was prepared for me this week which brings the situation up to date. It is rather interesting to note that the tendency of European, Asiatic, and South American countries to-day is to make much more rigid their requirements as to passports rather than to ameliorate them, as one would suppose natural in view of the fact that so much time has elapsed since the war.

Mr. ROGERS subsequently secured unanimous consent to extend his remarks by incorporating the data referred to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I print the passport regulations of September 3, 1919, and a supplementary memorandum, dated May 19, 1920:

DIRECTIONS CONCERNING THE USE OF PASSPORTS.

I. SIGNATURE OF PASSPORT.

A person to whom a passport is issued should affix his signature thereon, in the space designated, immediately upon its receipt.

II. VISÉ OF PASSPORTS.

Passports of American citizens must, before the holder's departure from the United States, be viséed for entry into the following-named countries by diplomatic or consular officers thereof stationed in the United States: Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, British Empire, Chile, China, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Italy, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Persia, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Serbia, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland.

III. SPECIAL REGULATIONS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Upon arrival in European countries, persons may obtain information in regard to registration, etc., from the local authorities directly or through the nearest American consulate.

(The information given below is believed to be correct. For further and more authentic information it is necessary to apply to diplomatic or consular representatives of those countries. This is especially important in cases of naturalized American citizens and persons born in this country of foreign-born parents when such persons propose to visit countries in which they or their parents were born.)

Belgium: Persons going to Belgium must have their passports viséed by a diplomatic or consular official in this country.

Persons desirous of entering the Katanga, Belgium Congo, must be in possession of either a contract of service in the territory for not less than a period of three months with a bona fide business firm or a sum of 1,500 francs.

British Empire: A person going to British territory accompanied by his wife and minor children may have his family included in his passport, but a photograph of each member of his family over 14 years of age must be attached to his passport.

Persons over 15 years of age desiring to visit India, Australia, New Zealand, or Straits Settlements are required to produce separate passports viséed by British diplomatic or consular officers.

Visés for persons traveling to Australia may be secured from the Canadian commissioner of immigration at Vancouver or Victoria.

Passports are not required in Canada, but native American citizens going to Canada should carry documentary evidence of their birth in the United States with them, and naturalized citizens should carry their naturalization certificates.

Passports are required in Newfoundland.

Persons intending to go to British colonies or dependencies as missionaries should make application to the British embassy at Washington for permission to enter such territories. Their requests for visés should be made after their applications are approved.

Czechoslovakia: Persons going to Czechoslovakia must have their passports viséed by the consul of Czechoslovakia in New York City.

Finland: Persons going to Finland must have their passports viséed by the diplomatic officer of Finland in Washington, D. C.

Greece: Persons going to Greece must have their passports viséed by a consular officer of that country.

Italy: Under Italian regulations, each person over 16 years of age entering Italy must hold a separate viséed passport.

Norway: All persons above 12 years of age should have separate viséed passports. Norwegian regulations require that persons arriving in Norway shall at once report personally to the police in the district where the frontier is crossed, or Norwegian territory is first entered.

Persia: Passports will be viséed by the Persian consul general at New York City.

Peru: Each person over 12 years of age must hold a separate viséed passport.

Poland: Persons going to Poland must have their passports viséed by the consul general of Poland in New York City.

Portugal: Passports will be viséed by a Portuguese diplomatic or consular officer, preferably the Portuguese consul general in New York City.

Roumania: Persons going to Roumania must have their passports viséed by the Roumanian consul in New York City or Chicago, Ill.

Russia: Persons going to Russia must have their passports viséed by a Russian consular officer preferably in the United States, at San Francisco, Chicago, or New York City. Russian regulations require that the photographs of all persons included in a passport who are over 10 years of age, appear thereon.

Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes: Persons going to the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes must have their passports viséed by the consul general of that country in New York, or by a diplomatic or consular officer of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes in some foreign country.

Spain: Each person over 14 years of age must hold a separate viséed passport.

Sweden: Persons traveling to Sweden must obtain a visé by a Swedish consular representative in the United States before leaving this country. They should not, in case they intend to travel on a Norwegian or Danish steamer, postpone this formality until they arrive in Norway or Denmark.

Each person over 12 years of age must hold a separate viséed passport.

Switzerland: Formal application for visé must be made in person before a diplomatic or consular officer of Switzerland.

The Netherlands: An American intending to visit the Netherlands should apply for the visé of his passport to the nearest diplomatic or consular officer of that country. The application should be made a considerable time in advance of the intended journey.

All aliens arriving in Holland are required to present themselves in person, within 24 hours after arrival, before the chief of police or the official designated by him, at the place of entry or the place where the first night is spent.

IV. COUNTRIES TO BE NAMED IN PASSPORTS.

A passport should include the names of all countries which it is necessary for the applicant to visit, or which the applicant must pass through on his way to the country to be visited, and should be accompanied by evidence showing the necessity of the proposed visits.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 3, 1919.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
DIVISION OF PASSPORT CONTROL,
May 19, 1920.

Memorandum.

In response to your request for information regarding the visaing of American passports, there is attached the department's print of September 3, 1919, showing the requirements as then known to the department. Since then numerous changes have been made, mainly with a view to putting additional restrictions or safeguards around the entrance of Americans into foreign countries. I will list the countries below in their alphabetical order and give a brief synopsis of the requirements in each country:

Argentina: In addition to the passport, two certificates issued by competent local authorities must be presented to the consul of whom the visa is requested; first, that the applicant has not been subjected to punishment for crimes entailing dishonorable penalties during the past five years; second, that his health and mental condition are and have been good, and that he has not been a mendicant. This applies to first, second, and third class passengers.

Colombia: Now requires a visa.

British Empire: Persons going to the British Isles to obtain or accept employment must secure, directly or through their employers, a labor permit from the British Ministry of Labor.

France: The visa must now be secured from a French representative whose jurisdiction includes the applicant's place of residence. Also, commercial travelers must secure a professional identification card from the consul who gives the visa. These cards must be renewed annually.

Occupied territories: Persons going to places which are temporarily occupied by the military or civil representatives of some other government must secure, in addition to the usual visa, a visa from a consular representative of the occupying nation.

Peru: Upon landing a foreigner must register with the police.

Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes: In urgent cases permission to grant a visa may be obtained by cable through the consul general in New York City of the kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes. The cablegram is sent to the minister of foreign affairs at Belgrade. If the cable is not used, at the expense of the applicant, he must await his reply through the mail.

Sweden: It was understood that rule regarding separate passports for persons over 12 years of age had been relaxed, but recent telegraphic communications indicate that this is, if anything, more necessary now than ever, because of the police regulations in that country.

The Netherlands: Persons who desire that authority for a visa be secured by cable may do so by paying the necessary cable charges; otherwise, they must await a mail reply.

Venezuela: Now requires a visa.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Ohio withhold his point of no quorum while I secure unanimous consent to extend my remarks?

The SPEAKER (after counting). One hundred and eleven Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-six Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to dispense with further proceedings under the rule. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14197.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14197, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14197) to amend the personal service corporation provisions of the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I would like to see if we can arrange about the time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] will remember that on the previous bill I gave him three-quarters of an hour and reserved 15 minutes myself. Will it be agreeable to the gentleman to reciprocate?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will reciprocate the gentleman's courtesy.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to 1 hour, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] and 45 minutes by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the debate be limited to 1 hour, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] and 45 minutes by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. MURPHY. I object.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask for a vote on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory. I think no business has intervened since the last roll call.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, yes; we have had a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that other business has intervened. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-two Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I move a call of the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is not necessary. The vote comes in the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is an automatic roll call. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 315, nays 13, answered "present" 5, not voting 94, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CRAMTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14197) to amend the personal service corporation provisions of the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 201 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 201. (a) That the term 'dividend' when used in this title (except in paragraph (10) of subdivision (a) of section 234) means (1) any distribution made by a corporation to its shareholders or members, whether in cash or in other property, out of its earnings or profits accumulated since Febuary 28, 1913.

"(b) Any distribution shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits unless all earnings and profits have first been distributed. Any distribution made in the year 1918 or any year thereafter shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913; but any earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, may be distributed, exempt from the tax, after the earnings and profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, have been distributed.

"(c) A dividend paid in stock of the corporation (hereinafter called 'stock dividend') shall not be subject to tax at the time of distribution. Amounts bona fide distributed in the liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as payments in exchange for stock or shares, and any gain or profit realized thereby shall be taxed to the distributee as other gains or profits.

"(d) A distribution shall be deemed to have been made by a corporation to its stockholders or members as of the date when the cash or other property is distributed or set apart for or credited to the account of such stockholders or members as to be unqualifiedly subject to their immediate demands, and shall be taxed to such stockholders or members as of the date of such distribution.

"(e) For the purpose of computing the invested capital of a corporation, dividends distributed by such corporation during the first 60 days of any taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated during preceding taxable years; but any distribution made during the remainder of the taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated between the close of the preceding taxable year and the date of distribution, to the extent of such earnings or profits; and if the books of the corporation do not show the amount of such earnings or profits, the earnings or profits for the accounting period within which the distribution was made shall be deemed to have been accumulated ratably during such period."

SEC. 2. That section 205 of such act is amended as follows:

(1) In the first paragraph of subdivision (a) strike out the colon and the following:

"Provided, That in the case of a personal service corporation the amount to be paid shall be only that specified in clause (1)."

(2) In the second paragraph of subdivision (a) strike out the words "or, in the case of a personal service corporation, the amount specified in clause (1)" and the comma.

(3) In subdivision (c) strike out the colon and the following:

"Provided, That in the case of a personal service corporation with respect to a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, the amount specified in clause (1) shall not be subject to normal tax."

SEC. 3. That subdivision (a) of section 216 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The amount received as dividends from a corporation which is taxable under this title upon its net income;"

SEC. 4. That subdivision (e) of section 218 of such act is repealed.

SEC. 5. That paragraph 14 of section 231 of such act is repealed.

SEC. 6. That paragraph 6 of subdivision (a) of section 234 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(6) Amounts received as dividends from a corporation which is taxable under this title upon its net income;"

SEC. 7. That section 301 of the revenue act of 1918 is hereby amended—

(1) By inserting after the word "corporation" in subdivision (a) the words "(except a personal service corporation)";

(2) By inserting after the word "except" in subdivision (b) the words "personal service corporations and"; and

(3) By inserting after the word "corporation" in subdivision (c) the words "(except a personal service corporation)."

SEC. 8. That section 335 of such act is amended as follows:

(1) In subdivision (a) strike out the following: "(other than a personal service corporation)."

(2) In the first paragraph of subdivision (c) strike out the words "or a personal service corporation."

(3) In the second paragraph of subdivision (c) strike out the words "or personal service corporation" and the words "or corporation."

SEC. 9. That in addition to all other taxes, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the taxable year 1920 upon the net income of every personal service corporation received or accrued during the taxable years 1918 and 1919 a tax equal to the tax that would have been paid had such corporation been subject to the taxes imposed by section 230 of the revenue act of 1918 for such years.

SEC. 10. (a) That in addition to all other taxes and in addition to the tax imposed by section 9 there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the taxable year 1920 upon the net income of every personal service corporation a tax equal to the sum of (1) 30 per cent of the amount of the net income of such corporation for the taxable year 1918 in excess of the dividend credit (determined under paragraph (c) of this section) and (2) 20 per cent of the amount of the net income of such corporation for the taxable year 1919 in excess of the dividend credit determined under paragraph (c) of this section.

(b) For the taxable year 1920 and each taxable year thereafter shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every personal service corporation a tax equal to 20 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the dividend credit determined under paragraph (c) of this section.

(c) The dividend credit shall consist of a specific exemption of $3,000 plus the amount by which the dividend distributed by the corporation to its stockholders or members during the taxable year exceeds the dividends deducted under the provisions of section 234 of the revenue act of 1918.

A foreign corporation shall not be entitled to the specific exemption of $3,000.

(d) Any personal service corporation that elects to pay taxes for the taxable years 1918 and 1919 under the provisions of the revenue act of 1918 as provided in section 11 of this act shall not be subject to the taxes imposed by section 9 or subdivision (a) of this section nor shall it be required to make return in respect to such taxes.

SEC. 11. That the taxes imposed by sections 9 and 10 shall be returned, assessed, collected, and paid, upon the same basis, in the same manner, and subject to the same provisions of law, including penalties, as the taxes imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1918.

The taxes imposed for the taxable year 1920 shall be returned, assessed, collected, and paid at the time provided in Title II of the revenue act of 1918 for the return and payment of income taxes for the taxable year 1920; and the tax imposed for the taxable year 1921 and each taxable year thereafter shall be returned, assessed, collected, and paid at the time provided in Title II of the revenue act of 1918 for the return and payment of income taxes for the taxable year 1921 and each taxable year thereafter.

All terms used in sections 9, 10, and 11 of this act shall have the same meaning as the like terms used in the revenue act of 1918.

SEC. 12. That the stockholders of any personal service corporation in existence in the taxable year 1918 or 1919, by a written agreement between the directors of the corporation and all the stockholders thereof, may for such years elect to be taxed under the provisions of the revenue act of 1918 in effect prior to the time this act takes effect; and in the case of any personal service corporation the stockholders and the directors of which have made such election, any distribution made hereafter from earnings or profits accumulated during the calendar years 1918 and 1919 shall be exempt from the tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1918: Provided further, That such directors and stockholders shall be deemed to have made such agreement and election unless within 90 days after the time this act takes effect one or more of them shall have notified the commissioner in writing that he rejects such agreement and election.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall mail to all personal service corporations at the last known address a copy of this act within 30 days after the same takes effect.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak for just a few minutes on a subject that I think is of vital interest to every Member of this House, especially if he comes from a manufacturing district. From all parts of this country at the present time telegrams and letters are arriving showing that there is a shortage of coal, and unless this situation is met in a courageous way many industries will be closed down and thousands of men thrown out of work.

I want to call the attention of the Members of this House to the fact that with this shortage of coal and the possibilities of industries being closed down, and thousands thrown out of work at this particular time, with rising prices which makes it difficult for the laboring man to support his family, we shipped out of this country in January, February, and March of this year an average of 500,000 tons of bituminous coal each month. In the month of April we shipped out of this country 750,000 tons. I am informed from an authentic source that we will have shipped out at the end of this month to foreign countries 1,000,000 tons of coal.

It is a well-known fact that New England depends for its coal supply very largely on coal shipped by water from southern ports. In this connection I have been informed that these coal fleets are held for days awaiting a cargo of coal, while ships destined for foreign ports apply at the same ports, receive their cargo of coal, and put to sea. The situation has developed that New England is now almost entirely dependent for its supply of coal on rail shipments, which makes an excessive demand on railroad transportation facilities.

In my own district thousands of men may be thrown out of employment unless there is some regulation or an embargo to protect essential industries from this threatened coal shortage. I feel that the Members of this House should give some study to this question, and, if necessary, see that there is an embargo placed on coal. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not accustomed to noticing editorials that reflect upon the membership of the House in a general way, but it seems to me that a condition has arisen which calls for a protest on the part of the membership on both sides of the aisle, and I wish to voice it for a moment.

It relates to one of the morning papers, the Washington Post, and an evening paper, the Star, which persistently reflect upon what is known as the soldiers' compensation bill, and upon those who favor that bill. I do not care particularly so far as the papers are concerned, or for their editorials, but when at the other end of the Capitol Senators rise in their places and insert those offensive editorials reflecting on the House and upon the Ways and Means Committee, as they have done, and then proceed to discuss the matter and say how they intend to oppose this bill over there and the papers then turn round approvingly with fulsome praise, I believe we owe it to the dignity of the House to protest against that procedure. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's argument is in violation of the rules of the House with respect to criticizing the action of another body.

Mr. FREAR. I ask the Chairman to rule on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is familiar with the rule that forbids criticism in this Chamber of another body. The Chair is not prepared to state whether the gentleman is violating the rule or not, but the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, it is clear that if the contention of the gentleman was allowed it would refuse to permit us to question the falsity of editorials inserted by Senators——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order that it is a criticism on Members of another body and brings forth crimination and recrimination, and I think it is a violaton of the rules of the House. While I am in sympathy with what the gentleman says, and would like to get up and say what I say in west Texas about it——

Mr. KING. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Texas is not in order. He has not the floor.

Mr. LANGLEY. The rule is violated every day in the House. Why did the gentleman from Texas make the point of order if he is in sympathy with what the gentleman from Wisconsin says?

Mr. BLANTON. I made the point of order; I have the floor, and I have not given it over to the gentleman from Illinois. I ask the Chair to rule whether the gentleman from Wisconsin can criticize another legislative body.

Mr. FREAR. That is not the question at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin does not involve a criticism of the Senate, and the Chair is not prepared to rule that he is proceeding out of order.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I think we ought to have a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-five Members present, a quorum, and the gentleman from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I again repeat that no legislative body in this country has a right to publish scurrilous editorials in a printed record of its proceedings. It is a cheap method of notoriety that is not creditable to any of the parties engaged and seeks to do by indirection what is otherwise improper. That has been done time and time again, day after day, and it seems to me it is time for the House to resent it. That is the reason I speak at this time. I have an article which appeared in the Washington Post of this morning. Of course it contains falsehoods that they must know are not true. The editorial says that this bill is to be a raid on the Treasury. There is no such possibility for that statement to be made under the bill, and if they know the provisions of the bill as it is and as it was discussed yesterday they know that there can be no raid on the Treasury. Next, the Post editorial says the bonus proposition is used by the politicians for getting votes. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared at this time to say whether the publisher of the Washington Post is directly responsible for these frequent editorials, but I would like to know how the bill, if it passes, will affect that publisher, who, I understand, is many times a millionaire. I am willing to disclose to the House the personal interest such men have in preventing this legislation if motives of Congress are to be impugned by these editorial writers. The Washington Evening Star constantly assails Congress because of its attitude on the 50-50 tax proposition. Its frequent strictures on Congress and the soldiers' bill editorially are known to Members. I would like to know how much under this proposed bill the owner of the Star would be required to pay? I understand he, too, is a very wealthy man, whose criticisms of Congress are familiar.

Are these wealthy gentlemen who are publishers of these newspapers, and who are issuing these editorials, or directing their issuance, are these men the ones who have the right to say to Congress, "You gentlemen are politicians, because you endeavor to pass a soldiers' aid bill," which we believe is right. Let us see what the legislative position is: On February 26, over three months ago, you gentlemen on the Democratic side, as well as upon the Republican side, unanimously, by a vote of nearly 300 Members, requested the Committee on Ways and Means to take up the consideration of all soldiers' bills. Surely you expected us to do something, otherwise your action was hypocritical.

We have worked upon these bills as a committee faithfully. We have reported this bill and have been waiting to be heard for two or three weeks. We secured what we believe is the best bill that we can get out of the committee. I would like to have had it different, but it is far better than if the bill had been burdened with a sales tax, as was first proposed. It provides what? First, a method of taxation covering a period of three years, which reaches expensive cigars, with an increase of 15 per cent on certain tobacco. It exacts $5 on every $1,000 of all real estate transfers. It reaches incomes of over $26,000, and adds to the present rate 3 per cent with a small increase below that amount. It does not touch widows and orphans or the average man, because they are not engaged in stock gambling, which it also affects. It reaches Members of Congress with a small increased tax, and it is right that they should be reached, and what is it all for? To provide some little recognition for the boys who were in the service, whom you gentlemen sent to war. You took them away from their homes all over this country. You broke up thousands and hundreds of thousands of homes, and hundreds of thousands of jobs were lost to these men by your action when you sent them to war. This is just a little recognition of their services. These boys went over there and won the war for us. They saved to the millionaires, who are constantly complaining about this soldiers' bill, they saved their money from German indemnity. [Applause.] That is what these young soldiers did. Why not call a spade a spade. We know the opposition that is behind this bill, and it is because of the tax features that reach these gentlemen and their interests, and this is the situation that arises here to-day. Let us get out into the limelight these men who talk of "commercializing patriotism." Let me say to you gentlemen, do not think for a moment, do not make a mistake as to what you are doing. Forty men or thereabouts are holding up this legislation on the Republican side, as I understand it. It was so stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] yesterday. One hundred and fifty-four men on this side of the Chamber voted in conference in favor of bringing out the bill and acting on it, and 44 voted against it. You now say you will not let us vote on this proposition. Well and good, but we will let the people know that you refuse to let us vote on it, and we propose to give them the true situation. [Applause.]

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. No; I can not yield. The situation is pathetic. Here are soldier boys who gave the best that was in them over there in Europe along the battle line and in the camps at $30 a month, and you begrudge them anything, excepting those who are crippled, and, by the way, the maimed and crippled are included under the terms of this bill. What were you getting during this same time? You refuse in a narrow, selfish spirit to permit a vote—and I do not speak of anyone personally; I refer to the men who say that we can not vote upon it. I do not object to the men who disagree with me on this bill. You have a right to oppose it if you want to. That is all right, but let us have a vote upon it and come out from under cover. Let the men who will not vote for the bill stand forth on their own responsibility. We are tired of these tactics and are equally tired of the owners of these newspapers constantly insulting Congress by impugning our motives. It is an insult to say that we want to pass this bill because we are politically interested. We believe it to be right, and I am equally ready to place in the light the motives of men who favor this bill and the motives of these wealthy newspaper publishers who oppose it.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. REAVIS. It is known to the gentleman as chairman of one of the investigating committees that hundreds of millions of dollars have been taken from the Treasury of the United States immorally and unlawfully while these boys were fighting for these same institutions. Has the gentleman ever seen any protest from the Washington Post against that kind of a raid on the Treasury?

Mr. FREAR. No; none of these papers will make public such facts. And let me say to the gentleman that in last night's Times there was an article stating that the Government has been defrauded out of $9,000,000 because of the refusal of the Crucible Steel Co. to pay its correct income tax. Why was there not an editorial about that in the Post or Star? Men who do such things as that are criminals. They were prosecuted, and $9,000,000 was paid into the Treasury. They were prosecuted. Not a word editorially about that. If it had been a common thief or a small hold-up on the streets, these papers would have been aroused; but not over a $9,000,000 hold-up of the Government by a steel company. Why not a word in regard to the railroad money that we have spent here, hundreds of millions of dollars that we have given? We have taken it out of the Treasury and turned it over to the railways. This soldiers' bill does not take a dollar out of the Treasury. It is a tax to be collected from men of wealth, able to pay. Why not a word about the hundreds of millions of dollars that we are taking from the Public Treasury and are spending for civil employees of the Government in bonuses—and I do not object to that, for the purpose of argument—but why not a word in regard to it by these wealthy newspaper publishers who are so wrought up about this soldiers' aid bill which they will have to contribute to when the tax collector comes around?

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I can not yield.

Mr. JUUL. Oh, for a brief question.

Mr. FREAR. What does the gentleman want to ask?

Mr. JUUL. I want to find out if these gentlemen you speak about as being opposed to the soldiers are also opposed to the fifty-fifty proposition.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, yes; as a rule. Pages of their papers are given over to abuse of Congress, because we believe the District should pay what we believe to be a fair share of the tax.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I can not yield. I have not the time. Get your own time, because I know what your attitude will be.

Mr. PELL. Exactly, but the gentleman does not want to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FREAR. Get your own time and explain your opposition. Let your people pass upon your own vote and conduct. All I ask is the right to vote on this bill for this House, and you ought to give it to us without further delay. I was asked yesterday, "Do you not know that your committee was expected to put this soldiers' bill to sleep?" My God! Gentlemen, was that the disposition of you gentlemen, was that your purpose, to put it over on us and have us do your gag work? We never so understood it. We thought you were in earnest, and we brought out the best bill that we could, and we are going to vote upon it before we get through. We want to vote upon it and want you to vote upon it, too, and I ask you gentlemen not to vote for adjournment of this Congress until we have had a chance to vote on the merits of this soldiers' compensation bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to be recognized in debate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not entitled to be recognized. I have control of one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] has already been recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I think the time has come when we should talk plainly with one another about this matter. Those of us who favor what is called the "bonus bill" have been expecting a vote on that matter for days, weeks, and months.

A year ago on Decoration Day I discussed the matter. I had the pleasure of urging then that the soldier ought to be made useful to talk about on some other days besides Decoration Day. This matter has been carried along until those who favor it, knowing that they are in the majority on both sides of the Chamber, feel that we are being chloroformed and cheated by not being allowed to vote upon the question. So far as I am concerned, I think it is very, very unfair.

There has not been a single bill brought in here to take care of the contractors, whether they had a written contract or not, for which you have not passed unlimited appropriations to make good everything they lost by reason of any breach of contract on the part of the Government of the United States by reason of the closing of the war. Billions of dollars you have given to the railroad companies. Some of you gentlemen have said here you wanted to take the American soldier and put him on a pedestal. Not one of you has talked about putting the railroad companies on a pedestal. The soldiers want potatoes and not pedestals. As a matter of fact, gentlemen, the majority of this House, like all the people, are willing to give to the American soldier a fair amount of money to equalize the losses made by him by reason of being conscripted and taken away from his job worth eight to ten dollars a day to work for a dollar a day across the water.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. No; I can not yield to anybody. My time is about up.

Mr. LANGLEY. For only one short question.

Mr. MASON. Go ahead, Brother LANGLEY, but make it short.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have before me the RECORD of day before yesterday, in which a Member of another body said:

> I protest against the spirit of this telegram and the spirit of this bonus bill in its entirety as a mercenary degradation of an unsullied patriotism.

And, again, he said a few moments later:

> If the American Legion is inspired by no greater purpose than to loot the American Treasury, it is an unworthy organization, and I could wish it were never created. I have met the perverted power of as great an organization as this in my own State and elsewhere.

What does the gentleman think about such an outrageous insult as that to the American Legion and to our soldier boys in general?

Mr. MASON. Of course, I can not agree to that. As a matter of fact, we drafted the most of these boys and compelled them to go. You passed a law here and they had to go. Now, when you drafted the railroad companies you put them back on the track, you gave them exactly as good as they had, and you went further with that bill you passed later to guarantee an income on their stock. Now, why can not you afford to give to the boys something to equalize them? Do not tell me that that is mercenary; do not tell me it is lack of patriotism. I know we have got Members of another body and some of the American Legion who say they do not want it. There is nothing in this bill that compels the soldier to take it if he does not want it, but he ought not to be a dog in the manger. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I have due regard for those who must bear the burden and I wish I were able to bear more of it than I am to help those who will accept it, because they need it, but I want to say that I heartily agree with the patriotic sentiments expressed by my distinguished friend from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for three additional minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Make it short.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I agree with many of the things my colleague is saying. Will my colleague join in an effort to make the war profiteer pay this bonus rather than the farmer?

Mr. MASON. Yes; I will join the gentleman in making anybody pay, but I do not want to be led in this way. [Applause on the Republican side.] I do not want that proposition of my colleague from Illinois, for whom I have the greatest respect, to be lugged in here to be used not to pass this bill but to defeat it. [Applause.] I want fair play. [Applause.] I am willing to vote to have your Attorney General bring suit against Barney Baruch, the chief man, the closest man to the President of the United States, who stole $50,000,000 in copper alone. [Applause on the Republican side.] What is the use of putting that in your bill? What I am afraid of is that you are offering it not to help the soldiers, but to help to defeat the legislation that the soldiers want; and I give notice—let us have the bill up—I give notice to gentlemen on this side of the House unless we can have some arrangement made to-morrow for ordering the previous question or suspending the rules I shall use what little power I have to stop all legislation in this body until you give us a fair chance to vote. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. And I tender my services to the gentleman to that end, if I can be of any help.

Mr. MASON. If you people who are opposed to this legislation can keep a quorum here, you will have to keep it here. I have not tried to interfere in matters of that kind. I have not often asked for a quorum of this House. I believe we ought to be generous and kind to each other, but we have gotten tired of this confidence game. We have gotten tired of the brakeman on the railroad train being a bigger man than the manager himself. Take off the brakes or else get ready to keep a quorum here to do the business of this Government. Give these men a chance. If you do not want to vote for it, you do not have to do so. If you like the plan of my friend from Illinois, vote for it, and if it is the only plan I can get I will vote for that, but you can not get anywhere by simply having a minority of this House run the majority. I am sick and tired of it, and I for one give you notice now that, so far as I have power and strength, I am ready to stay here if it takes all summer in order to vote on this question. Have a quorum here every day after to-day for the transaction of all business until you report some rule, make some honest effort, to give the Members of Congress a chance to vote yea or nay upon the proposition. You have held it back for a year, and you want to hold it back, and I do not believe——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I know the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the chairman of the Committee on Rules have been trying faithfully; I know that committee has been trying to perfect a bill; I know the difficulties that surround the arrangement of bringing out a bill for a billion or two billions of dollars and at the same time arranging to raise the revenue under present heavy taxes and pass that legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. They have formulated a bill and that bill is here. If you have got the votes to amend it, do so, but do not crawl in your hole, put on the brakes, and say this is a country of minorities. Gentlemen, this ought to be a country of majorities, and a majority of this body is in favor of making good to the man whom we took away from his home and away from his job and put in the trenches over in France. [Applause.] We are ready to do it, but it is a minority that is stopping it, and that minority, as far as I am concerned, must keep a quorum here in the transaction of its business after to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has the rule in his hip pocket now, and has had it there for a week. Why does he not bring it in here and let us vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have 22 minutes remaining. Is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] was recognized for 1 hour, and has consumed 40 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I now yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY], reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] can not yield his time, the time having been yielded to him.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order is made, the gentleman from Illinois can not yield his time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How much time does the gentleman from Tennessee desire?

Mr. GARRETT. Five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks just made by my distinguished friend—and I feel that he is my friend—from Illinois [Mr. MASON], I think it is proper that the exact parliamentary situation should be definitely laid before this House and the country.

The gentleman from Illinois has referred to the minority. Whether he meant the political minority or the numerical minority, I do not know.

Mr. MASON. I did not mean the political minority, because they are with us.

Mr. GARRETT. I am very glad to have that explanation from the gentleman, but lest it might be misunderstood as to what the reference meant, it is proper to say this, that so far as the political minority is concerned, either in the Commitee on Ways and Means or in the Committee on Rules, all that they have ever asked has been that this bill, the largest revenue bill ever presented to any nation in a time of peace, a bill having features of most tremendous importance, should be brought before the House in an orderly way, considered upon its merits, and subject to amendment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has now in his pocket, reported from the Committee on Rules, a resolution to make it in order to consider this bill. There are those of us who object to the terms of that rule, not because it proposes to submit the question to the House for consideration, but because by its terms it cuts off the opportunity to amend this important measure in order that the judgment of this responsible body may be had upon all the questions involved, including the questions of taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But we have not at any time interposed, and do not now, the slightest objection to the gentleman from Kansas calling up that rule. We will then endeavor to bring about a situation under which amendments can be offered and considered, and take our chances. [Applause on the Democratic side.] So much ought to be said.

This body, if it does not already understand, and the country at large, those interested for and those interested against, ought to understand the exact facts. This much may be said, at least, that the political majority in this House is responsible for the procedure of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They must in the nature of things take the initiative in bringing matters before the body for consideration. Our only chance, we of the political minority, is to attempt to secure the right of amendment and to amend, if possible. We can not initiate proceedings. And if the majority party has reached the point where it can not legislate under the general rules, where it can not legislate with a special rule, and is finally to be driven to a suspension of all rules, God knows what will become of the country. [Loud applause on the Democratic side, the Members rising.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, a great many special rules have been brought out of the Committee on Rules that have cut off debate and prohibited amendment, but no rule from that committee within my recollection has met the united opposition from the Democratic side of the House as has the rule for the consideration of the bill providing indemnity for the soldiers of the Great War. [Applause on the Republican side.] The political minority of the House is opposed to that legislation.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The political minority on the Democratic side is united with 49 Members on the majority side of the House.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I can not. This makes a majority of the membership of the House against the previous question on the rule and against the rule.

A MEMBER. Good!

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No man interested in this legislation would bring in a rule here, move the previous question, and have a united Democratic minority, supported by half a hundred on this side of the House, vote down the previous question and throw the whole question into the hands of the enemies of the legislation. [Applause on the Republican side.] And that is exactly what the enemies of this legislation are prepared to do.

Mr. PELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? Here is one Democrat who is with you.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is one thing I do not propose to do. I shall not turn this legislation over to its enemies, to those who propose at any cost to defeat it. I propose on Saturday morning to bring in a rule providing for six days of suspension. Under that rule it will be in order to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill, and you gentlemen then can not go behind a barrage of previous questions and alleged drastic rules and vote against this legislation. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] says he will be for it. I am glad to say he has been for it from the beginning; but other gentlemen on that side of the House will have to come from behind the barrage. You will have to "go over the top" and into "no man's land" and vote for or against the main proposition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No.

This proposition does not differ from other important legislation brought here under special rule under which the previous question is ordered, under which amendment is denied. I have brought in such rules. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has brought in such rules during the time that he and his party were in the majority. The same thing has been done throughout the history of legislation. Everybody knows that if the legislation that is proposed to indemnify the soldiers for some of the losses that they sustained during the war was thrown open for all sorts of amendment and debate such action would mutilate it and defeat its purpose as sought by the men who are attempting to get consideration for it under conditions that would enable them to do that. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the rules of debate on such a bill as is now before the Committee of the Whole House the opposition, claiming the hour given it, has the right to be recognized for an hour in opposition of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee continues in session after the expiration of the hour controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], that proposition would be true. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] unless some one opposed to the bill before the committee should claim recognition.

Mr. BLANTON. All right.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I came into the Chamber a moment ago, and I found they were discussing the bonus bill. I want to take this opportunity—the very first one that I have had and maybe the last one I shall get—to express my views as to where I stand.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] declined to yield to me a moment ago, when he made the declaration that the minority, referring to the political minority, was opposed to the bonus bill and was against the rule and against any proposition that might come before the House relating to the bonus bill. I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that if he will bring in his rule he will find that a solid minority is not opposed to his rule, and he will find that the minority is not opposed to the bonus bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it has gone out to the country from the Republican press of this city that the solid Democratic minority was opposing this legislation, and next week when you get your county papers from all over the country you will find in every Republican county paper, in the propaganda sent out by the Republican press from the Capital City, the statement that the Democrats in Congress are opposing the bonus bill. It is done for a purpose; it is done by our Republican friends for the purpose of saying to the soldiers of the country that the Democrats in Congress are against a bonus bill.

I for one do not propose to remain silent and have myself placed in a false position by these reports. I am for a bonus bill, and I propose to vote for it, and I am going to vote for any rule that you will bring in here to get this bonus bill to a vote. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. No; I yield back my time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules grew so partisan in his speech that he was unwilling even to grant the favor of a correction of his statement to some members of the minority whose support of the bonus bill has been misrepresented. [Applause.] The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has repeatedly interviewed me about conditions on the Democratic side of the House as I found them, and the gentleman from Kansas knew from me not later than this noon that the Democratic minority is not unitedly opposed to the rule that he proposes to bring out, and which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] says the chairman of the Rules Committee now has in his hip pocket; and I am astounded and disgusted with his position, attempting to create political capital for his party, when he claims that the entire Democratic minority is opposed to his rule.

As one Democrat, I do not care what kind of a rule they bring out. I am going to vote for it, and other Democrats will do likewise, even though there are half of the Republican majority hoping that the bonus bill will be defeated. [Applause.] I do not believe that the bill as it is coming from the Committee on Ways and Means is what these boys deserve. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if I had any hope that a better bill than the one now under discussion—a bill which would more adequately compensate the young men of America who were willing to risk all at the call of their country—might meet with the favorable consideration of the Ways and Means Committee, I would hesitate in favoring the measure as now reported. If this is the best we can hope for, I am going to vote for it.

Of course, there is opposition now that the glory and glamour of heroic sacrifice and brave deeds are not daily pictured on the front pages of the metropolitan dailies. Hunger, hardship, privations, disease, wounds, and foul poison gas, ghastly death in bloody battles—these are all forgotten now! What are they all compared with the great risk of those who continue to pile up immense profits in peaceful America?

How soon the world forgets! Two million trench veterans, who but a few short months ago were the pride and everlasting glory of America, are now called "looters" by a gang of profiteers whose great personal fortunes to-day were built on the sweat and sacrifice and the blood of the American youth who helped to save civilization. [Applause.]

These lads are now told by profiteer patriots that "the undying glory of their achievements" should be sufficient reward and that "to debase it with a cash gratuity would be an eternal shame."

Well, my colleagues, I have yet to see any blush of shame on the faces of those who stayed at home and fattened their bank accounts. They smilingly continue to pillage the pockets of the veterans and their crippled comrades—yea, and of the widows and orphans of our dead heroes. Big business opposes this bill. Of course it does. Let me tell this House that if the commodity-controlling trusts had not combined to gouge the public, including the war-worn veterans and their dependent families, the demand for a bonus to help the boys along in a fresh start would have died a-borning. The inordinate greed of big business has proved a boomerang, and this bill is a fitting response to the rising prices fostered by our trade monarchs.

Mr. Chairman, the men in whose behalf we are asked to legislate to-day would not ask for a bonus extracted from the pockets of the common people of this Republic. They are going about their daily duties nowadays in the usual way. It is true that few of them are loafing excepting the lads who are unable to work because of minor disabilities incurred during the war. Perhaps their injuries are not serious enough to call for Government compensation, but they are bad enough to handicap their earning possibilities.

These men are hoping for the best—for simple justice—let the gratitude pass. You can not pull the wool over their eyes by your professions of lasting loyalty to their welfare and then vote against this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for one minute.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I am in receipt of a letter from my distinguished predecessor, Hon. W. C. Adamson, on the subject of the development of the Chattahoochee River. It is very comprehensive and illuminating, and I desire to extend my remarks by printing it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the letter stated. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, what is the matter that the gentleman desires to insert?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it again.

Mr. WRIGHT. A letter from my distinguished predecessor, Hon. W. C. Adamson, on the necessity of the development of the Chattahoochee River.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

CARROLLTON, GA., May 22, 1920.

Hon. WILLIAM C. WRIGHT, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: You and I both live in the fertile valley of the Chattahoochee, a river pronounced by competent engineers as offering the best prospect for water-power development now in this country and also offering splendid facilities for much-needed navigation from Atlanta to the Gulf, a distance of 500 miles. We discovered many years ago that owing to the expense involved the United States Government would not undertake the improvement of navigation above Columbus, Ga. Several times the authorities have so indicated, but the last deliverance on the question was on November 5, 1918, by the Board of Engineers, based on a report made September 10, 1918, by the division engineer of the southeast division, to which, however, he added:

"The water-power features of the question should await the outcome of the general legislation on this subject now under discussion in Congress."

That legislation has now been accomplished and there is no reason why those interested in the development of the Chattahoochee Valley should not bestir themselves to secure private capital which could find large profits in developing the additional horsepower now going to waste and would at the same time perfect the navigation of the river, with locks and dams above Columbus, making storage reservoirs that would maintain a constant navigable channel below Columbus. In the report of the Corps of Engineers recently issued occurs the following description of the Chattahoochee River and statements of the purposes of the survey recently made:

"2. The Chattahoochee River rises in the mountains of northeastern Georgia and unites with the Flint River at the Florida State line to form the Apalachicola River, which empties into the Gulf of Mexico through Apalachicola Bay. The torrential mountain portion of the river extends southwest to Gainesville, from which point to Atlanta the slope moderates. From Atlanta to West Point, a distance of 105 miles, it has a slope of about 1.8 feet per mile, and between West Point and Columbus, a distance of 35 miles, there is a drop of 370 feet, or about 10.5 feet per mile. From Columbus to the mouth, a distance of 164 miles, it has a fall of about 0.85 foot per mile, and this section has been improved by the United States since 1874, under a project providing for a channel 4 feet deep at low water and 100 feet wide, to be secured by the removal of timber obstructions, dredging, contraction works, and shore protection. The improvement has resulted in securing lower freight rates to Columbus and points below, and has exercised a beneficial influence upon the commerce of this section of the country, but the maximum benefits have not been attained, owing in part to the fact that the river does not afford a dependable channel the year round, and in part to the failure of local interests to provide suitable facilities for handling the traffic. In the section between Atlanta and Columbus, the large fall, combined with favorable foundation conditions, renders this stream peculiarly favorable to the construction of works for the development of water power, and in view of this fact it was deemed advisable to make a survey of the river below Atlanta in order to develop sufficient data for the consideration of this subject in coordination with improvement for navigation."

The following extract from the survey forecasts some of the advantages to be secured by improving the navigation of the river as far up as Atlanta:

"29. Below Columbus the river now serves an old and well-established local traffic through a territory about 30 miles wide which, except for highways, has no other means of transportation. The agricultural portion of this territory is now changing and growing rapidly, and corresponding import needs may result in the next decade. Even under present conditions manufacturing is also growing rapidly along the river and the indications are that better means of transportation must be added before many years. It is asserted that the trend of manufacturing toward this locality would be strengthened by cheaper and better transportation facilities, and that with the river placed on an equal footing with the railroads by means of proper and efficient terminals, modern boats, effective transfer facilities to seagoing vessels, and a deeper channel, it would be capable of handling all the freight which would naturally seek water transportation, and at a lower cost than it could move by rail. Export freight could also move with but one transfer to the various ports of the world. This might attract manufacturing plants, build up a large distributing trade, and develop not only the immediate vicinity of the river but greatly benefit the southeast in general. The extension of navigation from Columbus to Atlanta would, it is believed, furnish a new and needed means of transportation to a territory 140 miles long, which is now very scantily served by railroads and to which the above statements also apply. The long and short haul clause of the interstate commerce act is now being applied to the southeastern territory, many radical changes taking effect January 1, 1916. On items which previously had lower rates at river towns due to existing potential water competition, in all cases where such freight is not being actually carried by water the charges are raised to correspond with rates to inland towns. These changed rates are not yet all known, but grain at Columbus is raised 1 cent per 100 pounds. Applying this to the 100,000 tons now moving there, the increase of freight rates on this item alone will cost Columbus $20,000 annually. Practically 80 per cent of this grain could move by a dependable water route. On eight other items there is an increase of $20,000 to Columbus alone, and the rates on many other items are to be increased. Table No. 17, appended hereto, shows the class increase from New York, Cincinnati, and New Orleans to many river towns. Atlanta has long had preferential rates as a rail competing point. These are to be raised, and rate experts state that it will cost Atlanta over $500,000 annually in increased freight rates."

If we could secure private capital to construct the three dams at Franklin, Hairston Island, and Maple Creek, we could perfect the navigation from Atlanta to West Point with immense advantage to commerce and produce enough electricity to electrify the valley. As you know, there are more than 100 industrial enterprises within a few miles of that stretch of river, which, at reasonable prices, profitable to the electrical companies, would like to use the electric current. The following tables give the estimated cost of those three proposed dams:

"Franklin: The proposed Franklin Dam site is located about a quarter of a mile above the village of Franklin, Ga. It is proposed to make this a storage reservoir which will deliver a minimum continuous discharge of 3,000 second-feet to the river. By utilizing the upper 20 feet of the reservoir a storage capacity of 720,000 acre-feet may be obtained. The crest of the spillway is placed at elevation 750, the draw off to be carried through the turbines. If for any reason this could not be done, emergency valves in the dam would pass the required flow at any time. The maximum head would be 120 feet, the minimum head 100 feet. The mean of these two is used in computing the power to be derived from this dam. This is conservative, as during the greater part of the time the upper pool level would be very near the crest of the spillway.

Cofferdam, 700 linear feet, at $30	$21,000
Excavation, 2,500,000 cubic yards, at 25 cents	625,000
Concrete, lock, etc., 192,000 cubic yards, at $10	1,920,000
Concrete, dam, and power-house substructure, 826,000 cubic yards, at $10	8,260,000
Gates, valves, and operating machinery	200,000
Miscellaneous plant	100,000
Flowage and reservation acreage, 45,000 acres, at $50	2,250,000
Contingencies	524,000
Total	13,900,000

"Hairston Island: The Hairston Island site is located about 9 miles above the city of West Point, Ga., and is proposed to be developed for both navigation and power.

Cofferdam, 1,250 linear feet, at $30	$37,500
Excavation, 217,000 cubic yards, at 25 cents	54,250
Concrete, lock, etc., 76,000 cubic yards, at $10	760,000
Concrete, dam, and power-house substructure, 169,000 cubic yards	1,690,000
Gates, valves, and operating machinery	100,000
Miscellaneous plant	50,000

The report estimates the 24-hour primary horsepower to be generated as follows:

Franklin Dam	30,000
Hairston Island	14,350
Maple Creek	5,230

Of course the 10 or 12 hour power usually used would double that in quantity. In addition to that, it is estimated that constructing those three dams and making a regular flow below them would so far increase the current at the plants already established down the river as to enable them to produce 44,000 primary horsepower more than they now produce, for which, under the law just passed, they would have to pay the constructors of the upstream dams.

Of course there are difficulties in the way of securing capital to construct these dams, but there are other obstacles. Several times we have been offered the money. Its use was once prevented by the administration refusing to approve plans and specifications pending the water-power legislation. Another time when $10,000,000 was offered, at a time when $10,000,000 would have done as much work as $20,000,000 would now, the existing power companies prevented construction. The following extract from the engineers' report very clearly lines up the situation:

"The plant on the Chestatee is owned by the Gainesville Railway & Power Co., and the output used in that city to operate the street railway and local mills. All other existing plants and many of the undeveloped sites up to West Point are owned by the Columbus Power Co., which belongs to Stone & Webster. The Georgia Railway & Power Co., of Atlanta, controls the rest of the river above Franklin. These two companies are allied, and their existing plants are connected, so that current may be transmitted in either direction as needed. They are also tied to the Carolina and Tennessee developments. The position of these two interests and the establishment of their transmission lines in most of the important towns and cities of north and northwest Georgia and of northeast Alabama permit them to monopolize the power situation and to control future developments in this and outlying sections.

"The previous description of the river shows that between Atlanta and Columbus, but more particularly between West Point and Columbus, the large fall combined with favorable foundation conditions renders this stream peculiarly favorable to the construction of works for the development of water power, and, while the low-water flow is relatively small, apparently this defect may be remedied by the construction of storage reservoirs, advantageous sites for which are known to exist at and above Franklin. Tables Nos. 19[1] and 20[1] show that at present the available power is by no means fully developed. Accordingly the interests prominently identified with the existing developments have been requested to state their attitude as to further development and as to an improvement of the stream which shall coordinate and harmonize the requirements for efficient and economical navigation and for corresponding development of water power."

The reports state that these power companies replied that all their primary developed power has not yet been sold. In the same connection, the same report states, "None of these plants can now furnish, to the full extent of their present installations, even 10-hour horsepower during low-water months," demonstrating that more water is needed and more uniformity in the amount of water, which can only be supplied by constructing the Franklin reservoir. If that engineer were making the same report now, he would tell you that during the past two years it was impossible for the present installations to furnish all the primary power demanded, even at current prices, and he might add, what you and I both know, that if abundant power existed and were offered to industrial institutions at an industrial and domestic rate every horsepower that could possibly be generated would be utilized, and that without necessarily reducing the present price of the current for lighting purposes.

I can not believe that the existing power companies, serving the country from Atlanta to Columbus, will stand in the way of the development of the Chattahoochee Valley, solely from fear of creating competition which would compel a reduction of the price of their current. The Stone & Webster people told me once that they would sell their holdings if they could secure the contracts to construct the project, as they were in the business of construction. I have no doubt they would still manifest that amiable frame of mind. The North Georgia Power Co. at one time agreed to sell the Franklin holdings, provided the entire stream were made navigable from Atlanta to the Gulf. As the Franklin Dam is the key to the situation, I have no doubt the entire navigation of the river would inevitably follow the construction of the Franklin Dam. Certainly ingenuity enough exists in the cities of Atlanta and Columbus and among the wealthy mill men of La Grange, Newman, Carrollton, and West Point to inaugurate some plan or arrangement by which those sites could be amicably and profitably utilized.

But if any difficulty should arise, a remedy is at hand. The new law provides the right of condemnation through the right of eminent domain, where dams are to be constructed to promote navigation (sec. 21).

I don't believe there is a more profitable field for capitalists to invest their money right now than can be found in constructing the three dams I have referred to. Whatever may be said by existing power companies about there being no market to demand further development, we know that, at the proper industrial price, all the current that could be possibly developed on every shoal between Atlanta and Columbus could be sold.

The whole river ought to be made navigable, and will be some time, but it all can not be done at once. The most feasible plan advocated by the engineers is set forth in the following extract:

"Plan No. 1.—This plan considers the improvement of the entire river between Atlanta and the mouth by the construction of locks and dams between Columbus and Atlanta. It contemplates both navigation and power above Columbus and a 6-foot low-water depth at all times below Columbus, to be obtained by increasing the low-water discharge through the use of the Franklin Reservoir above Columbus. The total estimated cost is $32,790,000, and $111,000 per annum for maintenance. The total amount of new power which would be rendered available by this plan is 139,510 horsepower."

But the engineers suggest another plan which, for the present, would perfect the navigation below Columbus and make a lake 108 miles long between Franklin and Atlanta, which would furnish navigation locally in that upper reach of the river to a portion of the valley sadly in need of transportation. That recommendation is set out in the following extract from the report of the engineers:

"5. In addition to the plans mentioned above, the district engineer presents for consideration case 4, which contemplates the construction of the Franklin Dam only. This dam would furnish 30,000 horsepower and provide sufficient storage to give a 6-foot navigation below Columbus. The estimate for this improvement is $12,900,000. If proper cooperation for the development of water power could be secured, the district engineer would favor this plan, but it appears that at this time local cooperation is not offered. The division engineer does not regard improvement of the Chattahoochee River for navigation purposes worthy of being undertaken beyond the work authorized by the existing project, and he believes that the question of the power dam should await the outcome of pending power legislation."

As to the sequence in which the possible dams, all of which have been located by the survey, should be constructed, the following extract from the report contains the suggestion of the engineers:

"28. Sequence of operations: For the early benefit to navigation, it would appear that the Franklin Dam should be built first, as it would relieve the present situation below Columbus, but from an economical standpoint the other locks and dams should be completed first. On account of the depth of water the Franklin Dam will back at the Camp Creek Dam site when the reservoir is full; it will be necessary to have the Camp Creek Lock and Dam completed before the Franklin Reservoir is filled. The completion of the Franklin Dam first would give the additional flow of the river to contend with at the various sites below, which would be a considerable added expense. Construction of the Franklin Dam first would also necessitate the construction of a supply railroad about 20 miles in length from Newnan to Franklin, Ga."

As it is evident that the most important dam for navigation is the Franklin Dam, even if the section between West Point and Columbus should never be canalized, and, as its construction would insure the most profitable financial returns in the way of electric current, it is obvious that it ought to be built as early as possible. But the expense of building a railroad from some near-by railroad point can be obviated by first building the dam at Hairstons Island. Then an elevator operated at the Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic Railroad and a boat operated on the lake constructed by that dam could convey the materials for constructing the Franklin Dam right up to the dam site. But if suggestion No. 4, made by the engineers, is followed, to eliminate the lock in the Franklin Dam, that would more than save enough to build the railroad. It would furnish the principal things that you and I are eager for—first, cheap transportation for Heard County, and, second, insuring a permanent navigable channel below Columbus, from the Franklin Dam making such a tremendous storage reservoir. In connection with that plan the engineers make the following recommendation:

"45. The cost of a system of locks and dams below Columbus (case No. 3), whereby a 6-foot depth would be secured to Apalachicola, is estimated at a first cost of $8,400,000, with an additional sum of $28,500 for necessary preliminary surveys and a large sum required annually for maintenance and operation. It might be equitable, therefore, for the United States to pay a large part of the sum required for the construction of the Franklin Dam due to the benefits to be derived for navigation purposes below Columbus. This scheme would meet the requirements in the same way that locks and dams would and would do away with the cost of maintenance and operation which would exceed the annual cost of open-channel work between Columbus and the confluence with the Flint River. Hence it appears the equitable portion to be borne by the United States might be half of the cost of constructing the Franklin Dam, or $6,450,000. This would make the proposition far more attractive to private interests and would render more satisfactory service to navigation than a system of locks and dams between Columbus and the mouth of the Chattahoochee. Of the various cases herein considered, this possibly is the one most recommendable. It is a question, however, if cooperation could be secured.

"46. The entire amount should be appropriated before the work is started, or so arranged that there would be no delay in receiving the necessary money for carrying on the work continuously. The first consideration would be the construction of the railroad from Newnan to Franklin for the purpose of transporting plant and materials. During the construction of the railroad necessary additional data could be collected and the designs completed so that actual construction could be started as soon as the railroad reached Franklin."

My main purpose in addressing this letter to you at this time is to call your attention to section 12 of the water-power bill just enacted, suggesting a combination between the Government's promotion of navigation and the investment of private capital for hydroelectrical purposes, and to section 10, paragraph E, authorizing a city for its own use to secure a license without paying any annual charge. Considering those two provisions in connection with the recommendation of the engineers last quoted, it occurs to me that the construction of the Franklin Dam affords the best possible instance of a proper case for erecting a combination dam. Whether constructed with or without a lock, it would permit much-needed navigation between Franklin and Atlanta, and constitute a storage reservoir to perfect navigation every day in the year below Columbus. At the same time the 30,000 horsepower 24-hour current, or the 60,000 horsepower 12-hour current would every bit be used by the city of Atlanta for municipal purposes. The city of Atlanta could well afford to pay half of the cost of construction for the use of that tremendous amount of current, with the navigation secured, and the Government could well afford to contribute half of the cost of construction in order to secure the navigation already suggested.

I have no doubt that the distinguished Representative from the fifth district, whose home is in Atlanta, and our two Senators, and Congressmen CRISP and PARK, of Georgia, and Congressman STEAGALL, of Alabama, as well as the two Senators from Alabama, will all cooperate with you in the enterprise and that you will all be able to secure an arrangement by which the city of Atlanta and the United States Government can divide the expense of constructing the Franklin Dam, provided private capital can not be readily secured to make the entire development.

There are two considerations that ought to induce cities and the people along the river from Atlanta to Columbus to form a Chattahoochee improvement association in order to push the work on that river. First, the construction of the dams already located by the Government survey would absolutely eliminate and prevent all floods and overflows in the future, such as damaged West Point last winter and have so frequently ruined crops in the valley, and, more important still, the use of an abundant supply of hydroelectricity at reasonable prices would dispense with thousands and thousands of tons of coal and prevent coal famines in the cities along that river in the future. There is scarcely a purpose for which coal is used that could not be more economically, conveniently, and pleasantly served by electricity. I have no doubt the city of Atlanta alone would find a use for every particle of the current generated at the Franklin Dam and West Point, Lagrange, Carrollton, Newnan, and Columbus could absorb profitably all that could be generated at the other dams below Franklin.

Yours, truly, W. C. ADAMSON.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for half a minute.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, we are having a considerable debate on this question, and I think the gentleman's remarks would be very helpful, and therefore I think they ought to be delivered. Therefore I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota objects.

Mr. PELL. I thank the gentleman for the compliment. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] chairman of the great Committee on Rules, admits that he has had in his hip pocket for several days a rule authorizing this bonus legislation to be brought before the House at any time he presents such rule; but as an excuse for not considering this legislation, he says in the next breath that 49 Republican Members are against his proposition and do not want it to come up, and he says that joined with the 49 Republicans there are sufficient Democrats in the minority party on this side of the House to prevent his doing what he wants to do, and therefore he will not let anything be done. It is a rule or ruin policy. He has a rule which provides that we have got to vote up or down, without any amendment whatever, a certain proposition that affects this country in a more vital and extensive degree than any other proposition that has ever been before this House during the present session; and he says "If you do not vote for it just exactly like I want you to vote, without the dotting of an 'i' or the crossing of a 't,' I am going to raise Cain here during the next week, and read out of the Republican Party the 49 Republicans who want to follow their own consciences and judgments."

Mr. ANDERSON. I make the point of order that the gentleman's remarks are not in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; I withdraw the objectionable word. If a majority of the House of Representatives, and such a majority is a majority of the 435 Members, are not in favor of the proposition, then that proposition ought to go down. Does not the gentleman want a majority of the Members to control? Has the time come when a minority not political, but a minority of all the Members of the House, who admit they are a minority, manipulated and controlled by the great chairman of the great Rules Committee, have got to run over the House of Representatives with a gag-rule proposition that the majority are not in favor of, else delay it until you can browbeat Members over? Are you holding your rule off until you can browbeat and whip into line with your bull whip on your side of the Chamber the 49 brave citizens of this country, Republicans though they be, who stand to vote for their convictions and their consciences? Are you trying to wait until you can whip them into line? When you criticized them the other day, I called attention to the fact that, thank God, the Member from Kansas, great chairman of the great Rules Committee though he is, had not the power to read out of the Republican Party the 49 Republicans who disagreed with him.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; the gentleman would not yield to me, but I will be kinder to him than he was to me.

Mr. MASON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I yielded to him, and therefore I thought he would yield to me.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Is the gentleman from Texas for the bonus bill?

Mr. BLANTON. When you give me an opportunity to vote on it you will hear me vote. I am not for the gag rule that the gentleman from Kansas has in his hip pocket, which crams down my throat things that I do not like. I want an opportunity to vote for the things that appeal to my conscience and my judgment and for a chance to perfect a piece of legislation by proper amendments, and I do not want that kind of legislation crammed down my throat, with no chance whatever given to properly amend it, and I am therefore unalterably opposed to said rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 14½ minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, those of you who heard the reading of the veto message of the President this morning will recall this language:

> Notwithstanding the fact that upon our entrance into the war we professed to be seeking to assist in the maintenance of common interests, nothing is said in this resolution about the freedom of navigation upon the seas.

Gentlemen will recall that a respectful, but rather audible titter of merriment went around the House on the reading of that. I remembered at the time reading in the London Times an interview with the President upon this subject, which I will quote. You will find it published in the RECORD of September 8, 1919, at page 5023.

When asked by the British correspondent what was the situation with regard to the issue of the freedom of the seas, President Wilson said:

> "I am glad you asked me that, for I want to tell you a good joke on myself. I did not see this joke until I came over here. Under the League of Nations there will be no neutrals. They will all be in the league and subject to the league's decisions on the matter of the exertion of armed force. If there are no neutrals, there will be no issue over sea rights, for the freedom-of-the-seas puzzle arose over relations between belligerents and neutrals. The league will now settle all matters of naval policy. So it might be said, 'There ain't no such thing' as an issue of freedom of the seas."
> Mr. Wilson was asked if the British had brought that argument to him, and Mr. Wilson replied, "No; I arrived at that conclusion in the privacy of my own soul." (London Times, weekly edition, Paris correspondence.)

[Laughter.]

And yet we are criticized for not putting into this resolution of peace an issue about which the President said, "There ain't no such thing."

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Query: Did the same man who gave that interview write the message we received this morning? [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in order to finish the consideration of this bill to-night, I shall move that the committee rise and go back into the House, and then move to close general debate. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GARNER. Maybe you can close debate by unanimous consent without rising.

Mr. BLANTON. See if you can close debate by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARNER. Ask unanimous consent.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will permit me to withhold the motion for a moment, I will ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be now closed.

Mr. MURPHY. I object.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I move that the committee do now rise.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the motion?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GARNER. Let the Chair put the request, "Without objection the Clerk will read."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will read.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota objects. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 119, noes 21.

So the motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRAMTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14197) to amend the personal service corporation provisions of the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that all general debate be now closed.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the rules of the House, in Committee of the Whole the proponents of a measure are entitled to one hour of debate, and then the opposition is entitled to an hour. On this bill in Committee of the Whole House there was an hour consumed by the proponents of the measure. I make the point of order that until the opposition has a chance to be heard on it in Committee of the Whole, a motion to close debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the committee having risen and the Chairman having reported that the committee has come to no resolution on the bill, the motion made by the gentleman from Iowa is in order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And on that I move the previous question.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a preferential motion. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were 31 ayes and 132 noes.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-seven Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. Does not the call come automatically?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it is not necessary for a quorum to be present to adjourn. The motion to adjourn was acted upon and the Chair announced the result. The question is on ordering a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were 111 ayes and 13 noes.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The Doorkeeper was ordered to close the doors and the Sergeant at Arms to notify the absentees.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Dempsey	Hayden	Mansfield
Bell	Dent	Hays	Merritt
Benham	Dewalt	Hernandez	Moore, Va.
Blackmon	Drane	Hulings	Morin
Bland, Ind.	Drewry	Husted	Mott
Booher	Dunn	Igoe	Neely
Bowers	Dyer	Jacoway	Nicholls
Brinson	Edmonds	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overstreet
Britten	Ellsworth	Johnson, Wash.	Parker

Brumbaugh	Evans, Nev.	Kahn	Porter
Buchanan	Ferris	Kelley, Mich.	Pou
Butler	Fisher	Kelly, Pa.	Rhodes
Cantrill	Gandy	Kendall	Riddick
Carter	Godwin, N. C.	Kettner	Riordan
Clark, Fla.	Good	Kiess	Rowe
Cole	Goodall	Kitchin	Rubey
Copley	Gould	Kreider	Rucker
Costello	Greene, Mass.	Lankford	Sabath
Crowther	Griest	Luhring	Sanford
Curry, Calif.	Hamill	McArthur	Scott
Dale	Hardy, Tex.	McCulloch	Scully
Davis, Minn.	Hastings	McPherson	Sears

Shreve	Snell	Sullivan	Walters
Slemp	Snyder	Thomas	Wood, Ind.
Small	Steele	Tillman	Woodyard
Smith, N. Y.	Stephens, Miss.	Towner	Yates
Smithwick	Strong, Pa.	Upshaw	Young, N. Dak.

On this call 315 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 135, noes 85.

So the motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to close debate.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 155, noes 35.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of taking this vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eight Members have risen, not a sufficient number.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-eight Members present, a quorum. The question now comes on the motion to close debate.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 175, noes 26.

So the motion to close debate was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14197) to amend the personal-service corporation provisions of the revenue act of 1918 and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14197.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the question of consideration can not be raised on a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The House decides that by the vote on motion.

The SPEAKER. A vote not to go into the Committee of the Whole House would be tantamount to a refusal to consider. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the motion to go into the committee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 185, noes 17.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, on this vote I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Seven Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14197, with Mr. CRAMTON in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 201 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 201. (a) That the term 'dividend' when used in this title (except in paragraph (10) of subdivision (a) of section 234) means (1) any distribution made by a corporation to its shareholders or members, whether in cash or in other property, out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913.

"(b) Any distribution shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profis unless all earnings and profits have first been distributed. Any distribution made in the year 1918 or any year thereafter shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913; but any earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, may be distributed, exempt from the tax, after the earnings and profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, have been distributed.

"(c) A dividend paid in stock of the corporation (hereinafter called 'stock dividend') shall not be subject to tax at the time of distribution. Amounts bona fide distributed in the liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as payments in exchange for stock or shares, and any gain or profit realized thereby shall be taxed to the distributee as other gains or profits.

"(d) A distribution shall be deemed to have been made by a corporation to its stockholders or members as of the date when the cash or other property is distributed or set apart for or credited to the account of such stockholders or members as to be unqualifiedly subject to their immediate demands, and shall be taxed to such stockholders or members as of the date of such distribution.

"(e) For the purpose of computing the invested capital of a corporation, dividends distributed by such corporation during the first 60 days of any taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated during preceding taxable years; but any distribution made during the remainder of the taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated between the close of the preceding taxable year and the date of distribution, to the extent of such earnings or profits; and if the books of the corporation do not show the amount of such earnings or profits, the earnings or profits for the accounting period within which the distribution was made shall be deemed to have been accumulated ratably during such period."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee as to the net result of the passage of this bill upon the revenues of the Government.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as the matter stands now under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Stock Dividends case, personal service corporations would not be subject to any taxation whatever. Under the law of 1918, the individual members of personal-service corporations were subject to taxation in the same manner as if the corporation had been a partnership. The effect of the Stock Dividends case is to make that taxation, in the judgment of the committee and in the judgment of the Solicitor of the Treasury, invalid, and they would be subject to no taxation whatever unless this bill is passed. This would bring in, as the Treasury estimates, about $6,000,000 a year. If it is not passed, the Government will lose about that amount.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I asked the question in the light of the fact that the general debate, while very illuminating upon the general subject of the bonus, was not particularly illuminating with respect to the subject of this bill. It occurred to me that inasmuch as the committee will at some time, if not to-day then later on, have to vote on the provisions of this bill, it might be desirable to get some light upon them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee will be glad to give any light which the gentleman from Minnesota will permit it to give.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman from Minnesota will permit the gentleman from Iowa to give any information which he has in the time of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman from Minnesota has any further question, the gentleman from Iowa will endeavor to answer it.

Mr. ANDERSON. What I was trying to get at, I will say to the gentleman, is the net effect of the bill—whether it results in a higher rate of taxation or a lower rate of taxation, a greater amount of revenue or a less amount of revenue.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As the matter stands now, these corporations will pay no tax whatever; they will pay nothing. Under the bill they will pay 20 per cent on the undistributed profits.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman mean in view of the decision of the Supreme Court or because under the present law they are untaxed?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In view of the decision. It is the logical result of the decision in the Stock Dividends case. That case, I might say, declared in effect that a stock dividend could not be taxed, because it was not in fact a distribution of any of the property of the corporation. Now, we have been taxing the members of these personal seryice corporations just the same rate whether distribution was made or not, and it can not be done in that manner under the decision of the Supreme Court, in my opinion, and I think in the opinion of every lawyer who has examined into the matter.

Mr. ANDERSON. What I understand this bill does is to apply the rule of taxing undistributed profits?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Undistributed profits; yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Why has not that rule been applied generally to corporations?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There has been considerable discussion over that, and it has, I believe, been recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and there are also a number of objections to it. I am inclined myself to think that it would be a very proper method of taxation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, in view of the fact that the recent decision of the Supreme Court probably makes it impossible in the future to tax stock dividends in any satisfactory or effective way, it seems to me that it is clearly the duty of the Committee on Ways and Means to consider the question of taxing undistributed profits.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, the Committee on Ways and Means—at least, that portion of it represented by the gentleman now speaking—has done its best to have stock dividends taxed in another manner; and if the present bill providing for soldiers' adjusted compensation is ratified, they will be taxed.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am very much in hopes that the bill providing for the adjusted compensation of ex-service men will be considered; and one of the things that disturbs me in reference to this particular legislation is that it seems to be considered more important by certain gentlemen who occupy the position of leadership in the House——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a unanimous-consent request. In view of the fact the hour of general debate on this bill was consumed in politics, and no doubt the committee has had some hearings and could enlighten the House with reference to this measure, which is very important, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa be given 10 minutes in which to address the House and give some information relative to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] be given 10 minutes in which to address the Committee in reference to the measure before us. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, as the gentleman from Iowa had a whole hour——

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. And used that hour in politics, I object.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 2, line 19, after the word "is," by inserting the word "so."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "is," insert the word "so."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is simply an error on the part of the printer, and having this opportunity and while I have the floor, if any gentleman desires to ask any questions in reference to this or any other part of the bill I shall be very glad to answer any question which I am able.

Mr. WINGO rose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to make an inquiry?

Mr. WINGO. Yes. I would like the gentleman to explain just exactly what changes are made in the present law by this bill. As I understand the gentleman has explained that the changes in the first paragraph were occasioned by the decision of the Supreme Court. Now, I did not catch all the gentleman's explanation, but take lines 10 and 12, page 2—

A dividend paid in stock of the corporation (hereinafter called stock dividend) shall not be subject to tax at the time of distribution.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the only change in the present law made on the first two pages, until we reach line 24.

Mr. WINGO. That is the real change. That is what I thought.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the real change, and that is made to adjust the law to the Supreme Court decision. While we were preparing these various paragraphs we thought we would make the law conform to the Supreme Court decision.

Mr. WINGO. There is reason for adding the words "at the time of distribution." Are they taxed under existing law or under this bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not under this bill, but under the existing law.

Mr. WINGO. What is the present law? I have forgotten.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If a stock dividend is made, and then even under the Supreme Court decision if the person who secured the dividend should sell some of that stock afterwards, he could be taxed on the profit that was made on the stock.

Mr. WINGO. Let me see if I catch the gentleman. Even under the decision of the Supreme Court, if a stock dividend is made and a man receives his stock and afterwards sells the stock, he must make a return for the profit he makes? In other words, it becomes income to the extent of the profit?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the case under the present law.

Mr. WINGO. The Supreme Court does not destroy that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Supreme Court does not destroy that principle. It was made definite in the other bill that we had just how that profit was to be computed. It was to be ascertained by dividing the original cost of the stock by the total number of shares a man had after the stock dividend was made to ascertain how much the cost of each share then was, and on that determine the assessment.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman care to state—a good many people are inquiring—what is the probability of legislation that might reach the stock dividends that would be compatible with the decision of the Supreme Court? Is there any probability of that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have in the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill a provision about which I think there is no question as to constitutionality. It does not tax the stock dividend, however, in the hands of the party to whom it is issued, but puts an excise tax on the corporation issuing the stock dividend.

Mr. WINGO. If it is issued, you put an excise tax on the issuance of that stock?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; but that is not in this bill.

Mr. WINGO. It is not? Does that produce the same amount of revenue we lost by the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We think it will produce about the same amount. Of course, it will bring it in in a lump, because so many corporations have made stock dividends. It will bring in about $40,000,000 at once.

Mr. WINGO. Which was about what was estimated to be the loss from the decision?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; about that much loss in several years.

Mr. WINGO. Now, what does the gentleman say is the other change besides that. I call his attention to section 1.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is a change in section (e), the words:

For the purpose of computing the invested capital of a corporation, dividends distributed by such corporation during the first 60 days of any taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated during preceding taxable years.

And so forth.

There is a slight change in the law there, for the purpose of making it more definite.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, the dividends that are declared during the first 60 days of a taxable year shall be deemed to be dividends accruing to the income of the preceding taxable year?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. There has been a dispute before——

Mr. WINGO. And that is the reason to clear the language?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is all.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa have five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Referring to those lines 10, 11, and 12, on page 2, reading:

A dividend paid in stock of the corporation (hereinafter called "stock dividend") shall not be subject to tax at the time of distribution.

I would like to ask the gentleman if that is any change from existing law subsequent to the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the law as it stands since the decision of the Supreme Court. It is put in here to make our statute conform to that decision.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. To declare the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To make the statute conform to the decision. Our law was contrary to the decision of the Supreme Court, because there was a provision that stock dividends should be taxed.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. On the following lines:

Amounts bona fide distributed in the liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as payments in exchange for stock or shares, and any gain or profit realized thereby shall be taxed to the distributee as other gains or profits.

Is that any change in existing law?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The words "bona fide" have been inserted. That is all.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is the rest of the language in the existing law?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The rest of the language is in the existing law.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield with pleasure to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. The Supreme Court decision said in effect that in the distribution of stock dividends there was no diminution of the property of the corporation and no increase in the property of the stockholder, and therefore the stockholder could not be taxed. Does the gentleman think that labeling the tax an "excise" escapes the Supreme Court decision?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, I do not know whether the gentlemen here care to take up time in a discussion between myself and the gentleman from Massachusetts as to something that is not in the bill.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, the supreme importance of this matter is that the other bill which the gentleman's committee has reported, the bonus bill, is, in my judgment, absolutely unconstitutional, and is therefore simply a camouflage offered to the soldiers. The question I have asked here reaches the very vitals of the issue. Let us meet it squarely. Can you make a thing constitutional by putting a label on it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman can answer that question for himself.

Mr. LUCE. I will. You can not make an unconstitutional thing constitutional by a label.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I decline to be bound by the gentleman's assumptions. The gentleman sets up a straw man here, and then destroys it.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think I should take up my time in the discussion of another bill.

Mr. LUCE. If the gentleman is willing to have it go out to the country that the bonus bill is unconstitutional, I am willing.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have had the opinion of every lawyer who has construed the provisions of the bill fairly, and that opinion is that the provision in the bonus bill is constitutional. It is not a question of labels; it is a question of what we have the right to do. We have a right to put an excise tax upon certain acts done by a corporation. When we do that we are not violating the Constitution of the United States. Any of the powers exercised by a corporation are subject to taxation, and it is for Congress to say whether they shall be taxed. The tax is laid upon those corporations which exercise the powers, functions, or privileges which Congress considers proper subjects for taxation.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman for one moment contend that we can tax a corporation on a procedure from which it gets no benefit?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That consideration does not enter into the revenue laws. I think that if the gentleman had gone more deeply into that question he would be aware of that. The right of taxation of a corporation does not depend upon the benefit it receives.

Mr. LUCE. Perhaps I have gone more deeply into it than the gentleman thinks.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the Supreme Court will undoubtedly claim their constitutional prerogative to pass upon the validity of this law, I assert that it is not constitutional for the gentlemen to decide it. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 111, noes 13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That paragraph 6 of subdivision (a) of section 234 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(6) Amounts received as dividends from a corporation which is taxable under this title upon its net income."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it is necessary to amend paragraph 6 of subdivision (a) of section 234 of such act, which I suppose is the revenue act, in the manner proposed in this item or not. I assume that it is necessary, because the Committee on Ways and Means, I take it, has given the matter very careful consideration.

The question that disturbs me is whether it is as necessary to amend the revenue act in the way proposed in this legislation at this particular time as it is to consider the legislation which proposes to adjust the compensation of ex-service men, and to give them certain preferences with respect to public employment, and also to give them certain advantages in obtaining lands from the United States Government. I have an idea that it is just and necessary to amend the law in this particular way, and I shall vote to so amend it; but if I had the opportunity I would sooner vote, and I think it would be in accordance with the desire of a majority of the House to vote in favor of legislation which would accomplish what it is proposed to accomplish in the legislation recently proposed by the Ways and Means Committee which provides for a bonus for ex-service men, which word "bonus," I think, is rather a misnomer, because what is really proposed is to make some adjustment which will be commensurate with the sacrifices which the ex-service men suffered in the way of loss of opportunity incident to that service. If it were not necessary to amend the provisions of the revenue act in the way which is here proposed, and if it were not so important to do it at this particular time, we might be able to consider the legislation to which I have referred; but, unfortunately, that action seems to be prevented by the opposition of certain gentlemen, representing a minority on this side of the House, who are opposed to that legislation. I do not object to that opposition. It is in itself perfectly legitimate. The unfortunate part of it is that those who take that position assume that they also have the right, in accordance with that position, to direct the action of the majority of the Republicans with reference to the legislation to which I have referred by preventing the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KING. I was out of the room a moment ago. To what legislation does the gentleman refer?

Mr. ANDERSON. In what I said a moment ago I had reference to the legislation recently reported by the Ways and Means Committee which provides alternative plans for the relief of the ex-service men who fought so gallantly across the water during the late war. Of course, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] will appreciate the fact that in view of the opposition of the minority of the gentlemen on this side of the House it will probably not be within the purview of the program of legislation to consider this legislation at this time.

Mr. PELL. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota. I agree with the gentleman that it is very necessary to pass this legislation, but I think there are other matters that should have the consideration of the House before its adjournment, which I understand may take place next week.

One matter which it seems to me ought to have the attention of the House is the report which I trust will be submitted by the Post Office Commission, so called, on the increase of salaries for post-office employees. [Applause.] It seems to me that it is very essential that action should be had on that expected report before we adjourn, and I for one hope that that report will come in.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I wish to say that I am in favor of the increase of the compensation of postal employees, and I wish to ask the gentleman if he is also in favor of the increase of the compensation of second-class postmasters?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am in favor of increased pay for postal employees all along the line.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I should like to know if the report of the Postal Commission carries with it a recommendation in favor of the increase of salaries of second, third, and fourth class postmasters?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am unable to inform the gentleman, but trust the commission's report will prove beneficial to these deserving men.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reget to have to make the point of order, but——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I agreed to give the gentleman time in general debate, but owing to the very acute parliamentary situation I overlooked it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. I do for the moment, but I believe that the debate ought to be confined to the bill under consideration.

Mr. TREADWAY. I desire to add one statement, and that is that there is to be a convention of postal employees in Springfield, Mass., on Sunday next, to which many of us have been invited, who are detained here by our duties. I trust that there may be some word go forth to these employees of favorable action by this House on their request. [Applause.]

Mr. MURPHY. I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I make this motion for the purpose of asking the gentleman, who is on these powerful committees of the House, if legislation to pay the postal clerks, which is so highly needed, is going to be brought into this House before the soldiers' bonus bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. As far as I am concerned, I have absolutely nothing to do with what may be presented to the House, but am urging the legislation in behalf of the postal employees.

Mr. MURPHY. I will say that I am in favor of the postal clerks being well paid, but I shall object to everything until the soldiers' bonus bill is given consideration on the floor of this House.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. The particular proposition in the pending paragraph now being considered has this language——

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JUUL. I want to know if the steering wheel of this parliamentary body has broken, or what has happened? [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Section 6 says paragraph 6 of subdivision (a) of section 234 of such act is amended to read as follows:

Amounts received as dividends from a corporation which is taxable under this title upon its net income.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That merely strikes out reference to the personal service corporations.

Mr. WINGO. Sections 3 and 4 seem to cover personal service corporations. I have not had occasion to refresh my memory since the bill came up, but you intend to change the law, which at the present time makes stockholders in personal service corporations taxable, the same as a partnership. Under your law the dividends received from personal service corporations will be taxed, or will they be exempt? What is the status under the bill, assuming it passes?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If they make distribution of profits, the dividends will be taxed, the same as any dividends. If they do not make distribution, the corporation will be taxed for undistributed profits.

Mr. WINGO. If they distribute the profits, each individual stockholder will have to account for it in his income.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; like any other dividends. We put a flat tax on the personal service corporations, the same as we do on all other corporations. Now, we put their dividends in the same class as other corporations. But if they do not make distribution, as a personal service corporation has no use for capital, we tax them for undistributed profits.

Mr. WINGO. That is the whole purpose of this provision?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; the sole purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That in addition to all other taxes, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the taxable year 1920 upon the net income of every personal service corporation received or accrued during the taxable years 1918 and 1919 a tax equal to the tax that would have been paid had such corporations been subject to the taxes imposed by section 230 of the revenue act of 1918 for such years.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa why this tax is limited to 1920?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The paragraph under consideration is for the years 1918 and 1919. The next is for 1920, and on the next page you will see a provision for after 1920. This provision covers the past tax paid by these corporations in case they do not elect as provided in the latter part of the bill to stand on their returns. In the latter part of the bill they are given the privilege of standing on the returns they have heretofore made. These provisions are for the reassessment in case they follow the Supreme Court decision claiming that the former tax is not valid and demand a repayment by the Government.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield for me to ask a question of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether any considerable number of personal service corporations have refused to pay the tax prior to the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My information is that none have refused. It is the belief of the Treasurer and of the Ways and Means Committee that they will continue to stand on their former returns. They are given the election of standing on the returns for former years.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And not be required to make a new return.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are given the election.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Can the gentleman say whether any considerable number of the personal service corporations have requested a refund of their taxes?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If they have done so, it is very recent.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So it is not going to create any hardship to the corporations?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; none at all.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the corporation elects to be taxed under this act, then the act operates retroactively.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is not a question of electing to be taxed under this act; for the year 1920 they will have to be taxed under this act. Their election is given as to previous years.

Mr. ANDERSON. How far back?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They were not taxable until the law of 1918, and it is only necessary to go back that far.

Mr. ANDERSON. So this is a retroactive act.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is retroactive on those who demand a reassessment or demand their money back that they have paid heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRAGO having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PERSONAL SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. (a) That in addition to all other taxes and in addition to the tax imposed by section 9 there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the taxable year 1920 upon the net income of every personal service corporation a tax equal to the sum of (1) 30 per cent of the amount of the net income of such corporation for the taxable year 1918 in excess of the dividend credit (determined under paragraph (c) of this section) and (2) 20 per cent of the amount of the net income of such corporation for the taxable year 1919 in excess of the dividend credit determined under paragraph (c) of this section.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 6, lines 1 and 2, after the word "credit," in line 1, strike out the words "determined under paragraph (c) of this section" and the parentheses and insert in lieu thereof the following: "determined for that year under paragraph (c) of this section."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the parentheses were wrongly inserted there and the words "for that year" were omitted through error.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, in line 4, page 6, after the word "determined," to insert the words "for that year."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 6, line 4, after the word "determined," insert "for that year."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

(b) For the taxable year 1920 and each taxable year thereafter shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every personal service corporation a tax equal to 20 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the dividend credit determined under paragraph (c) of this section.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 7, after the word "thereafter" insert the word "there."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. (a) That in addition to all other taxes and in addition to the tax imposed by section 9 there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the taxable year 1920 upon the net income of every personal service corporation a tax equal to the sum of (1) 30 per cent of the amount of the net income of such corporation for the taxable year 1918 in excess of the dividend credit (determined under paragraph (c) of this section) and (2) 20 per cent of the amount of the net income of such corporation for the taxable year 1919 in excess of the dividend credit determined under paragraph (c) of this section.

(b) For the taxable year 1920 and each taxable year thereafter shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every personal-service corporation a tax equal to 20 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the dividend credit determined under paragraph (c) of this section.

(c) The dividend credit shall consist of a specific exemption of $3,000 plus the amount by which the dividend distributed by the corporation to its stockholders or members during the taxable year exceeds the dividends deducted under the provisions of section 234 of the revenue act of 1918.

A foreign corporation shall not be entitled to the specific exemption of $3,000.

(d) Any personal service corporation that elects to pay taxes for the taxable years 1918 and 1919 under the provisions of the revenue act of 1918 as provided in section 11 of this act shall not be subject to the taxes imposed by section 9 or subdivision (a) of this section nor shall it be required to make return in respect to such taxes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does section 10 impose upon personal service corporations larger taxes than are now imposed upon ordinary corporations by existing law?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are imposed in quite a different manner. The flat tax on personal service corporations is the same as the flat tax on the other corporations. Then it imposes a tax on the undistributed profits which is not imposed on the other corporations. The gentleman will understand that there is no reason why personal service corporations should not distribute their profits unless they want to avoid taxation. They have no need for capital, and one of the distinguishing features of a personal service corporation is that the capital does not constitute any important matter in its organization and operation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. A personal service corporation might need a certain amount of cash on hand constantly. That is only a reserve against the day when their operations may not be successful, and when they may not be making sufficient returns for the members of the corporation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If they are profits over the previous year, I think the gentleman would say that they ought to be taxed, and that would be the only case where the tax would be laid. I am assuming the gentleman refers to undistributed profits.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the stockholders of any personal service corporation in existence in the taxable year 1918 or 1919, by a written agreement between the directors of the corporation and all the stockholders thereof, may for such years elect to be taxed under the provisions of the revenue act of 1918 in effect prior to the time this act takes effect; and in the case of any personal service corporation the stockholders and the directors of which have made such election, any distribution made hereafter from earnings or profits accumulated during the calendar years 1918 and 1919 shall be exempt from the tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1918: Provided further, That such directors and stockholders shall be deemed to have made such agreement and election unless within 90 days after the time this act takes effect one or more of them shall have notified the commissioner in writing that he rejects such agreement and election.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understood it was the theory of the Ways and Means Committee in reporting this legislation that the present act, so far as it applies to personal service corporations, is perhaps unconstitutional.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. I have no doubt about it myself.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman from Iowa think that by providing in this act that if the directors and stockholders of such a corporation agreed to such taxation, it thereby becomes constitutional?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We do not believe that it thereby becomes constitutional, but we believe they will be estopped from making any further objection, if they elect to stand on their former returns instead of paying the tax provided for in this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is a very remarkable theory, it seems to me, that after you have levied an unconstitutional tax upon a personal service corporation you can then say to that corporation, "If you agree to this invalid tax, it shall be valid."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman does not put it quite right, because there is a consideration for the agreement. The law provides that if they object to the present method of taxation they shall be taxed in a different manner.

We can impose the taxes provided in this bill. There is no doubt about that. But we provide that a personal service corporation may exempt itself from the taxes herein laid for previous years if it is willing to waive any claim for refund for the taxes paid for those years, and stand on its former return. It is not a question of making the present law constitutional, for, of course, we can not do that. It is a question of remedy to the taxpayer. He is entitled to the refund. If he says to the Government, "If you will waive your right to the new taxes, I will waive my right to the refund and stand by my former return," he will be estopped from further claim by his election.

It is very clear to my mind they would be estopped, because the law provides that if they accept the old method they shall not be taxed under the new plan. I am not sure but there is in fact an agreement for a consideration between them and the Government.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, I have a very indistinct and very imperfect recollection of the rules which apply to unconstitutional taxation, and it is my impression—I may be entirely wrong about it—that where you have levied an unconstitutional tax, nothing you can do thereafter in respect to that sort of a tax will ever validate it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is confusing two different principles. He is quite right that there is no such thing as waiving the constitutionality of an act. If it is unconstitutional it is unconstitutional, and that is all there is to it; but that does not prevent the taxpayer from waiving any claim he may have against the Government should he see fit.

Mr. ANDERSON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the new tax proposal is higher than the old tax proposal?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, there is not much difference. In some instances it will be a little higher tax and in some a little lower.

Mr. ANDERSON. I was wondering if this agreement on the part of the stockholders was to be accomplished through what amounts to a threat in the act to impose a heavier tax if they did not agree to this unconstitutional taxation—— [Cries of "Read!"] I will say to the gentlemen who are so anxious to have the Clerk read that as far as I am concerned they will not make any time by yelling "read."

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall mail to all personal service corporations at the last known address a copy of this act within 30 days after the same takes effect.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new section, to be known as section 13:

"SEC. 13. Title X of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 1010. That every corporation shall pay a special excise tax with respect to all dividends declared and paid by it in its own stock or shares on or after March 15, 1920, equivalent to $10 for each $100 of the par or face value or fraction thereof.'"

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has proceeded far enough with the reading of the amendment to indicate to my mind plainly that it is not germane, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. That is no reason why it should not be read, and I contend that it is germane.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have no objection if the gentleman desires——

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; I want to insist on the amendment as being germane to every section of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist upon his point of order at this time?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; I will permit the amendment to be read.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I want to be heard on the point of order when the gentleman makes it.

The Clerk read as follows:

If the dividends so declared are issued without par or face value, the tax shall be computed at the rate of $10 per share, unless the actual market value is in excess of $100 per share, in which case the tax shall be computed at the rate of $10 on each $100 of such actual value or fraction thereof.

(a) On or before 60 days after this section takes effect every corporation liable for any tax imposed by this section for the period from March 15, 1920, to and including June 30, 1920, and (b) on July 1, 1921, and thereafter on July 1 in each year, every corporation liable for any tax imposed by this section for the preceding year ending June 30 shall make a return under oath in duplicate and pay the taxes imposed by such section to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe.

The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month from the time when the tax became due.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I now make the point of order that the amendment is violative of paragraph 3, Rule XXI, upon which the Chair ruled this morning. If the gentleman desires, I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. The point of order of the gentleman is that the amendment is not germane?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Neither to the bill nor to the paragraph to which it is offered.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the Chair, this is my proposition. On the 8th day of March of this year, in order to indicate just what this is, the Supreme Court of the United States rendered a decision which destroyed the validity of our income-tax law so far as it pertains to stock distributions, and the Chair knows what has happened since then and how many hundreds of millions of dollars of stock distributions have been made by the great corporations of the country. The section I have proposed was just a few minutes ago vigorously defended by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] as being constitutional. The proposition, Mr. Chairman, is this: Here is a bill which this House is considering which affects corporations and nothing but corporations. It affects corporations which are known as personal-service corporations, and there is no apparent difference so far as form is concerned between a personal-service corporation and any other kind of a corporation. In this very case in this decision of the Supreme Court rendered on the 8th of March last, the case of Eisner against Macomber—I do not know whether I have the attention of the Chair or whether the Parliamentary Clerk has it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is giving attention to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I am glad to know it. The Supreme Court in that decision said:

> But looking through the form, we can not disregard the essential truth disclosed; ignore the substantial difference between corporation and stockholder; treat the entire organization as unreal; look upon stockholders as partners, when they are not such; treat them as having in equity a right to a partition of the corporate assets when they have none; and indulge the fiction that they have received and realized a share of the profits of the company which in truth they have neither received nor realized. We must treat the corporation as a substantial entity separate from the stockholder, not only because such is the practical fact but because it is only by recognizing such separateness that any dividend—even one paid in money or property—can be regarded as income of the stockholder.

Predicated upon this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is the necessity for this very bill that we are considering now. And the Supreme Court of the United States in this particular opinion held that in form there is no difference between a corporation for profit and a corporation for any other purpose. There is none. The bill we are considering to-day amends that section and several sections of the revenue law which affect corporations, and does not amend any other sections. The amendment that I propose is an amendment which affects corporations and which affects no other sections of the revenue law. If it is not germane, I do not know how any proposition could possibly be germane, and if it is germane it will save this Government at once $75,000,000. It takes the strongest sort of almost ignoring the definition of the word "germane," as applied by the rules of this House and by the various decisions of this House, to enable the Chairman to hold that this amendment is not germane to this bill and to every section of this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Chair whether he was present during a discussion of the point of order raised this morning? If so, I can save a little time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I call the Chair's attention to paragraph 3, Rule XXI, which reads:

> No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter in the bill; nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

The question discussed and decided by the Chair this morning was a much narrower question than this. Clearly this bill relates to personal service corporations and personal service corporations only. It does not relate in any respect to stock dividends, but an entirely different method of distribution. The gentleman's amendment, therefore, is not germane to the bill at all. But even if it were or could by any refinement be held to be germane to the question of personal service corporations, clearly it is not germane to the paragraph to which it is offered. The paragraph to which it is offered runs as follows:

> The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall mail to all personal-service corporations at the last known address a copy of this act within 30 days after the same takes effect.

The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois imposes a retroactive, so-called excise tax on stock dividends of all corporations. This morning the Chair ruled, and ruled correctly according to the precedents, not only that the amendment must be germane to the subject matter of the bill but must be germane to the preceding paragraph of the bill. That is in line with the universal precedent with regard to the holdings under this paragraph of Rule XXI. The object of this paragraph concededly was to make the amendment of revenue bills very difficult. The reason for it was, at the time it was adopted, that the party then in power, now the minority, desired to be able to bring in revenue bills without a rule limiting amendment. And so purposely this rule with regard to revenue bills was established for the very purpose of making it impossible to amend revenue bills by anything except absolutely germane amendments to the particular paragraph to which offered.

It seems to me that it must be clear to the Chair that an amendment proposing a retroactive tax upon the issue of stock dividends by all corporations is not germane to the subject matter of this bill, which relates merely to personal service corporations, and clearly, by the widest stretch of imagination, can not be germane to the paragraph to which it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state to the Chair just what corporations are included in personal service corporations?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Only those corporations without, practically, any invested capital whatever and whose profits are derived from the personal efforts of its members, such as a corporation of lawyers, a corporation of physicians, and possibly a corporation of public accountants.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.
